Acheson volunteered his statement to State Department newsmen. He read it slowly—a cold, bitter condemnation of one of the final acts in a tragic series which he views as having smashed the freedom of an entire people.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, we are proud of our heritage. A heritage is something we inherit. It descends upon us like an inheritance. Freedom of speech and religion and the right to criticize even our highest officials are part of our priceless heritage. Our Bill of Rights is our inheritance. It was given to us by inheritance, we must preserve it for our descendants as a priceless gift. We often take this gift too much for granted. It is part of our everyday existence. It is unto us like the free air we breathe. We realize its real value when someone or a group bent upon mischief takes it from us. Then we make outcry—as we should.

Upon these rights and freedoms depend our dignity as men. Life would hardly be worth while without them. We would be like serfs without them. We would become slaves of the state or dictator. Even the wealth of a Croesus could not compensate us for bending the knee to the dictator, be he cruel or benevolent.

Are these our precious rights of freedom imperiled if freedom is attacked anywhere? Yes. Anything or anyone anywhere who strikes at freedom of conscience or expression is like a virus that cannot be confined. The plague must be destroyed wherever it may be, otherwise it will overtake us. "Never send to know for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for thee." Therefore, the impact of Hungarian cruelties against Cardinal Mindszenty is felt even in the United States, although the scene of the travesty of justice is far away. Today it is a Catholic prelate, tomorrow a Protestant minister, and the next day a rabbi. All religions are under the pale and the conscience of mankind is threatened. The danger signals are up.

The three great religions cannot fail to take heed. They must defend and attack. We cannot take these blows against faith passively, nor can there be appeasement. I recall the doggerel: "Appease a rascal as you will, he was and is a rascal still." The rascality of the Communist regime that thus imperils these cardinals is quite apparent. The means at hand must be invoked, and I refer to the United Nations. Our Government must not only protest but must induce the United Nations to invoke sanctions. The pending resolution does that, and I am, therefore, whole heartedly in favor of this resolution.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Speaker, many people have already protested the treatment of Cardinal Mindszenty by the Hungarian Government, but I want to add my voice to voices of those who are shocked by this flagrant violation of justice and human rights. Americans of every creed are indignant, and many are concerned over the effect of such actions on the world's hope for peace.

From early youth Americans are imbued with the doctrines of justice, fair trials, free speech, and the right to criticize those holding political office. We learn the importance of these civil liberties in assuring that our Government will always deal fairly with its citizens and will always govern with the consent and for the good of the governed. We accept that as the normal and proper procedure. It comes as a shock, then, when we learn that there are countries which regard the rights of their citizens as of no importance whatsoever, and where it is a crime to criticize or oppose in any manner the policies of the rulers.

The effect of such a revelation on American public opinion is tremendous. It makes it difficult for us to think of ever having friendly relations with a government of this type, and makes the prospect of continued peace seem dim indeed. It tends to focus our minds on the cold war and on the threat of communism rather than on the necessity to continually strive for peace and understanding in the world, no matter how discouraging the outlook.

The effect of the Mindszenty affair on public opinion in the United States should not be allowed to go unnoticed by the governing officials in Hungary. I therefore urge the Secretary of State to inform the Hungarian Government in the strongest possible language of the effect their unjust actions have had on American public opinion, and, since they have had no experience with it, of the importance of public opinion in a democracy. If they realize that a series of actions like these may inevitably bring on a war in which small nations like Hungary will be crushed between the colliding great powers, perhaps they will modify their policies and cease their persecutions.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the pending resolution.

The trial of Cardinal Mindszenty was obviously an attempt by the Communist-dominated Hungarian Government to suppress freedom of religion. The trials of ministers of religion in Hungary and in Bulgaria, in Slovakia, and in Russia, are a grim warning that American principles of religious freedom have no meaning in the Soviet sphere of influence.

The mockery of the so-called trial is apparent when it is noted that no foreign correspondents, nor official representatives of any of the non-Soviet-dominated countries, were permitted to be present.

It seems to me that the Government of Hungary was either incredibly stupid or absolutely callous to the opinion of the world in permitting this farcical trial to take place.

I join with my colleagues in denouncing the trials of ministers of religion on trumped-up charges.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the people of our own land and throughout the world have been shocked and grieved at the travesty, called a trial, of Cardinal Mindszenty at Budapest. Catholics, Protestants, and Jews have joined in a world-wide protest of this dastardly and brazen challenge to religion and human freedom. Cardinal Mindszenty is the victim today—who can say where or when this vicious Communist-inspired attack will strike tomorrow?

This infamous trial of a great churchman should bring to the hearts and minds of decent people everywhere the ruthlessness of atheistic communism and the necessity of destroying it wherever and whenever it rears its ugly head.

What happened at Budapest can happen here if we fail to heed the warnings of those countries which have fallen under the heel of Stalin and his criminal gang.

Let there be no mistake about the so-called trial of the cardinal. We must recognize it as a heinous threat to all religions and to free men everywhere. We Americans who have been so abundantly blessed should lead in a world crusade to destroy communism. It should be the responsibility of each and every one of us to preach the gospel of human freedom and the dignity of man—that come what will, God helping us, we will protect this freedom, regardless of the cost.

It has often been said that out of evil sometimes comes good. If this be true, perhaps the cruel, inhuman, physical, and mental tortures suffered by Cardinal Mindszenty may bring to the world a realization of the necessity of crushing this tyranny called communism before it strikes again.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. Speaker, I strongly approve this resolution. I protest the arrest, trial, and imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty. This travesty on justice has dramatized the Communist system for all the world. I stand with a feeling of humility before the martyrdom of this great religious leader.

Having filed an earlier protest with the Secretary of State in this matter, I am proud that, as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I voted to bring this resolution before Congress. It expresses our indignation and asks that the issues raised by the arrest and imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty, of Hungary, and Archbishop Stepinac, of Yugoslavia, be raised by the United States either in the United Nations or by other appropriate means. A unanimous vote of the House of Representatives will show that with one voice our Nation condemns this travesty of justice.

The forces of decency cannot be quiet, even though nothing that the Communists do surprises us. This is not the first such trial under a system of slavery. It is a familiar story. In Russia and all the satellite nations, the pattern is the same: torture, public exhibition, faked confessions, perfunctory defense, a judge who does the bidding of the Kremlin. Persecution wears the mantle of justice.

The fight is not the fight of Catholics alone. It is the fight of all decent people of whatever race or creed who believe in God, freedom, peace, the dignity and value of the human being. To hold such ethical concepts under communism is treason.

Out of Hungary and before the world, Cardinal Mindszenty is innocent. This prelate emerges as a man who was willing to sacrifice his life so that right should prevail over wrong, to be a free man rather than a slave, to live with God instead of existing in darkness, to be a martyr rather than allow his people and religion to crumble.

History will show that Cardinal Mindszenty was the victor, Russia the loser. His defiance of tyranny was a clarion call. It awakened humanity to the creeping danger of the Red tide.

Religion is persecuted behind the iron curtain. Six hundred Catholic and Protestant clergymen are now in Hungarian prisons. In Rumania, the Government has decreed to put regulations on all religious groups. Bulgaria has indicted 15 Protestant ministers for espionage. Having taken over economic and political control, the elimination of religion is the next step in consolidating eastern Europe.

We in this Nation who love truth and justice think of Cardinal Mindszenty deeply. It warns us that if decency and justice are to prevail we must always be vigilant against tyranny. This protest of indignation by our country should reaffirm our resolve to never allow communism to get a hold in America. Our stand must be uncompromising. Shall it be justice, decency, and democracy, or slavery, tyranny, and communism? We should speak out for what we believe in and speak out against what we despise.

The Cardinal Mindszenty case is an alarm. The Communist Party is a world-wide organization. Twelve countries are under its complete control. Trained units, blindly following the Kremlin's bidding, are in every other country of the world. Communism is playing for keeps. Let us heed before it is too late.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, under leave previously granted to the Honorable SOL BLOOM, of New York, for Members of the House to extend their remarks on the adoption of House Concurrent Resolution 19, I desire to include the following comments and pertinent editorials which express the indignation of the people of my district, who have written me thousands of letters protesting the mockery of the trial and the shocking sentence of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty.

These letters are not only from people of the Catholic faith, they are the letters of all righteous, God-fearing, and fair-minded people who have been schooled in democratic processes of fair play and who respect the rights of man. They are letters filled with pleas and protests against this abhorrent and shocking treatment. And they call for united action against these inquisitors of Cardinal Mindszenty and legitimate action in contrast to the base and godless action of these men of the Communist-dominated Hungarian Government. I am happy to have been privileged to introduce House Concurrent Resolution 27 on February 8, 1949. But I am happier that our House of Representatives, by unanimous vote, showed its united stand against the persecution of and the violation of the rights of man, in adopting House Concurrent Resolution 19, which was introduced by the Honorable SOL BLOOM.

It is indeed of moment that we should not forget that those who would violate the men of God would not hesitate to trample upon the rights of all humans.

And I am certain that an outraged world will raise its voice so high that these men who have no respect for the fundamental rights of man will take heed.

For no matter what subterfuge may have been employed by the men of the Hungarian Government, they could not hide the fact that this action was not against Cardinal Mindszenty, the man, but against Cardinal Mindszenty, a courageous leader in a fight against a system which violates inalienable rights, and against Cardinal Mindszenty, a symbol of democratic beliefs as opposed to Communistic dogma. It is the treacherous action of the false prophets against the prophets of truth, democracy, and God.

The editorials which follow—the first from the Newark Evening News, entitled "Sentence at Budapest," and the other from the Newark Star-Ledger, entitled "They Dared Not," both of February 9, 1949, very ably present the Mindszenty story:

[From the Newark Evening News of February 9, 1949]

SENTENCE AT BUDAPEST

When Archbishop Stepinac, Catholic Church head of Yugoslavia, was sentenced to 16 years' imprisonment at forced labor in 1946, the unofficial Vatican reaction was that Yugoslav authorities had decided to soft pedal the ending of the trial through avoidance of the punishment of death. The principal charge against Archbishop Stepinac was that he had aided the Axis during the war.

The sentence imposed at Budapest on Cardinal Mindszenty is a life sentence. As in the case of Archbishop Stepinac, whatever he possesses is confiscated and his civil rights are forfeited. The general charge against him was treason.

Axis collaboration and treason, these are the most serious charges that it is possible to bring against a citizen, going to the welfare and the survival of the state. Yet in neither case, although conviction was secured according to the predetermined Communist technique, was the death sentence imposed. The motivation of the trial, in both cases, was political; the charges were political, and the sentences bear a strong political impress.

In neither case did the Communist court consider it expedient to order execution. That much did the protest of church authorities abroad and of general western opinion accomplish. Cardinal Mindszenty has appealed the veridct. This means, under Communist court procedure, that the appeals court can impose a more severe sentence, if it wishes, or reduce the sentences of the Hungarian primate and the other defendants who appealed. In the cardinal's case, the prosecutor had demanded death. In actual effect, under the Soviet system, the difference between a life sentence and a sentence of death is negligible.

Communist dogma in all countries derives its form and content from the Kremlin. The Kremlin will not tolerate religion as a practical moral force operating in the lives of men on an equal plane, as it were, with the ideological drive of the Communist state. To discredit religion as a working moral force, communism uses political means, being unwilling or unable to meet the religious impulse in the free competition of ideas or in the field of conscience.

That is the broad background of the clouded legal proceedings conducted at Zagreb, Yugoslavia, in 1946 and now duplicated, on a still more elevated hierarchical plane, at Budapest. The persons of the two prelates can be imprisoned, their voices can be stilled, but no tactic, however clever, however cruel, can seclude or silence the intimations of the spirit that arise in the hearts of men.

[From the Newark Star-Ledger of February 9, 1949]

THE EDITOR'S OPINION

THEY DARED NOT

The Communist rulers of Hungary have not dared to order the execution of Cardinal Mindszenty. They feared to startle world opinion into a clear and unbearable realization of the true nature of the Communist menace.

The Communists' retreat from their goal in the Mindszenty case is spectacularly clumsy. Failure to order the death sentence is explained on the ground that the cardinal, not being a worldly man, could not have understood the full implications of treasonable conduct. Yet the whole purpose of the Communist campaign against religious organizations and leaders is to discredit them and prove them to be worldly conspiracies.

HAD TO SHIFT TACTICS

The Communists have not only modified their plans for the disposal of Cardinal Mindszenty, but have changed their whole position in their assault on the Catholic Church. Afraid that the execution of the cardinal would alert the world as no other act could, the Communists have had to conform their whole campaign against the church to the new premise that the cardinal is not a worldly man. Thus, the cardinal is now represented as a rather foolish dupe of the United States and its diplomatic agency in Hungary, which becomes the chief villain of the piece.

Henceforth, because the Communists hesitated to defy world opinion, they will no longer be able to brand the Catholic Church as an archconspirator. Instead, the Communists will have to content themselves with picturing the church as the dupe of American imperialism.

MAY TRY IT AGAIN

The Communists, in retreating in the Mindszenty case, have not suffered a defeat. It is only a set-back. They may try again. Hitler found that world opinion could be worn down by administering a series of shocks, no single one of them startling enough to make the world fighting mad. The Communists almost went too far for their own safety in the Mindszenty case, and have had to change their tactics for the present.

The propaganda goal of the Communists now may be to render world opinion less sensitive through a long series of dulling treatments. If the people of the free world can remain alive to the moral issue, no matter how deviously clever the Communist psychological campaign, the free peoples will win the battle for the world. If it ever comes to pass that the world is left unexcited by the framing and execution of a great religious leader, then our cause will have died.

Mr. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, under general leave granted for extension of remarks on the case of Cardinal Mindszenty, I wish to express the horror and indignation of my constituents, of every race and creed, at the threat to religious freedom which his imprisonment and so-called trial represents. The whole world knows, regardless of what the purported charges were, that the cardinal was tried because he was the head of the Catholic Church in Hungary and because he refused to bow down to communism. What has happened to him could happen to any other religious leader.

To us, in this country which was founded because men were willing to risk their lives in order to have the right to worship God as they wished, any threat to religious freedom is especially repugnant. We must show by word and deed to those nations which have been enslaved by communism the great importance which we attach to the persecution of Cardinal Mindszenty and our righteous indignation against this threat to religious freedom. The House has recorded its righteous wrath and the resolution which it has adopted has my wholehearted approval and support.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I am thoroughly in accord with House Concurrent Resolution 19, now before us, condemning the arrest and imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty, of Hungary, and Archbishop Stepinac, of Yugoslavia. In voting for the resolution, I do so with a deep feeling of satisfaction, as to me it is an evidence on the part of our own great Government that our voice will be heard wherever and whenever freedom of religion is denied by tyrants. I congratulate the distinguished chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee [Mr. BLOOM] and all the members of his committee who have unanimously reported out this resolution.

I feel that the committee amendment stating that it is "the sense of the Congress that these issues shall be raised by the United States, either in the United Nations or by such other means as may be most appropriate" makes crystal clear the firm determination of our Government in this matter.

It is, of course, most regrettable that men of the high character and extraordinary attainments of these two prelates of the Roman Catholic Church should be made to suffer unspeakable tortures because of their religious beliefs. Yet in this whole picture the scene is not entirely black. Far better it is that two outstanding and heroic priests such as Cardinal Mindszenty and Archbishop Stepinac be the martyrs so that the world will focus its attention, not only upon their martyrdom, but rather upon the evil cause of their persecution.

Thousands upon thousands of Roman Catholics behind the iron curtain are being persecuted because of their religious beliefs, but it has taken the farcical trials and unjust imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty and Archbishop Stepinac to at long last arouse not only the governments of the western world, but the average citizen, responsible for these governments, to the dangers of communism.

Although those who are now suffering most at the hands of the various communistic governments today are Roman Catholics, their persecution is only a part of the pattern of the general aggressive atheism that would destroy all religion. Tomorrow it will be the Protestants and the next day the Jews will be the victims. Communism shows no favorites in its persecution of those who believe in God and the natural rights of man. If the sufferings of Cardinal Mindszenty and Archbishop Stepinac will bring the world to a realization of the evil force of communism that is sweeping both to the east and west, and galvanize the democratic nations into united opposition against it, I firmly believe that both Cardinal Mindszenty and Archbishop Stepinac would willingly and uncomplainingly endure their torture.

Mr. Speaker, I have received many communications from my district relative to the unjustified arrest and imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty and Archbishop Stepinac. I am glad to so state, for I believe that in the past Americans have been just as apathetic toward communism as have the people of the rest of the world. "It can't happen here," so many people have said.

We know that it can happen here unless the people back home are alive to the situation as well as those of us who are legislating here today. We know that Communists have attained places in our own Government. We know also that when efforts are made to oust them, they scream for the protection of those laws that were enacted to safeguard the rights of the people who live under them, and not to give refuge to spies, traitors, and conniving, scheming agents of hostile governments. These latter, if they could subvert our Government, would deny the protection of law to those who disagree with them. It is because our democratic form of government is meticulous in its protection under law of all people within our country that these subversive agents and groups, aided by innocent, but misguided individuals, have wormed their way into labor and government.

I have confidence in the sound judgment and good sense of our American people. They are slow to be aroused. They are generous and kindhearted and it is because of these national traits that frequently they have been taken advantage of by those engaged in subversive activities. Once aroused, they follow a straight line, unswerving in their determination. They are now aroused. They will continue to be so until they have removed every trace of the Red peril that threatens our democratic institutions and the great American Government, under which we live and to which the eyes of a despairing world are hopefully turned.

I gladly vote for the resolution.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I trust there will not be a single vote against the pending resolution. The alleged trial of Cardinal Mindszenty is a complete farce and a travesty upon justice as it is understood by all real believers in democracy. The Hungarian Government is guilty of an infamy that can never be erased. People throughout the entire world who believe in justice and fair play will join in condemning the arbitrary actions of the cruel dictators who are now forcing their will upon the Hungarian people.

This latest action in the long list of arbitrary and ruthless steps taken by the Communist dictators of Moscow and its satellite countries is abundant proof that there can be no compromise with those who espouse the doctrines of totalitarianism. I insert with my remarks an editorial from the Milwaukee Journal of February 7, which I think clearly expresses the views of the overwhelming majority of the people in my district.

"TRIAL" OF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Cardinal Mindszenty, whatever his fate may be, and whatever activities he may have carried on, is the victim of two forces, both evil. He is a casualty of one of the most ruthless movements in history.

The first force was the seizure of a nation against the will of its people—the coming in of a foreign dictatorship to take over. The second and present force is the desire of that regime, as a part of the plans of Moscow, to strike back at the western powers and the United States.

There was nothing legal in the Soviet-sponsored coup that seized power in Hungary. There is nothing legal in the terror by which the Soviet puppets maintained power. There was treachery, in every sense of the word, in the procedure by which the Soviet puppets took power.

Once again, no matter what the accused cardinal may have dreamed, thought, advised, or done, it is an insulting mockery of justice, as conceived by civilized man, to have the present Soviet-supported regime in Hungary going through the motions of "trying" Cardinal Mindszenty—or of "trying" anyone else.

And for a regime that seized power illegally and by arch treachery to accuse anyone else of being a traitor is nothing more than a manifestation of the duplicity and depravity long characteristic of Communist thought.

"A people's court"—what a mockery! It is not the people of Hungary who are trying Cardinal Mindszenty but the dictators in Moscow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the resolution just agreed to at the point in the RECORD before the adoption of the resolution on Cardinal Mindszenty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in extending my remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just agreed to I may include two editorials from the Brooklyn Eagle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I was unavoidably detained when the roll call on House Resolution 78 was taken. I am a member of the subcommittee that reported this bill out of the committee and voted for it. Had I been here at that time I would have voted "yea" in favor of this resolution.

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the resolution pertaining to Cardinal Mindszenty and to include a speech of the archbishop of Washington.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the resolution pertaining to Cardinal Mindszenty and to include a telegram.

Mr. BARRETT of Pennsylvania (at the request of Mr. FLOOD) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permision to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the resolution in reference to Cardinal Mindszenty and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. FEIGHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. DOLLINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the New York Times.

Mr. HAVENNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks made early today and include two editorials.

Mr. HART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a summary of testimony delivered before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report by Dr. Clark.

Mr. BLOOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by the Honorable James Farley.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the resolution just adopted, and include the text of a resolution that I introduced in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in connection with H. R. 1211 and include certain quotations.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include excerpts appearing in the Christian Science Monitor.

Mr. SANBORN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LOVRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a case study of international espionage in the Far East prepared for release by the National Military Establishment, irrespective of the cost. May I say, Mr. Speaker, in explanation, that I endeavored to get an estimate of the cost, but time did not permit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

EXPLANATION

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that official business prevented me from reaching the floor of the House today in time to vote on House Resolution 78, providing a $200,000 appropriation for the Committee on Un-American Activities.

I am strongly in favor of this resolution, and had I been present I would have voted "aye."

TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me state that in general I favor the principle of the reciprocal-trade agreements. It is my view that both from the standpoint of wholly desirable world improvement, the recovery of world prosperity, world peace, and also our own enlightened self-interest, we should promote by every reasonable means not detrimental or injurious or damaging to our own prosperity and the welfare of our industries and people, trade and commerce between the nations.

As a logical corollary to this principle, I believe that such agreements ought to be entered into only after careful negotiation and impartial, nonpartisan, scientific inquiry, and investigation to determine whether such agreements are injurious or destructive of American industry. In brief, enabling legislation should contain appropriate and adequate safeguards to insure limitations and definite fixed conditions upon the powers of the administrative agencies concerned.

In the first place, it is clear to me that no lasting prosperity in America can be predicted upon the extension of loans and grants to foreign nations in order to enable them to purchase American goods and services. It is obvious that this Nation cannot afford indefinitely, if indeed we can afford it to such a substantial degree, to make loans and grants to other nations over and above our present commitments connected with the fulfillment of the Marshall plan and the national security. I think it cannot be successfully asserted that there is anything more than a fair assurance that outstanding loans can be repaid. Of course there is not enough money in the Treasury, or in fact available from the resources of the people, to warrant continued grants beyond those contemplated by these programs. There may be certain serious questions raised as to how long we can extend even these particular programs without very serious consequences to the economic well-being of our own citizens and financial maladjustments of our own budgets and economic capacity. I mention these points because, like many here and throughout the Nation, I am disturbed about our national finances.

Secondly, the reduction of trade barriers to permit the influx of cheaply produced foreign goods will bring many American industries to stagnation and ruin and will cause widespread unemployment and the loss of our high American standards of wages, living and free opportunity which are understandably the envy of the whole world. Upon these high standards the future prosperity, welfare, and happiness of the American people will surely depend.

Thirdly, in my view, there should be definite restrictions placed upon the power of any agency of this Government to permit foreign producers to pour a stream of cheap goods and commodities into this country and thereby cause the impairment or collapse of our industries and force idleness for millions of worthy and faithful American workers.

Because of the limited time allotted me, I cannot develop extended consideration of the general principles which may be applicable to this particular question. I desire, however, to allude to some pertinent facts of our present industrial situation in my own section of the country as well as in the Nation generally which have definite bearing upon the nature of present and future reciprocal trade agreements. As I scrutinize the list of those appearing before the committee in opposition to unlimited trade-agreement powers, it impressed me as being very much like the roster of all the industries in my district and State, indeed it comprises a cross section of our industry. Great textile industries, cotton and woolen manufacturers, paper and pulp producers, leather, boots and shoes, seafood products, toy manufacturers, wire-cloth producers, publishing concerns, and representatives of a great many other industries appeared to record their opposition to this unlimited bill in whole or in part. The record of the hearing is replete with examples and illustrations of the baneful effects that have already been worked, or that will be worked, by the operation of this law.

Already there are alarming signs of a present recessionary trend in our industrial and economic life. The unemployment rolls have materially increased within the past few weeks. Industry and business has undergone and is undergoing curtailment and retrenchment. A substantial number of concerns are working on part time while others have shut down or liquidated. This situation is a great threat to America, coming as it does at a time when we are beset by foreign troubles and problems and can ill afford to have our economy weakened in any respect. There are undoubted psychological factors of fear, apprehension, and uncertainty concerning the future responsible for the present unwillingness of businessmen, large and small, of every class, to go forward at this time without tangible assurances that they are not going to be overwhelmed and destroyed by oppressive taxation and regimentation. This is a very pronounced and weighty factor in what we hope is but a temporary stalemate of business activity. But, as has been testified before the committee and demonstrated in this debate, the importation of cheap foreign goods which are produced at a fraction of the American competitive cost has in a large number of instances undermined the American market and brought about business collapse and unemployment.

You have all heard the story of the Waltham Watch Co., which is more or less typical of the American watchmaking industry in the effects it has suffered from foreign competition. No history of the financial vicissitudes of this concern can cloak the fact that it patriotically stopped producing watches to take part in the war effort by making time-electronic devices and other delicate mechanisms essential to our large-scale military operations. During this period foreign watchmakers moved in and took over the American market. When victory was gained the Waltham Co. had to start all over again against resourceful and powerful competition which had been set up against it during the wartime. And let me state categorically in this connection that the public interests of that beleaguered concern and its unemployed workers have been admirably represented and advanced in this body and elsewhere by my very able colleague from Massachusetts within whose district this company is located, the able, distinguished, and zealous gentleman, my friend, Congressman DONOHUE. All other Members of the Massachusetts delegation, including our esteemed, able, and beloved majority and minority leaders, have likewise rendered conspicuous service to try to reopen this plant. The voice of the laboring people who are the real sufferers in a situation of this kind because they have lost their jobs and livelihood due to the closing of this great factory, has been powerfully and capably raised by their leaders, particularly the head of their own union, Mr. Walter Cenerazzo, a forceful, able young man who has worked unselfishly and tirelessly to adjust the affairs of this company and make it possible for thousands of fine, faithful, skilled workers to go back to their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the conditions to which I have referred are steadily growing more serious not only in New England but throughout the Nation. I do not believe that the American Congress can or will remain indifferent to the plight of millions of our workers who are threatened with unemployment and its attendant hardships. We must tackle and solve these great problems or they will surely result in a descending spiral which will plunge the Nation into another depression.

It seems entirely reasonable to me that the Congress should be interested in the peril-point reports which contain the findings of the Tariff Commission. There is nothing complicated or abstruse about this proposal, nothing inconsistent with the trade-agreements policy. It merely requires the Tariff Commission after careful study, to point out the danger signs of our trade-agreements policy in operation so that appropriate action can be taken to stave off and prevent cut-throat competition from abroad injurious to American industry and labor and destructive of our economic system.

It is likewise appropriate that we should adopt the escape-clause provision which will permit readjustment from time to time of our position in foreign trade whenever it becomes untenable because of the type of competition I have referred to above which is working a detriment and threat to industrial employment and stability.

These are minimum safeguards, in my opinion, which we should provide in this legislation to protect American industry and American workers and American producers against the impact of foreign goods produced under substandard wages and conditions. The need of the hour is a strong, healthy, thriving American economy, a nation adapted and adaptable not only to its peacetime needs, not only to its social welfare which is so vital and important, but also to the emergencies of another and more fearful kind which could well befall us, like a bolt from the blue, in this disordered and chaotic world of ruthless communism, oppression, and unrest.

I hope this bill is amended to provide these safeguards and thus furnish adequate and urgently required protection for our business structure, our industrial prosperity, and the welfare of our faithful workers and producers who, after all, are the very richest resource of the Nation.

The following organizations, all of which represent industrial and employee interests in my district and State, appeared before the committee in support of maintaining the peril-point report of the Tariff Commission:

National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

America's Wage Earners' Protective Conference.

New England Industries.

Massachusetts Fisheries Association, Inc.

Sea Food Producers of New Bedford.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, all the ways of our direst needs lead to Thee and to Thy everlasting mercy. For this quiet moment before the pressing concerns of a new day move in upon us, wilt Thou lift us from the confusion and baffiement of these desperate times into the unhurried, healing calm of Thy presence. Solemnize us with the responsibility of ability, as we face decisions affecting the lives and fortunes of untold millions who look eagerly to these halls of council for the wise word and the right action. Grant us so to know Thee that we may truly love Thee, and so to love Thee that we may freely serve Thee, to the honor and glory of Thy great Name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, February 8, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF A BILL

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on February 9, 1949, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 547) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 128) to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be used in computing cotton acreage allotments for any subsequent year; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. COOLEY, Mr. PACE, Mr. POAGE, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1211. An act to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 1243. An act to amend the Hatch Act.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 19) to express the sense of the Congress with respect to the arrest and imprisonment of Archbishop Stepinac of Yugoslavia and Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TRIAL AND SENTENCE OF JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 2 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I inquire, did not the Senate meet after an adjournment, and are we not in the morning hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no objection, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BRIDGES. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the Senator's request, but I should like to point out——

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator that the matter about which I desire to make a short statement is one of great public interest at the present time.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not intend to object, but I point out that objection was raised when I made a request a few days ago, and I am not going to see the rule generally violated and then have its enforcement applied to this side of the aisle, particularly to me personally. But I shall not object in the present instance.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire. I did not object to his request.

Mr. BRIDGES. I know the Senator did not.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator looked at me as though I might have made the objection.

Mr. BRIDGES. Oh, no.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the trial and sentencing of Cardinal Mindszenty makes one of the darkest spots on the pages of history. It is a throwback to barbarism; to human slavery of both the mind and body.

Freedom of thought was put on trial, and one of the world's leading church figures was humiliated because of the exercise of this God-given right.

Freedom of religion was put on trial, and the great prelate was condemned because he would not renounce his God.

Freedom of conscience was put on trial, and this towering pillar of the church was humbled because he would not barter away his sense of right and wrong.

Cardinal Mindszenty made the decision to be a free man rather than a tool; to be a man of God rather than a cog in an evil machine; to be a proud patriot rather than a slinking traitor; to be a martyr rather than let the dark night, with its human bondage, fall upon his people unchallenged.

Before the jury of the civilized world, he stands forth as innocent. In the eyes of the world this courtroom in Hungary will be known, not as a temple of justice, but the temple of shame.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Anderson | Humphrey | O'Conor |
| Baldwin | Hunt | O'Mahoney |

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is absent on public business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

READING OF GEORGE WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under a permanent order of the Senate it becomes the duty of the Presiding Officer to designate some Senator to read the Farewell Address of George Washington on the 22d day of this month. The appointment alternates between the two parties. This year the appointment falls to the Republican side of the Chamber, and the Chair takes pleasure in designating the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH] to read the Farewell Address on the 22d.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred, as indicated:

AMENDMENT OF UNITED NATIONS PARTICIPATION ACT OF 1945

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 to provide for the appointment of representatives of the United States in the organs and agencies of the United Nations, and to make other provision with respect to the participation of the United States in such organizations (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CERTAIN INCREASES IN ANNUITIES UNDER FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to make certain increases in the annuities of annuitants under the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System in view of the increased cost of living (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CONSOLIDATION OF PARKER DAM AND DAVIS DAM PROJECTS

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to consolidate the Parker Dam power project and the Davis Dam project (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF OFFICE OF UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINES

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands who suffered losses of personal property by reason of war conditions (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER AND STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS STOCK PILING ACTS

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

A letter from the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the thirteenth annual report of that Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948, together with lists containing the names, salaries, and duties of all employees and officers in the employ or under the supervision of the Board (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

REPORT OF NATIONAL SOCIETY OF DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION

A letter from the secretary, National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of that society, for the year ended April 1, 1948 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

A letter from the Chairman of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on personnel management in the executive branch of the Government (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

TASK FORCE REPORT ON FEDERAL PERSONNEL

A letter from the Chairman of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report prepared by the Personnel Policy Committee of the Commission on Federal Personnel entitled "Programs for Strengthening Federal Personnel Management" (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Joint Memorial 2

"Joint memorial by the Nineteenth Legislature of the State of New Mexico, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact specific legislation that will provide adequate assistance to all needy Indians now residing on reservations

"Whereas there are various tribes of Indians within the State of New Mexico who live on reservations under Federal supervision and control; and

"Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has held that reservation Indians are wards of the Federal Government and, therefore, under the complete jurisdiction and control of Congress; and

"Whereas the relief and welfare needs of these Indians have been generally considered to be the responsibility of the Federal Government in the same manner as the health and education needs of reservation Indians; and

"Whereas many of the needs of some tribes have been so inadequately met by the Federal Government and these tribes have been reduced to such a low level of squalor and misery that rehabilitation and relief will be a very expensive undertaking; and

"Whereas the provisions of the Social Security Act impose upon the State of New Mexico a responsibility to Indians on reservations in spite of the fact that they are wards of the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the State of New Mexico, with a low per capita income, finds it very difficult to provide revenue to meet the current assistance requirements of its needy population; and

"Whereas if New Mexico must provide additional revenue for assistance to reservation Indians, assistance levels for all needy persons in the State could not and would not approach a standard compatible with decency and health: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby memorialized to enact adequate legislation that will provide to needy Indians monetary assistance which cannot be provided through State funds and Federal funds available under the present matching formula of the Social Security Act.

"Approved by me this 31st day of January 1949.

"THOMAS J. MABRY,
"Governor, State of New Mexico."

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Whereas Josef Cardinal Mindszenty is suffering the cruelest persecution of mind and soul for his faith in God and the love of his fellowmen; and

"Whereas his torturers are the enemies of God and all freedom loving men; and

"Whereas his mock trial represents the cruel din of the dirge of infamy calling upon the hapless minions of communism to open warfare against God-fearing people throughout the world; and

"Whereas freedom of religion and its expression are the strongest citadel against the onslaughts of communism; and

"Whereas the eradication of the belief in God is the first order of communistic expansion; and

"Whereas communistic warfare is waged alike against all religion; and

"Whereas this inhuman episode, called a trial, brings out in the open, with all its panoply of barbaric raiment, the dastardly, demoralizing, and destructive figure of atheistic communism; and

"Whereas the mockery of this trial has laid bare the sword of Attila which would destroy all who stand in the way of communism; and

"Whereas because of its implications, the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty is of most serious concern to the people of the world, for it is a method to deprive these people of their inalienable right to freedom of worship; and

"Whereas we shrink in horror as we contemplate what further acts of cruelty and vandalism will be perpetrated against those in the world who dare place God above paganism, liberty above tyranny and life above mass slavery; and

"Whereas in our sorrow at the shame inflicted upon this good man, we condemn those in power in that unhappy land of Hungary, the devilish perpetrators of torture of sham trial; and call upon our Government to take appropriate action in response to the will of the greatest majority of our citizens: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York call upon our Congress and our President to take immediate and appropriate action to request United Nations to inquire into the reported deliberate and wanton disregard of the freedom of religion, and the torture and drugging of the accused and the denial to the accused of the most elemental rights at his trial; and upon such findings being made, to take such action as shall be appropriate; and be it further

"Resolved (if the senate concur), That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each member of the Congress from the State of New York."

A resolution adopted at a conference of 400 civic leaders and representatives in Greenwich Village, New York, N. Y., favoring an immediate price freeze; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A resolution adopted by locals Nos. 1584, 1674, 1717, and 1737, International Longshoremen's Association, of Santiago, Humacao, P. R., favoring the inclusion of Puerto Rico in the provisions of the so-called minimum-wage law; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Petitions of sundry citizens of the United States and Puerto Rico, praying for the enactment of legislation providing Federal aid to education; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A resolution adopted at a conference of 400 civic leaders and representatives in Greenwich Village, New York, N. Y., relating to national health insurance legislation; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A resolution adopted by the board of directors of the National Renderers Association, Washington, D. C., favoring exemption of edible and inedible vegetable and animal fats and oils and oil-bearing materials from provisions of export control extension legislation; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. HUNT (for himself and Mr. O'MAHONEY):

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, favoring the enactment of legislation appropriating sufficient money to complete the building of the Eden Valley irrigation project; to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented by the Vice President on February 8, 1949 (p. 933), CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

MAINTENANCE OF PARITY ON BASIC FARM CROPS

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the North Dakota State Legislature requesting 100-percent price support, and ask for its appropriate reference, and I request that it be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution A

Concurrent resolution petitioning Congress to enact permanent legislation to maintain a floor of not less than 100 percent of parity on all basic farm crops

Whereas it must be self-evident that if we are to avoid lower living standards and if this national debt is to be serviced and paid, it must be through the production of new wealth from the natural resources of the United States; and

We therefore recommend that the Eighty-first Congress enact legislation in 1949 which will first provide a new parity formula which is fair to farmers and to the consumers of the Nation. We recommend that support prices be established pursuant to this fair parity formula under which farmers shall be assured not of fractional parity but of 100 percent of the parity prices. These prices should be consistent with the objective of abundant production. We believe that in the new legislation, account should be taken where they have an opportunity for decent living standards, including adequate health protection, good housing, and better educational opportunities for farm children: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein), That we hereby petition Congress to pass permanent legislation to maintain a floor of not less than 100 percent of parity on all basic farm crops, to protect such floor prices with commodity loans of like amount and to prescribe such import duties, excise taxes, or quotas on competitive imports as may be needed to maintain these price levels and our national income and to equalize the differential between the dollar value of our production and that of foreign countries; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution properly authenticated be forwarded by the Secretary of State to the presiding officer of each House of the National Congress and to each of the United States Senators and Representatives from North Dakota, and the Department of Agriculture and Labor at Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RESOLUTIONS OF WOMEN'S PATRIOTIC CONFERENCE ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at the meeting of the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, held in Washington from January 27 to January 29, a number of resolutions were adopted. I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 1

Faith in American constitutional government

Whereas the American people have developed under the Constitution of the United States into a most powerful nation; and

Whereas the abandonment of the wise counsel adopted by the Founding Fathers as set forth in Washington's Farewell Address has brought about many evils: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense call upon the membership of its constituent societies for a rededication of effort to restore the pure American doctrine of constitutional, representative, limited government—a government to be supported and controlled by the people in a free economy, independent of foreign ideologies and strict observance of all rights, privileges and immunities guaranteed to the separate States and to the people by the Constitution of the United States.

Resolution 2

Oath of loyalty

Whereas taking the Oath of Loyalty to our Country by anyone holding public office is a privilege which would be welcomed by any loyal American: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge the President of the United States and the agencies working under executive order to require the oath of loyalty to be taken by all holding public office.

Resolution 3

National Security Act

Whereas our country has grown stronger during the 15 months since the National Security Act of 1947 became law, and

Whereas substantial progress in the unification of the armed forces has been made in the past year: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense recommend to the Congress of the United States that no radical changes be made in the National Security Act of 1947.

Resolution 4

Army Day

Whereas Army Day is to be officially celebrated on April 6, 1949; and

Whereas this day of the present year is of urgent importance to the security of the Nation and the peace of the world by its effectiveness in making the American people aware of the positive need for a strong armed defense; and

Whereas it is the duty of every American citizen and every American organization to give the fullest possible support to the armed forces, their preservation, their personnel needs, and the maintenance of their equipment: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense endorse the principles and purposes of Army Day and call upon each and every organization represented in the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense to give every possible support to the full success of Army Day, April 6, 1949.

Resolution 5

Universal military training

Whereas the American Legion Auxiliary is and always has been for universal military training; and

Whereas adequate preparedness is the best protection against wars and the needless sacrifice of human lives; and

Whereas a citizenry trained for defense is the keystone of preparedness and can best be assured through the training of the Nation's youth for national security: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we request the participating groups of the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense to instruct their members to urgently request their Senators and Representatives to vote favorably on universal military training; that the participating groups be urged to institute forthwith a program of information and education for the benefit of the American people that they may understand the importance of immediate action on this measure, and the dangers to our homes and to our country which require its enactment without delay; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to all newspapers and civic agencies.

Resolution 6

Voluntary enlistment program

Whereas the United States Army and United States Air Force are striving to maintain their personnel through voluntary-enlistment procedure; and

Whereas voluntary enlistment must gain complete and aggressive public support; and

Whereas the women of the Nation can and must be a vital factor in promoting public support of the United States Army and United States Air Force, their manpower needs and their place in American life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense endorse the voluntary-enlistment program of the United States Army and United States Air Force and call upon all organizations represented in this conference to give full support to that program by disseminating information on Army and Air Force life and by influencing young men and women of the United States to accept the Army and Air Force as honorable institutions in which young men and women can find a worthwhile career.

Resolution 7

Defense of Alaska

Whereas it is admitted by competent and high authority in our armed services that Alaska now is vulnerable to attack by air from bases under Communist control that are only 30 air-miles from the shores of Alaska; and

Whereas this proximity of attack constitutes a great immediate danger: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense petition Congress to give priority to the defense needs and requirements of Alaska in its consideration of any and all appropriations for the stated purpose of checking the advance of communism anywhere in the world.

Resolution 8

Increase in pay for the armed services

Whereas it is essential, if we are to have a sound national defense, that the housing and pay of the armed services be such as to attract the highest possible caliber of men and women for careers as leaders therein; and

Whereas although the cost of living in the United States has increased 71 percent in the last 10 years and the wages and salaries of workers, professional men, and management generally have increased proportionately, the pay schedules of the career personnel of the armed services have lagged far behind with increases varying from 9 percent to 21 percent for commissioned personnel above the grade of second lieutenant and from 36 percent to 75 percent for second lieutenants and noncommissioned officers; and

Whereas the present housing, particularly for married commissioned and noncommissioned officers, is completely inadequate at all stations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense sponsor and advocate an appropriate and adequate increase in the pay for commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the armed services as recommended by the Hook commission; and that further, they sponsor and advocate increased appropriations for the construction of adequate housing for the personnel of the armed services.

Resolution 9

Unions servicing the merchant marine

Whereas evidence establishes the fact that Communists and their fellow travelers control key posts in the unions which service our merchant marine; and

Whereas in case of war this could easily result in the defeat of this country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge upon Congress to enact appropriate legislation to give power to law-enforcement agencies to make such Communist control of unions servicing the merchant marine impossible.

Resolution 10

Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act

Whereas a healthy economy is necessary to a strong national defense; and

Whereas high wages and full employment form the foundation of a healthy economy; and

Whereas the products of other countries made by workers paid much less than workers producing comparable goods in this country can only result in increasing unemployment, a weakening of our economy and our strength for national defense; and

Whereas the reciprocal trade agreements program has removed protection from our high-paid workers against the unfair competition of the low-paid workers of other countries, thereby threatening jobs of workers in industries important to our national defense; and

Whereas as a result the reduction of tariffs incident to the adoption of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, grave injury already has been inflicted upon various industries in this country important to our national defense program; and

Whereas imports into our country should be controlled by the imposition of proper tariffs by the exercise of our own sovereign right to serve as an equalizing balance between the low wages of other countries and the high wages of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge upon Congress the repeal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act as constituting an ever-present menace to our national defense and our economy and an unwarranted encroachment by the executive branch of the Government upon the legislative powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution of the United States.

Resolution 11

Subversive teaching of youth

Whereas the future of our country rests with those now constituting the youth of our land; and

Whereas many persons with ideals contrary to the Constitution and the principles on which it is based, have managed to obtain places as instructors in many of our educational systems; and

Whereas through the work of these persons and others interested in a government contrary to that of the United States of America, the basic principles of this Government are not clearly understood by many of our young citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense disapprove un-American and subversive teachings and that all necessary steps be taken to prevent subversive teachings of our youth.

Resolution 12

Teaching American history and civics

Whereas the youth of the United States of America may be inducted into military service at 18 years of age under the present emergency draft bill; and

Whereas under the educational system of today youth does not thoroughly understand the functions of our Government and the rights of American heritage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense recommend that a 4-year course in civics and American history be required in all secondary schools throughout the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the National Director of Education, the director of education in every State, the president of the Parent-Teachers Association and the national presidents of all teachers' associations.

Resolution 13

Text and reference books

Whereas the loose interpretation and even deliberate misrepresentation of true historical facts concerning the integrity of great Americans and of the principles of the Government of the United States is subtly and dangerously implanting un-American ideas in the minds of our children through the use of textbooks, biographies, reference books, and by word of mouth: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge the governors of the various States to appoint commissions to investigate textbooks and reference books in use in their respective States.

Resolution 14

Opposition to Federal aid to education

Whereas there has been a bill for Federal aid to education for more than a dozen years; and

Whereas it has always been rejected because it would result eventually in Federal control since the Supreme Court has ruled that whatever the Government subsidizes it may control; and

Whereas it is not needed because the States have large surpluses and few debts, while the Federal Government has debts above $252,000,000,000; and

Whereas these bills purport to equalize education, they give to the rich States equally with the poor States; and

Whereas giving to the rich States might secure the votes necessary to pass these measures, it would bring them all under the same political control: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense oppose all Federal aid to education bills that are now before Congress.

Defense of constitutional rights

Whereas the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, historically and by convention mandate and policy, has stated its beliefs in the inherent constitutional and equal rights of all Americans; and

Whereas, the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense has decried mob violence, lynching, and religious hatreds, and has unequivocally favored tolerance, human rights, and an end to racial strife; and

Whereas the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense proudly states that great progress has been made, and is being made in these vital and important fields of human relationships: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense reaffirm its policy in regard to tolerance and human rights, and call upon its constituent organizations to support and seriously work toward the accomplishment of the ideals these enumerate.

Resolution 16

Treaty ratification

Whereas the founding fathers wisely provided that all agreements of a treaty nature with foreign nations must obtain the approval of a two-thirds vote of the Senate of the United States; and

Whereas this two-thirds provision was placed in the Constitution by the founding fathers as one of the many checks therein to protect the rights of minorities against the oppression of one-vote majorities; and

Whereas our form of government is the only one in the world today that provides protection and guaranties for minorities; and

Whereas one of the most insidious forms of attack upon our national security is the undermining of the rights of minorities in order that mob rule might prevail as it does elsewhere in the world: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense is opposed to any weakening of our national security by any change in the present two-thirds Senate treaty confirmation requirement of the Constitution.

Geneva Conference proposals for control of communications

Whereas the United Nations Charter expressly states in article 2, paragraph 7: "Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter"; and

Whereas the proposals made at the Geneva Conference, April 1948, for international control of the press, news sources, and communication systems are un-American in principle and against the public interest, and not in accordance with article 2, paragraph 7 of the United Nations Charter: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense recommend that the Senate decline to ratify any treaty for the international control of press, news, and communications.

Resolution 18

Opposing world government

Whereas the need for understanding and cooperation among nations as developed under the Charter of the United Nations is a matter of immediate concern to all patriotic Americans; and

Whereas this concern in the hearts of loyal Americans, offers an opportunity to those who would destroy our Nation and encourages their attempt to set up a world government which would abrogate national sovereignty; and

Whereas a world government would mean world citizenship and thus the abolition of all our country's immigration laws; and would mean world money and thus reduce our country's money to the level of that of all other countries in the world: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense declare itself as fully supporting the principle of world cooperation through sincere and candid cooperation among all nations; and that it declare itself also as uncompromisingly opposed to a world government with a supreme authority over all National Governments; and be it further

Resolved, That the Conference impress upon its members the urgent need of informing themselves and others as to the vast and vital difference between World Cooperation and World Government.

Revocation of United States citizenship

Whereas the several proposal plans for "world government" involve surrender of the independence and sovereignty of the United States of America and our ultimate submission to the tyranny of a world-governing bureaucracy under either Socialist or Communist control: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge the Congress of the United States to enact legislation under which naturalized citizens working under the cloak of "world government" to undermine our Constitution, shall be subject to revocation of citizenship.

Resolution 20

Un-American activities

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense request the Congress of the United States to print 1,000,000 copies of the following six booklets:

One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism in the United States of America.

One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism and Religion.

One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism and Education.

One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism and Labor.

One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism and Government.

The Communist Party of the United States as an Agent of a Foreign Power.

Assistance to Republic of China

Whereas the great nation of China has for many years mutually enjoyed a traditional friendship with our Nation; and

Whereas Chinese Communists are seizing control of much of China as well as Manchuria; and

Whereas the fall of China into Communist hands would constitute an irreparable loss and great defeat for the United States, necessitating large expenditures in defenses for Alaska, Japan, and the Philippines: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge immediate aid to China as necessary to insure the future peace of our Nation.

To outlaw the Communist Party

Whereas the spread of communism is increasing throughout the world and is becoming more evident in the United States; and

Whereas communism is inimical to our form of government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge Congress to enact legislation to outlaw the Communist Party in the United States.

Recognizing and exposing communism

Whereas this Nation was founded upon the principles of freedom under law, private enterprise, and individual responsibility, by means of which it has endured with phenomenal development and security; and

Whereas our Nation now is threatened by the presence of an ideology in the form of communism and Fabian socialism completely contrary to our principles, which ideology seeks to destroy our form of government and our American way of living by subtle infiltration into many American groups; into schools and colleges in the name of youth movements; into women's groups in the name of peace; into labor groups in the name of higher wages and control; and even into church and patriotic organizations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense call upon its entire membership to adopt a policy of informing themselves intelligently on the theory and manner of this threatening intrusion and to dedicate themselves, not casually, but earnestly to the business of recognizing and exposing communism wherever it is seeking to entrench itself or has already done so.

Un-American Activities Committee

Whereas recent events have demonstrated that national security requires full cooperation from the Chief Executive and the Attorney General in releasing information (other than top military secrets) to congressional committees: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense petition the House to retain and strengthen the House Un-American Activities Committee and grant the committee ample funds to carry on its important work in exposing the obstructionists and enemies within our ranks; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of Defense.

Commendation of Congress

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense commend the action taken by Congress in citing for contempt the script and scenario writers who refused to answer questions of the House Committee To Investigate Un-American Activities as to whether they were or had ever been members of the Communist Party.

---

Communists employed by Government

Whereas it is a well-established fact that there are many persons now employed in our Government who are members of the Communist Party, or members of Communist-front organizations; and

Whereas it has been proved beyond any doubt that the beliefs and purposes of the Communist Party and these organizations are entirely opposed to the principles on which the laws and ideals of our country are based: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge the President of the United States of America, and those in charge of all branches of our Government, to free all Government offices of any and all persons who are affiliated with the Communist Party, or any of the several Communist-front organizations, and that a most careful screening be used in the future to prevent the hiring of such persons.

Resolution 27

State socialism

Whereas all countries which have sacrificed civic freedoms because of false propaganda promising peace and prosperity in exchange for their sovereignty; and

Whereas all countries embracing such socialistic controls have suffered military defeat in war, and misery and starvation in long years of peace, it would be dangerous to submit the United States to similar unsuccessful socialistic restrictions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the preservation of our institutions, our free economy, and our homes is still our first line of defense; and be it further

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense oppose all national or international plans, proposals, or legislation presented as emergency or defense measures, which would convert the United States Government into a form of state socialism.

Resolution 28

Socialized medicine

Whereas great pressure is being exerted on Congress to pass legislation which would place under Government control the health and medical care of the people of the United States; and

Whereas such action would impair or destroy the personal interest, initiative, and private research on the part of the medical profession, and put that profession under the control of a paternalistic bureaucracy with direct socialization as a result: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense express its emphatic opposition to the establishment of socialized medicine and thereby the expansion of bureaucracy in the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the American Medical Association.

Federal regulation and centralization

Whereas there has been a growing tendency in our Federal Government to centralize power and authority and to usurp the prerogatives and rights of the sovereign States, and to create bureaus and commissions and to endow them with authority to make regulations with the force and power of law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense record its opposition to any Federal legislation which would tend toward further regimentation and centralization of government, and toward the lessening of the rights of the individual States.

Unity and tolerance

Whereas it has been the policy of the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense to condemn and oppose all forms of subversive activities, whether they be manifested by an appeal to racial hatreds and prejudices or by attempts to divide this Nation into industrial strife by agitating and fomenting trouble between capital and labor, and economic group against economic group; and

Whereas subversive organizations and individuals are continuing their vicious campaigns of propaganda to disunite and divide the American people, setting class against class, race against race, and creed against creed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense call upon the people of our Nation to oppose any threat to American unity and urge fellow citizens of all races, colors, and creeds to demonstrate that same spirit of cooperation that was evidenced by our armed forces on the battlefronts in the fight against aggression, bigotry, and intolerance, and to oppose every attempt of these un-American forces to destroy the fundamental principles of life, liberty, justice, and freedom guaranteed by our Constitution.

Immigration quotas

Whereas our present immigration laws, now threatened with change, have restricted immigration to a quota system allocating a definite number to each nationality mentioned, such allocation not to be interchangeable among quotas; and

Whereas millions of our veterans of World War II who are entitled to our first consideration, still desire and need American education, housing, and employment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That for the purpose of protecting the interest of all our citizens, and particularly our veterans, and for the purpose of excluding foreign elements imbued with political ideologies wholly at variance with our constitutional system of government, the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense urge upon the Congress that no immigration over and above the present quota system shall be permitted into the United States, either by special legislation, by unused quotas, or by Executive order.

Resolution 32

Pan-American good will

Whereas the forces of communism are seeking to infiltrate into all the nations of the Western Hemisphere, including the United States of America, thereby striving to injure the spirit of pan-American good will and to weaken the Pan American Union, and

Whereas the 21 independent, sovereign nations of the Pan American Union have, with very few exceptions, maintained friendly relations with one another for over 50 years; and

Whereas the spirit of good will and cooperation was of the greatest value during World War II and is of major importance to the United States of America and to the other nations of pan-America in time of peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense recommend to all its members the study of the several nations of pan-America, so that with knowledge of their history, culture, and problems, may come increased understanding and strengthening of hemispheric good will.

Resolution 33

To open United Nations meetings with prayer

Whereas the United States of America was founded on religious freedom; and

Whereas the early Congress, through Benjamin Franklin's wise appeal, was opened by prayer, after which the issues were clarified and the Constitution was ratified; and

Whereas our first line of national defense lies in dependence on God, the Great Commander: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense earnestly request that the United Nations meetings be opened with prayer, and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the United Nations at Lake Success, N. Y.

Resolution 34

Thanking the press

Whereas the press is a great and effective weapon to prevent war and maintain peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, (1) That the twenty-third Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense call the attention of the editors of local newspapers to their responsibility in connection with the program for national defense;

(2) That the editors be urged to help educate our people as to the condition, size, welfare, strength, and needs of our armed services in relation to those of other nations, to the end that we shall maintain at all times an adequate, well-trained, and strong organization for national security;

(3) That we express our thanks to the press for the splendid support given our armed services in the past, and urge that it continue such support with increasing emphasis and vigor, as an indispensable contribution to the development of a sound, informed, and virile public opinion on the subject of national security, and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to International News Service, the Associated Press, and the United Press.

ADEQUATE LAWS ON COMMUNISTIC INFLUENCES AND ACTIVITIES

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Rehoboth Beach, Del., on November 11, 1948, calling upon the State legislature to enact adequate laws on communistic influences and activities.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the ideology of communism is being vigorously pressed upon the people of the United States of America through misrepresentation, deceit, treachery, and intrigue, threatening our free institutions, and tending to the overthrow of our representative Government; and

Whereas the present critical condition of world affairs, particularly between the United States of America and Russia, has caused an organized cold war, which is being carried on by Russia, its satellite countries, and the Cominform in an endeavor to indoctrinate and foster among our people the ideology of communism; and

Whereas many citizens of the United States—indeed, many public officials—have, as a result of congressional investigations, proceedings of various grand juries, action by the United States Immigration Service and the Department of Justice, been shown to be of questionable loyalty to this country, or easy converts and zealous supporters of revolutionary doctrines, if not out-and-out active agents of Russia or the Cominform, or other alien nations and interests: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature (General Assembly) of the State of Delaware is herewith and hereby called upon to enact adequate laws to protect the citizens of Delaware from these subversive communistic influences and activities; and be it further

Resolved, That as an approach to that end there be enacted public laws providing that no person who is a member of any political party or any other organization seeking the overthrow of the Government of the United States or the State of Delaware by force and violence, by deceit, treachery, and intrigue, and by any other false and treasonable practices or means, shall hold any office of trust or profit in the government of this State or in any county, kindred municipality, or any other administrative subdivision whatsoever.

CHARLES M. ROGERS,
President.
RALPH R. MESSICK,
Secretary.

MVA—PETITION

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a petition from Beaver Local, Farmer's Union, Stutsman County, N. Dak., dealing with the MVA, and the 100-percent parity plan, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEAVER LOCAL, STUTSMAN COUNTY,
Alfred, N. Dak.

HON. WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We, the 56 members of Beaver local, wish to inform you that we are opposed to the Pick-Sloan plan and 100 percent in favor of MVA. Please consider this when you cast your vote.

Our local is also for 100-percent parity for family-type farms, and so are all the rest of the farmers and Farmers Union members in the State of North Dakota.

Yours truly,

L. C. OVERLANDER,
ALMON A. WILLIAMS,
Resolutions Committee.

SALARIES OF RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION OFFICIALS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, Washington, D. C., relating to the salaries of Rural Electrification Administration officials, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Congress now has under consideration a comprehensive readjustment of the salary structure of the principal executive offices of the Government to bring salaries of the administrative heads of the executive departments and agencies in line with present-day conditions; and

Whereas sound principles of government and effective management require that Government executives be compensated on a basis commensurate with the duties and responsibilities of their offices in order to attract and hold competent executives; and

Whereas the administration of the multibillion-dollar REA program requires the highest degree of executive skill and competence and imposes duties and responsibilities comparable with and, in many cases, greater than those of any Federal agency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we endorse the making of a complete appraisal and readjustment of the salary structure of the principal executive offices of the Government in general, and urge upon the Congress that the salaries of the chief administrative officials of the Rural Electrification Administration be adjusted to give full recognition to their duties and responsibilities and to the principle of equal pay for equal responsibilities.

HAND-PICKED JURIES—LETTER FROM MARGARET L. WHEELER

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Margaret L. Wheeler, of Albany, N. Y., relating to hand-picked juries.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALBANY, N. Y., January 28, 1949.

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: I read with a great deal of admiration your remarks on the prevalence of hand-picked juries.

Our jury system as provided in the Constitution is at the heart of the democratic system, and I, as a layman, cannot see how the system about which Judge Knox boasts can be sustained in the courts.

We are trying to show various other countries what democracy is. A good way to do this would be to try it at home.

Very truly,

MARGARET L. WHEELER.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY BLUE STAR MOTHERS OF DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the convention of Blue Star Mothers of America in Detroit, Mich.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED AT THE NATIONAL CONVENTION IN DETROIT, MICH.

I

Whereas the funds set aside by Congress for the return of our war dead has been found to be insufficient: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States of America be petitioned to increase to meet the added expense.

II

Whereas December 7, known as Pearl Harbor Day, is a day of special memory for Blue Star Mothers of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we petition Congress to declare said day a legal holiday, set aside for prayer and appropriate memorial services.

III

Whereas adequate facilities in VA hospitals are not available to many veterans afflicted with tuberculosis; and

Whereas the Blue Star Mothers of America do feel the utmost interest in the welfare of the veteran; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Blue Star Mothers of America, in convention assembled, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to appropriate the necessary funds to provide accommodations for these afflicted veterans.

IV

Whereas we the Blue Star Mothers of America do feel strongly that in World War II many of our boys were forced to serve without proper military training; and

Whereas, because of the uncertain international situation of today, we feel the necessity of adequate preparation for the future: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we strongly recommend to Congress the adoption of an adequate program of universal military training which will go into effect immediately upon the conclusion of the present emergency draft program.

V

Whereas the youth of the United States may be inducted into military service at 18 years of age under the present emergency draft bill; and

Whereas under the educational system of today he does not thoroughly understand the functions of our Government and the rights of his American heritage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Blue Star Mothers of America in national convention assembled, recommend that a 4-year course in civics and American history be required in all secondary schools throughout the United States.

VI

Whereas the spread of communistic ideas is increasing at an alarming rate in the United States; and

Whereas these ideas are found to be infiltrating our schools: Therefore be it

Resolved, That all teachers be required to sign a loyalty or anticommunistic pledge before they shall be employed as teachers.

VII

Whereas Public Law 346 provides educational benefits for surviving veterans of World War II which has been of extreme benefit to those seeking to better themselves; and

Whereas the widows and children of service personnel who died in the service of their Nation face an uncertain future, with particular emphasis on the efforts of such orphaned children to secure an adequate education: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Blue Star Mothers of America in national convention assembled do hereby petition the Congress for the passage of legislation amending Public Law No. 346 to provide that such educational benefits as would have accrued to the deceased service person should be vested in the surviving widow or one child.

VIII

Whereas there is a woeful lack of housing for our veterans and their families: Be it

Resolved, That Congress be petitioned to take immediate action on providing adequate housing, financed by the Federal Government; and be it further

Resolved, That houses provided for veterans conform to certain specifications—not less than four rooms, bath, and utility room, and other facilities necessary to the American way of living; and be it further

Resolved, That these houses be made available to veterans at a price within the means of the average veteran; and be it further

Resolved, That where so desired the veteran may be permitted to rent these houses at a fair rental price for a period of at least 3 years with the option of buying, and at the expiration of said rental period all moneys paid as rental may be applied as a down payment for the purchase of said home; and be it further

Resolved, That in cases where the veteran may be the owner of a lot or lots, and wishes to build his own home, the necessary materials be made available to him at the prevailing price, and the cost of said material be covered by an insured Government mortgage at a rate of interest comparable to that of the GI loans, namely, 4 percent; and be it further

Resolved, That we go on record as objecting to the provisions of the 1948 housing bill which would permit an increase to 4½ percent of the interest chargeable on said GI loans; and

IX

Whereas current building costs have placed the acquisition of homes beyond the economic reach of the average veteran and his family; and

Whereas the building industry has found it impossible to build rental housing at a cost within the reach of such veterans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Blue Star Mothers of America urge upon Congress that a minimum of 125,000 rental units per year be constructed by the Federal Government during the next 5 years; and be it further

Resolved, That definite but reasonable income limitation be effected, in order that those most legitimately entitled to such homes may not be crowded out by high-income families.

THE TRIAL OF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY—RESOLUTION OF MARYLAND HOUSE OF DELEGATES

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, the Maryland House of Delegates, one of the two branches of the Legislature of Maryland, have adopted a resolution of protest which, through their officers, was ordered forwarded to the National Congress.

The resolution condemns the unjust procedures employed in the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty, and deplores the practices being followed in the Soviet-dominated countries. It is further evidence of the deep feeling of outrage, which is the reaction of the people of Maryland to the Communist injustice perpetrated upon Hungary's beloved primate.

I present the resolution and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary constitutes an attack by atheistic communism upon the freedom of religion; and

Whereas prominent members of various religious groups in this country have characterized this unjust trial as a gross crime against freedom and as a rape of justice, these persons, including Cardinal Spellman, archbishop of New York; the Reverend Daniel A. Poling, president of the World Christian Endeavor Union; and the Reverend Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, Chaplain of the Senate of the United States and pastor of Foundry Methodist Church in Washington, D. C.; and

Whereas Cardinal Mindszenty was imprisoned in a Nazi concentration camp during World War II for his efforts in saving 1,500 Hungarian Jews from the clutches of the German Gestapo, thereby proving himself a defender of and a martyr for civil rights and humanity; and

Whereas this trial is part of a worldwide conspiracy of atheistic communism to threaten not only the countries of eastern Europe but also the liberty, democracy, and very life of the United States; and

Whereas representatives of the freedom-loving nations were barred from the courtroom during the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty; and

Senator HERBERT R. O'CONOR has asked the intervention of the State Department of the United States in this matter, seeking to ascertain whether Soviet and Hungarian Governments have violated the basic guaranties of the United Nations as to freedom of worship, fair and impartial trials and freedom of speech: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That this body, representing a great State, in which toleration and freedom of religion not only are guaranteed by the Constitution but also are part of the very fabric of its citizens, solemnly protests the outrageous crime against religion and humanity now being perpetrated in the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the Journal of the House and that the Chief Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send copies thereof to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State of the United States and to each member of the Maryland delegation in the Congress of the United States.

IMPORTATION OF OIL—CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF OKLAHOMA LEGISLATURE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I present Senate Concurrent Resolution 3, adopted by the Oklahoma Legislature. The resolution asks that the United States Senate call the importation of oil to the attention of the State Department of our Government. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD, and that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to forward the resolution to the State Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, resolutions coming from a State legislature are received and printed in the RECORD. Without objection, the resolution will also be forwarded as requested.

The concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma was referred to the State Department and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 3

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to bring to the attention of the United States State Department the immediate need of drastically curtailing the importation of crude oil from foreign countries to the United States until such time as there is a need for the importation of crude oil to take care of the market demand for crude oil within the continental United States

Whereas it appears that the increase in stocks of crude oil and refined products have increased 105,000,000 barrels during the last year, resulting in a curtailment in production of oil in Oklahoma and in other States of the Union because of lack of storage facilities; and

Whereas above-ground storage of crude oil in abnormal amounts results in great waste of natural resources; and

Whereas the importation of crude oil in the United States during the past year have increased approximately 150 percent, and that approximately 600,000 barrels of crude oil is being imported daily into the United States; and

Whereas such importation of crude oil results in building up of the abnormal amount of the stocks of crude oil and refined products on hand, which has caused Oklahoma to decrease the allowable production of oil approximately 40,000 barrels daily; and

Whereas the importation of crude oil from foreign countries is a direct threat to the stability of the oil industry in Oklahoma and in the other oil-producing States, and to the tax structure in Oklahoma; and

Whereas unless the importation of crude oil from foreign countries is materially decreased, Oklahoma will be forced to curtail the allowable production of oil within the respective producing areas; and

Whereas the importation of foreign oil is a direct threat to the military security of the United States of America in that all initiative for the future development of the oil resources is stifled; and

Whereas the petroleum industry has continually developed new methods of discovering new resources when there is a proper demand for oil; and

Whereas the country is primarily dependent on American oil in time of war and these resources are only discovered when initiative is not stifled: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the twenty-second legislature (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States bring to the attention of the United States State Department the important fact that the importation of crude oil from foreign countries to the United States should be drastically curtailed until such time as there is a need for the importation of crude oil to take care of the market demand for crude oil within the continental United States, and that the congressional delegation from Oklahoma do all within its power to carry out the purpose and intent of this resolution. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of the senate to each Member of the congressional delegation from Oklahoma, and to the Honorable Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

S. Res. 62. Resolution to investigate domestic land and water transportation conditions; with an amendment, and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration;

S. Res. 63. Resolution to investigate certain matters relating to radio, telegraph, and telephone communications; with an amendment, and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration;

S. Res. 64. Resolution to investigate the fishing resources of the United States; without amendment, and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration; and

S. Res. 65. Resolution to investigate the Panama Canal and interoceanic canals generally; without amendment, and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

CATHERINE MARSHALL

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably Senate Resolution 44, submitted by Mr. LUCAS on January 27, 1949, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Catherine Marshall, widow of Rev. Peter Marshall, late the Chaplain of the Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS RELATING TO INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONSHIPS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 51, reported by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, on February 3, 1949, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by subsection (g) (2) (D) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period beginning on February 16, 1949, and ending on February 15, 1950, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution (which shall not exceed $15,000 for studying intergovernmental relations with the States and municipalities or $18,000 for studying relations with international organizations) shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee as the case may be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the distinguished Senator from Arizona if he will give an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. The resolution involves two amounts of money for two subcommittees of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments; one of $15,000 for studying intergovernmental relations with the States and municipalities, and $18,000 for studying relations with international organizations. These are subcommittees which functioned during the past year and which are being continued. They did not spend all their money. The sum total here is practically the amount which was appropriated last year.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS OF COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION RELATING TO LIMITATION ON DEBATE (S. DOC. NO. 10)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I reported an original resolution providing for the printing of the hearings before the Committee on Rules and Administration on the limitation of debate in the Senate, as a Senate document, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be stated.

The resolution (S. Res. 68) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the hearings held before the Committee on Rules and Administration, relative to limitation of debate in the Senate, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS RELATING TO GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably Senate Resolution 52, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 52) reported by Mr. McCLELLAN from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments on February 3, 1949, and subsequently referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by subsection (g) (2) (B) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, or any other duties imposed upon it, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period beginning on February 16, 1949, and ending on February 15, 1950, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, in addition to any unexpended balance under Senate Resolution 189, Eightieth Congress, agreed to January 28, 1948, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee as the case may be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask that an explanation of the resolution be given.

Mr. HAYDEN. This resolution provides for a continuation of the Ferguson subcommittee of last year. It had an appropriation of $125,000. About $50,000 was left over. The committee is asking for another $50,000, so that the total expenditures under this authorization would be approximately $100,000 during the next year.

Mr. WHERRY. Does not the life of the subcommittee expire as of February 15?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the reason for the resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. And it is necessary that an appropriation be made so that the subcommittee may continue its authority under the appropriation for another year.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the subcommittee does not expire. The appropriation expires.

Mr. WHERRY. The appropriation expires as of February 15, I believe.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. It is very necessary that the balance be reappropriated, plus an additional appropriation of $50,000, which makes an annual appropriation of $102,000, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, without amendment, House bill 1252. The bill is short, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. If the clerk will read the bill, I think it will be self-explanatory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 1252) to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 with respect to the eligibility for appointment in the executive branch of the Government of former professional staff members of committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 202 (g) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended (prohibiting the employment in the executive branch of the Government of any former professional staff member of a committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives for a period of 1 year after he ceases to be such a member), is hereby repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the distinguished Senator from Arizona to explain what is incorporated in the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Reorganization Act now provides that anyone employed as a clerk or assistant on the professional staff of any of the committees of the House or Senate may not accept employment in a department of the Government for 1 year after he ceases to be connected with a committee. The particular case which I think caused this bill to be acted upon unanimously by the House involved a man detailed to the Committee on Ways and Means from the Tariff Commission. The committee no longer needs his services, and the Tariff Commission wishes to reemploy him, but is prohibited from doing so for 1 year. The bill would permit him to resume his work with the Tariff Commission. I assume there are other similar cases.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, why should not this bill go to the calendar, in the normal course?

Mr. HAYDEN. There seemed to be some desire to expedite the employee's return to the Tariff Commission. Otherwise, I have no objection to the bill going to the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I voted to report the bill from the committee; but it seems to involve an important question. It goes to one of the important points in the La Follette-Monroney Act. I should like to know what criterion we are to have for considering bills without having them first go to the calendar.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, to which request any Senator has the right to object.

Mr. HAYDEN. I withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is withdrawn, and the bill will go to the calendar.

REPORTS OF SENATE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I submit five reports from the Senate Small Business Committee. One has reference to steel supply and distribution, being the final report of the activities of the steel subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee (Rept. No. 43). One relates to changes in steel distribution, 1940 to 1947, being the result of a survey of steel-distribution practices by 14 major integrated steel companies, which the subcommittee on steel initiated in the fall of 1948 (Rept. No. 44). There is a report on small business finance and taxation (Rept. No. 46), a report on participation of small business in Government procurement (Rept. No. 45), and, finally a report on newsprint supply and distribution (Rept. No. 47), the final report of the Subcommittee on Newsprint and Paper Shortages, of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] has been in charge.

I might say that the chairman of the subcommittee on steel has been the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN]. I am submitting these reports in their behalf.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received and printed.

COMMUNICATIONS PROBLEMS — REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE (S. REPT. NO. 49)

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I submit an interim report relating to communications problems.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

ROUTINE PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Armed Services I report favorably numerous appointments and promotions in the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Marine Corps, and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration. I see that the minority leader has risen, and in anticipation of what he is about to ask I will say that the purpose in making the request is to save the cost of printing. If these numerous routine promotions should go to the Executive Calendar the names will have to be printed, and the calendar will be a very thick one. It will necessitate the spending of a considerable amount of money for printing the names. I will say that there is no objection to the promotion of any of the officers in question. Most of them are in the lower grades. I make the request only in the interest of public economy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the observation and the request made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. I will say that during the past 2 years similar requests have been made by the former chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and they have been complied with on both sides of the aisle. As I understand, we will then continue such a procedure; and the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee will ask for the confirmation of routine appointments and promotions, as he has done today, only in order to save printing the names. I understand the Senator will make the requests only with respect to nominations concerning which there are no disagreements, nominations which are unanimously reported.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Nebraska is correct. The Senator from Maryland, who is chairman of the Armed Services Committee, will also state that he will not take advantage of this situation when, to his knowledge, there is any controversy over any of the nominations.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for explaining the position he has taken and will continue to take, and I want to assure him that in order to save printing the names, so as to conserve on the printing bill respecting routine nominations in the armed services, I am agreeable to that procedure, and will not now object to his request.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the routine nominations in the armed services referred to by the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 872. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to establish land-based air warning and control installations for the national security, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. CAPEHART:

COLORED OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, for some time a troublesome issue concerned with the taxation of colored oleomargarine has been before the Senate. Like other Senators I have received a great deal of mail on the subject. It seems clear that housewives, as a whole, are anxious to have the tax on precolored margarine removed. It is my understanding that generally the dairy industry has no objection to the removal of such tax, provided adequate guaranties make sure oleomargarine is not sold as butter and make sure misleading inferences do not confuse the buyer. It is my own humble opinion that——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to admonish the Senator from Connecticut that debate is not now in order.

Mr. BALDWIN. I am merely making a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but that is debate, and the Chair has no way of knowing how long it would run. Under the rules the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is now in order, without debate and without remarks.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, would it be in order for me to introduce a bill and ask that the statement be inserted in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be; and, without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 877) to repeal the special taxes on manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine, and to repeal other taxes on oleomargarine which is not colored certain shades of yellow, introduced by Mr. BALDWIN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. BALDWIN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BALDWIN

Mr. President, for some time a troublesome issue concerned with the taxing of colored oleomargarine has been before us here. Like other Senators, I have received a great deal of mail on this subject. It seems clear that housewives, as a whole, are anxious to have this tax on precolored margarine removed. It is my understanding that generally the dairy industry has no objection to the removal of such a tax provided adequate guaranties make sure that oleomargarine is not sold as butter and make sure that misleading inferences do not confuse the buyer.

It is my own opinion that were the tax removed without any other protective legislation, the price of butter might be reduced somewhat, but the price of oleomargarine would be substantially increased so that the housewife would gain little or nothing in the end.

Oleomargarine is a nutritious food and there appears to be no legitimate reason why it should be taxed so long as unwarranted or misleading claims are not made.

Unfortunately, unless there is some tax provision, the Federal Government would have little or no opportunity to prevent such claims.

I therefore propose, Mr. President, that certain color stipulations be established so that the tax will not be charged on oleomargarine if it is not colored the same shade of yellow as butter. Under this bill, which I am introducing, oleomargarine would be held to be yellow in color and therefore taxable only if it has a tint or shade containing between 1.6 and 15 degrees of yellow or of yellow and red collectively, but with an excess of yellow over red measured in the terms of the Lovibond tintometer scale or its equivalent.

In less confusing language this simply means that butter, which is also sometimes colored, would be a light yellow whereas oleomargarine would have to be colored a sufficiently dark yellow to be clearly distinguishable.

This bill would remove all special taxes on manufacturers of, and dealers in, oleomargarine so long as it is not colored certain light shades of yellow—that color area being left to butter.

CONVEYANCE OF PORTION OF CHARLESTON ARMY BASE TERMINAL TO CITY COUNCIL OF CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I introduce a bill, and ask that it be referred to the Armed Services Committee.

I wish to state at this time that section 2 of the bill may conflict with some city ordinances or State laws or Public Law 616, so I ask the Armed Services Committee to hold a hearing on the bill at their earliest convenience.

The bill (S. 886) authorizing the Secretary of the Army to convey a portion of the Charleston Army Base Terminal to the City Council of Charleston, S. C., free from the conditions contained in the Act of May 27, 1936, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

ADEQUATE AND EFFECTIVE RENT CONTROL

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for more adequate and effective rent control, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared explaining the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 888) to provide more adequate and effective rent control until June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MYERS, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. MYERS was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MYERS, OF PENNSYLVANIA, IN INTRODUCING NEW BILL SETTING FORTH ALL RENT-CONTROL LAWS IN ONE MEASURE, SUPERSEDING S. 434, WHICH AMENDED PREVIOUS ACTS

This bill is identical in nearly all provisions with S. 434, which I introduced on January 13. That bill, in turn, had been generally similar to the bill which I introduced in the Eightieth Congress, S. 1741, which was intended to repair the damages to effective rent control caused by the passage of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947.

The Eightieth Congress, however, in passing the Housing and Rent Act of 1948, although making some slight improvements from the 1947 act, had refused to close up the loopholes to effective regulation in the manner S. 1741 would have done, and so, earlier this year, I redrafted S. 1741 to fit present circumstances and reintroduced it as S. 434.

Both of my bills—that in the Eightieth Congress and S. 434—were amendments to existing legislation, just as the Housing and Rent Act of 1948 was an amendment to the Housing and Rent Act of 1947.

This new bill which I am introducing today is a clean bill which, instead of amending two previous acts, as S. 434 and the other Senate bills on rent control would do, sets out for the first time in one measure all of the provisions of law on rent control. The lawyers and the courts will have a much easier time understanding rent control if all of the provisions can be found in one measure rather than in three different acts passed in three different years.

But, I repeat, the major provisions of this new one-package bill are substantially identical with those of S. 434. It had been my intention to have this bill ready for introduction at the start of the session, but that was not possible. Months were spent in preparation of S. 434, in seeking to make it as effective as possible in dealing with the problems of rent inflation, and then additional weeks were necessary to redraft S. 434 into this bill.

I have given a copy of this new bill to Representative DOUGLAS, of California, and she has already introduced it in the House as House bill 2291. I am glad to have her cosponsorship on this measure.

She has called to my attention the fact that in her State there is a very serious problem of rent inflation involving permanent residents of trailer courts and tourist cabins. Under present laws, such accommodations are exempt from rent control. My previous bill, S. 434, would have maintained that exemption. However, inasmuch as this is regarded as a serious problem in certain States and areas, I have agreed to go along with those who are concerned about it and to revise this bill to provide machinery for recontrol of such accommodations wherever such recontrol is necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

That does not mean, of course, that all trailer courts and tourist courts occupied by permanent residents will be recontrolled. The Rent Administrator (as he would be known under this bill) would have the same authority he had in previous years to decontrol or refuse to recontrol any class of accommodations in any defense-rental area if he feels it is not necessary to have them under control.

The rent-control authorities used just such authority to decontrol transient hotels when that was originally done.

There is one other change in this bill from S. 434 and it is very important in a mechanical sense. This bill makes no provision whatsoever—as S. 434 did—for the continuation of present powers of the Housing Expediter (who would become under this bill the Rent Administrator) to require that new housing construction be held available for veterans for certain preference periods.

I want to emphasize that I am not against that provision—in fact, I am very much for it. But I do not think that such powers should be lodged with the agency assigned the duty of administering rent control. It should be, instead, a function of agencies concerned with housing.

I would like to suggest to the members of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, now holding hearings on new housing legislation, that the housing bill reported out of committee be written to include provision for veterans' preference on new housing construction, so that these powers now assigned to the Housing Expediter shall not lapse.

In conclusion, I want to repeat that the purpose of this new bill, superseding S. 434, is to have in one statute all of the provisions of rent-control laws, so that the public will not be forced in the future to refer to the Rent Act of 1949, the Housing and Rent Act of 1948, and the Housing and Rent Act of 1947 to find the laws on rent control.

RESEARCH RELATING TO CHILD LIFE AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. DOUGLAS. I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for a research program relating to child life and development, and ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the body of the RECORD a short synopsis and explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the synopsis and explanation of the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 904) to provide for research relating to child life and development; to disseminate information as to the practical application of such research by parents, professional persons, and others; and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The synopsis and explanation of the bill presented by Mr. DOUGLAS was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In 1912 an act of Congress established the United States Children's Bureau and authorized the Bureau "to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life." Although fundamentally a research agency ever since, the Children's Bureau today obtains funds for research only as a part of its limited administrative budget, and has no funds available to make grants to research centers or individuals to stimulate research in child life and development.

Purpose: To remedy these deficiencies, the National Child Research Act would establish in the Children's Bureau of the Federal Security Agency a program of research in child life and development. This would enable the Children's Bureau more effectively to carry out its basic functions, and would advance human knowledge of child development and community aspects of child life; new knowledge would then be made available to parents, appropriate professional people, and others so that the health and well-being of children could be improved.

Functions: In consultation with a National Advisory Council on Research in Child Life, the Federal Security Administrator would carry out the purposes of the act through the Children's Bureau which would—

1. Conduct integrated research in such areas of child life and development as stillbirths; infant, childhood, and maternal mortality; the parent-child relationship; the social, cultural, physical, and emotional factors in the development of the normal child; illegitimacy; cause and prevention of juvenile delinquency; and such socially and physically handicapping conditions as cerebral palsy. Such studies, outside the field of medical laboratory research, would involve the biological, medical, psychological, physical, and social aspects of child life and development.

2. Operate a national clearinghouse on child-life research which is in progress or being planned; disseminate information on the practical use of new knowledge gained through research; make grants for child-life research to public and private agencies; establish and maintain fellowships for qualified individual research specialists in the Children's Bureau and elsewhere; provide and maintain traineeships in pediatrics and child development in the Children's Bureau and elsewhere; and secure facilities appropriate to and necessary for these research functions of the Bureau.

National Advisory Council on Research in Child Life and Development: Comprised of 15 members and the Chief of the Children's Bureau and the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, ex officio, the council would represent scientists and the public, with at least half of its members being outstanding scientific authorities in child-life research. The council would review and recommend research projects or programs to be fostered by the Chief of the Children's Bureau through research grants to universities, centers, and individuals; would review applications for such research grants and make recommendations; and advise the Chief of the Bureau on accepting gifts for the research program.

Appropriations: For the first year of operation $7,500,000 would be appropriated to carry out the provisions of the act, with ensuing appropriations being sufficient to carry it out. Funds appropriated for research grants would remain available for 4 years after being first appropriated, if research work was authorized within the year.

General provisions: The act provides for necessary coordination among Government agencies in planning and conducting research in child life, and provides for an annual report to the Congress of activities under the act.

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN PERSONS FROM INDUCTION UNDER SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT

Mr. LANGER. I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to exempt persons who have served in the merchant marine of the United States from December 1940 until June 1948, from induction in the service under the Service Act, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanation of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanation will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 909) to exempt persons who served in the merchant marine of the United States between September 16, 1940, and June 24, 1948, from induction or service under the Selective Service Act of 1948, introduced by Mr. LANGER, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. Merchant marine war veterans are specifically not exempted from the present draft and are being drafted.

2. The merchant marine had a higher percentage of men killed in World War II than did the armed forces, Army or Navy.

3. Merchant marine war veterans who completed a required period of service in the merchant marine were issued after the last war discharges similar to the Army and Navy's exempting them from further service. Congress also authorized service ribbons, medals for heroes, and uniforms for merchant marine sailors and in other ways recognized their service to their country. Merchant marine war veterans may well ask precisely what has happened in the period after the shooting ended to now warrant a complete reversal of treatment.

4. Reversing its former position the last Congress specifically voted to draft these war veterans. This law is now in effect and operation. These veterans ask, Were men fools to have fought and died in the merchant marine for the privilege of being treated as less than stay-at-home factory workers? Essential industry, conscientious objection, political office, and even marriage are now considered as greater sacrifices to our country than fighting in the merchant marine in time of war.

5. We can only feel that this action was taken to punish merchant marine veterans for two opinions held in some quarters namely:

A. "Merchant sailors were draft dodgers."

B. "The merchant marine got rich on the war."

What are the facts? In answer to the first charge it can only be said that if one were dodging the draft in the merchant marine, he was a fool as that was the service in which he stood the greatest chance of being killed. The merchant marine first met the German invader, while our armed forces were shocked and helpless. They did not run as attested to by our oil-soaked beaches. The merchant marine fought from then till the last shell of the war was fired. It was neither an easy nor quick victory. Our record of dead speaks for itself.

Did the merchant marine get rich on the war? The facts: The merchant marine man's pay, dollar for dollar, for time in service was equal to or less than the Army or Navy man's. It might be noted here that during the war about half of this merchant sailor's salary was paid by private shipowners and about half by the Government in the form of war-area bonuses. A merchantman receives no family allowance. This in itself is a very considerable item. In addition, the merchant marine war veteran receives no Government loans, Government schooling, free dental care, and other veterans' benefits. The disabled merchant marine war veteran receives no pension. That he gave a healthy body for a maimed, crippled one in his country's hour of need is a just due.

Case by individual case it can be proven that there is no substantial difference between what the merchantman and Army-Navy man received for their war service. The price merchant lives were purchased for was right. This will perhaps please some persons.

6. The current treatment accorded the merchant marine has materially weakened the United States military-defense position at a critical time. It has had the effect of adding aeroplanes and divisions to any potential enemy because:

In the event of the next world war young men and merchant-marine veterans would not sail as a merchantman because it has been proven the most dangerous service. Despite this fact after the war the merchant-marine veteran can expect to spend two additional years training for the Army, over and above the 4 to 5 years or more he has spent fighting on the sea. As a merchant-marine war veteran myself, I can authoritatively state that due to Government policy I will not fight another war in the merchant marine. Since I, like many merchant-marine veterans, was rejected in 1943 by the Naval Reserve and unacceptable except to the merchant marine, it is likely my 4 years of merchant-marine experience will, in event of the third world war, be put to good effect in a victory garden. It is much safer and Government policy to victory gardeners did not change to aversion when the war ended. In the event of world war III, the Government would be forced to draft men and thus extend to them the status of servicemen to sail the merchant ships. This would necessitate fresh training of crews for the merchant-marine War Two veteran will not want to serve as a merchant sailor again or will have by then completed his Army training and have become a soldier. Of course, the soldier could be sent to a merchant ship, but then his Army training would have been wasted. Training men costs millions of dollars in taxpayers' money. Trained men are a war commodity and equally as valuable as the rare metals we are stock piling. More important, a trained man cannot be purchased in dollars alone but must be purchased in time. We are not now able to say how much of this latter commodity we possess. Under present Army manpower quotas the number of men to be drafted is limited and it seems our citizens would be getting more for their tax dollar in the way of protection if this training were given to novices and not to men who are now already fully trained and with actual war experience under their belt and who are able, if ordered, to leave for any point on the globe inside of 24 hours.

I ask you as a Congressman to vote in favor of a fair treatment of merchant sailors when this bill comes up. If this bill does not come up I hope you will introduce it. I ask you to do this for the best interest of the Nation as a whole and as a matter of decency to the men who fought and died in the merchant marine whose fine war record has now been made an object of public scorn and derision. This ridicule from a Nation that owes much to her merchant marine, I'm afraid, will live in the minds of these men as it is not something they can take lightly or easily forget. It is to be hoped this condition can and will be remedied.

Our country vitally needs a strong and intelligently run merchant marine in peace as much as in war. Such a fleet can only come through consistently wise and long-range planning. It is a problem requiring study and mature judgment by competent experts, civil and military. A good merchant marine no more "just happens" than a good fighting Navy "just happens." It is sincerely hoped we shall have both in the years to come.

DEVELOPMENT AND CONSERVATION OF CERTAIN RESOURCES IN SUBMERGED COASTAL LANDS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill which was sent to the President of the Senate on February 1, by Secretary Forrestal, Attorney General Clark, and Secretary Krug, for the administration of the submerged coastal lands adjacent to the shores of the United States.

The bill (S. 923) to promote the development and conservation of certain resources in the submerged coastal lands adjacent to the shores of the United States, introduced by Mr. O'MAHONEY (by request), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I now ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter from the three Cabinet members submitting the bill may be printed at length in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1949.

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft of a proposed bill "to promote the development and conservation of certain resources in the submerged coastal lands adjacent to the shores of the United States."

This proposed legislation is similar to, but not identical with, the proposed legislation on this subject which we jointly submitted to the Congress on February 6, 1948. The previous proposal was introduced in the Senate as S. 2165, Eightieth Congress, and in the House of Representatives as H. R. 5528 and H. R. 5890, Eightieth Congress.

There is attached to the proposed bill an explanatory statement which summarizes and discusses its provisions in detail. We should like to supplement that explanatory statement in two respects.

The first additional comment relates to the matter of the distribution of the moneys received by the Federal Government from oil and gas operations in the submerged coastal lands. The proposed bill is silent on the subject, and hence, unless it is passed in a form expressly making other disposition of such income, all proceeds derived by the Government under the legislation will be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts. In this connection, the Congress may wish to consider whether the States off whose shores operations under the legislation are conducted have equities which justify the payment of some portion of the income to them.

The second additional comment concerns the acreage-limitation provisions of the bill, sections 4 (a) and 6 (a). These sections are identical with the provisions of S. 2165 and H. R. 5528, but a brief explanatory comment seems in order. Section 4 (a) places a ceiling of 64,000 acres on the quantity of land that can be included in a lease at the time of its issuance, and this maximum figure is subject to certain requirements for subsequent reduction in the acreage, so that at the end of the fifth year of a lease the acreage shall not exceed 7,680 acres. Section 6 (a) prescribes an acreage limitation on the leases that can be held per person, the maximum being 128,000 acres under lease to a person (of which not more than 30,720 acres may be held under producing leases) in any one of the following costal regions: The Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico or the Atlantic Ocean. The reasons for suggesting in this proposed legislation-acreage limitation provisions that are more generous than those under the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U. S. C., 1946 ed., sec. 184) are set out on page 6 of the explanatory statement. We should like to make clear to the Congress, however, that these suggestions as to acreage limitations are matters of judgment and that they are not based on actual experience in the administration of a Federal program of oil and gas development in the submerged coastal lands.

We recommend that the proposed bill be referred to the appropriate committee for consideration and that it be enacted as soon as possible, with such amendments and modifications relating to the two matters discussed herein as Congress may deem advisable.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this proposed bill to the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL,
Secretary of Defense.
TOM CLARK,
Attorney General.
J. A. KRUG,
Secretary of the Interior.

CONDEMNATION OF COURT PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY—AMENDMENT

Mr. IVES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 57) condemning court proceedings in the case of His Eminence Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, which was referred to the Committe on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL AID TO SCHOOLS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, on Monday the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], and the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], and myself introduced Senate bill 834, to authorize Federal aid to school districts overburdened with war-incurred and defense-incurred school enrollments, for the construction of additional school facilities. At this time I submit amendments to that bill for reference to the Committee on Public Works, the committee to which the bill was referred, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be printed in the RECORD. The amendments are intended to be proposed by the same sponsors of the bill and myself.

There being no objection, the amendments were referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amend title by inserting after the word "enrollments," the words "or by Federal activity in such districts." Amend section 1 by inserting, after the word "establishment", on line 1, page 2, the following: "(3) by reason of the school districts being overburdened, as the result of activities in such district, by any department or independent establishment (including a wholly owned Government corporation) of the Federal Government;".

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles, and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 1211. An act to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 1243. An act to amend the Hatch Act; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERPED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 19) to express the sense of the Congress with respect to the arrest and imprisonment of Archbishop Stepinac of Yugoslavia and Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RESEARCH ON FAMILY ASPECTS OF CHRONIC ILLNESSES

Mr. TYDINGS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 17), which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

Whereas the family is a dynamic unit in the maintenance of American educational, social, and economic standards; and

Whereas the family is the fountainhead of hereditary and environmental influences operative on the health of the individual; and

Whereas chronic illness is a significant cause of economic and social disruption of the American family; and

Whereas the greatest public-health problem today is the control of chronic diseases of long duration and insidious onset; and

Whereas the study and treatment of prolonged physical and mental disorders has hitherto concentrated on the individual, usually without consideration of family environment and hereditary proneness; and

Whereas failure to consider the familial aspects of disease may preclude successful health service to the individual and adequate protection for other members of the family unit; and

Whereas certain fundamental research conducted in Hagerstown and Washington County, Md., on the family prevalence, incidence, and mortality from heart disease, cancer, and other chronic diseases reveals an interrelationship between these diseases and family composition and environment; and

Whereas such studies thus far conducted have been on a limited scale, and have not involved integrated action of professional services: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That it is the sense of the Congress that research on the familial aspects of chronic illness and investigation of practical methods of furnishing family health services should be expanded and intensified, and that the United States Public Health Service should extend its activities toward this end.

INVESTIGATION OF RETRIAL OF GREEK MARITIME UNION LEADERS BY GREEK COURTS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution relating to an investigation of retrial of Greek maritime union leader by Greek courts, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanation of the resolution be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanation will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 69) was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the retrial by the courts of Greece of Antonios Ambatielos, general secretary of the Federation of Greek Maritime Unions; Vasilios Bekakos, president of the Panhellenic Marine Engineers Association; and other Greek maritime union leaders, on charges growing out of the same activities for which they have heretofore been tried by such courts. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

The explanation of the resolution presented by Mr. LANGER was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On February 1, 1949, Antonios Ambatielos, general secretary of the Federation of Greek Maritime Unions, and Vasilios Bekakos, president of the Panhellenic Marine Egineers Association, began a new trial for their lives with a group of 34 others, including many Greek seamen, some of whom have already been tried with the two top Greek maritime union leaders. Ambatielos and Bekakos and eight other maritime heads were sentenced to death by a Greek court last November on the same or similar charges on which they are now being retried. A third union leader, Timogiannakis, undergoes his second trial later this month. Even under present Greek laws it is illegal to try anyone twice for the same offenses.

The 10 maritime union leaders were temporarily saved from the firing squad last November as a result of a wave of protests from labor and democrats the world over, including direct United Nations intervention, wherein Herbert Evatt, Foreign Minister of Australia, and then President of the United Nations General Assembly, asked a suspension of execution on the grounds that such an act would lessen the hope of the Greek people for peace and the ending of the civil war. Other protests poured in from the British Trades Union Council and its president, Will Lawther, from Louis Saillant and Leon Jouhoux, leaders of the left and right wings of the French labor movement, from a large group of members of the British House of Lords and Commons, from Harold Laski, of the British Labor Party, and from leading American public figures. Protests came from the World Federation of Trade Unions, from trade unions in Australia, Sweden, Scotland, Canada, Italy, etc., from 14 American international and many local unions and from the CIO maritime committee. The foreign policy resolution of the 1948 national convention of the CIO condemned "the execution of trade-union leaders in Greece and other countries for carrying out their legitimate trade-union activities."

Obviously, the aim of the Greek Government in conducting the illegal retrials is to bypass United Nations and world protests by trying and executing the leaders one by one and two by two with groups of other Democrats, thus hoping to attract less attention.

FACTS ABOUT THE FIRST TRIAL

The original indictment against the 10 maritime leaders and the thirty-odd seamen tried with them covered the activities of the Federation of Greek Maritime Unions since its formation in 1941. Significantly, it made no mention of the fact that, during the war, carrying out its pledge to keep the Allied ships sailing, the FGMU lost a greater percentage of its members than any other Allied maritime or military force, earning the highest praise from American and British statesmen.

The 57-page outline of the indictment was made available to 30 defense attorneys for 2 hours on two occasions during which period the attorneys had to read what they could from a single copy. The chief accused, Ambatielos and Bekakos, encountered particular difficulties in finding defense counsel because of the difficulties and personal dangers risked by lawyers themselves when defending prisoners unpopular with the Athens government.

Five of the accused were women. Three who had given evidence on October 25 repudiated their written depositions at the trial, stating that these were extracted from them by police beatings. One young woman, Mrs. Pandelidou, stated that she will suffer injuries for the rest of her life as a result of the Gestapo tortures. Another, Mrs. Cosmidou, collapsed in court as she muttered, "Stop beating me. I know nothing." After a governmental medical examination, she was found to be too ill to attend proceedings for the next 2 days. The trial went on without her.

Another of the accused, George Frangos, gave evidence which differed considerably from his written deposition. Frangos stated that he had given earlier testimony under duress but that now that he was under oath he was compelled to tell the truth. Denying that money had been sent to the guerrillas by the maritime unionists, he testified that all his dealings with them were strictly of a trade-union character.

During the trial the judge insisted on himself answering questions put to Ambatielos. Upon reading telegrams of protest from Louis Saillant, secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions and Leon Jouhoux, secretary of the anti-Communist French Force Ouvriere, the judge remarked to the court, "Communists in the guise of trade unionists." One can have little doubt of the fate which would befall the internationally known Saillant and Jouhoux at the hands of this jurist who took the position that Communists should automatically receive the death sentence.

In an effort to insure at least the semblance of a free trial for their leaders, the Greek seamen in the United States and Britain retained attorneys to defend their leaders. William Standard, the American attorney, was denied a Greek visa by the Greek consular authorities here. The British attorney, Simmons, was also denied entry to Greece. Lawyers organizations in the United States (National Lawyers Guild) and Britain (Haldane Society) protested these exclusions but without result.

WHY THE GREEK GOVERNMENT ATTACKS THE FGMU

In 1943 the FGMU succeeded in winning the first contract ever won by the Greek maritime workers, the Cardiff agreement which was approved by the Greek Government. After the liberation from the Germans, the Greek Government established its own company union, the Panhellenic Nautical Federation which had been founded by the prewar dictator, John Metaxas. In 1947 the PNF signed an agreement with the shipowners annulling many of the hard-won gains of the Greek seamen. The FGMU refused to become a party to such a contract. It was then that the Greek Government arrested Ambatielos and Bekakos and raided and closed the FGMU headquarters in Piraeus, Greece. Soon afterward, the union was outlawed, its newspaper raided and closed. FGMU branches in Alexandria, Buenos Aires, and Antwerp were closed at the instigation of the Greek authorities there.

Government decrees made it illegal to ask for extra pay for extra work (such as the opening and closing of hatches in port which is the job of shore workers and for which American seamen receive a minimum of $1.50 hourly when they have to do it) and the traditional bonus after 6 months of continuous sailing aboard the same ship. Ship (or shop) committees, the kernel of American and other trade-union organizations, were outlawed. Greek seamen signing on Greek ships were asked to sign a yellow-dog contract repudiating the FGMU and abandoning all rights to extra work pay, the continuous service bonus, etc., under penalty of confiscation of their seamen's books and deportation to Greece for court martial if they refused. One thousand five hundred Greek seamen were blacklisted and forbidden to sail on Greek ships for various offenses including complaints of unhealthy food conditions aboard the vessels. A governmental decree ordered seizure of the seamen's papers of 600 seamen and their deportation to Greece for court martial on charges of mutiny for like offenses. A 30-man Greek gestapo, headed by a Greek gendarme, Microulis, who is an officer of the Greek security police, was established on American soil to terrorize Greek seamen sailing from American ports.

HOW AN AMERICAN COURT DECIDED A TYPICAL CASE OF MUTINY

Proof that the attack against the 10 maritime leaders is simply another attempt of the Greek Government to smash a bona fide trade-union and depress the wage and living standards of the Greek maritime workers is evidenced by the attempt to obtain deportation of Greek seamen on American soil that they may share the fate of their leaders in Greece. A case in point is that of four Greek members of the crew of the Greek ship S. S. Syros who were charged with mutiny, assault, and disobedience for claiming extra pay for extra work and the traditional bonus.

The four were hailed before the Federal District Court of Eastern Pennsylvania by Andreas Georgakopoulos, Greek harbor master for New York on the above charges. He asked that the men be turned over to him for deportation to Greece to face court martial. In denying the petition of Georgakopoulos, Judge J. Welsh, who heard the case, decided: (No. 421 of 1948, filed January 28, 1949):

"The evidence indicates quite clearly that the principal controversy between the ship owner and the crew in this case arises out of the claims for extra pay for opening and closing hatches on the steamship Syros under a custom existing at the time of the collective agreement of 1943 and still prevailing, and the refusal of the crew to perform that work without extra pay. It appears also that three of the respondents, prior to their service on the steamship Syros, had asserted claims for wage bonuses for continuous service under the Cardiff agreement while serving on the steamship Kyvernitis. Claims of both those classes were in effect outlawed by the Athens agreement of 1947, to which the respondents and their union were not parties, which agreement was adopted and sought to be enforced by the Ministry of Mercantile Marine. * * *

"Without a judicial determination of the rights of the respondent seamen to the compensation claimed, their conduct in refusing to do extra work without extra pay, and in claiming bonuses under an agreement they deemed to be still in force, has been characterized as unlawful disobedience for which they must be deprived of their seamen's credentials, repatriated, and punished. That members of the crew took issue against actions of the Greek Government in a matter in which a large part of the western world took issue (note: protests against the execution of the 10 Greek maritime union leaders), that they collected funds for their union, made some complaint as to the ship's food and concertedly solicited the master to reinstate Zannos, were not of sufficient importance to induce the master to impose disciplinary measures. Nor are they deemed sufficient to change the character of the dispute from one involving claims for compensation, to one involving mutiny or other disorder on the vessel for which this court might provide an aid to punishment."

Thus, while their leaders wait for death and illegal retrials in their Athens dungeons, the Greek seamen who had the luck to be tried in an American court are today free to pursue their calling, earning money to support their struggling families in Greece.

While the Syros case was being tried in Philadelphia, members of the Philadelphia Maritime Committee for Public Action headed by William E. Collier of the United Mine Workers and comprised of all A. F. of L., CIO, and independent maritime unions there, condemned the use of the American courts and other institutions by the Greek authorities in the United States to terrorize and intimidate Greek seamen sailing from American ports.

THE GREEK GOVERNMENT ATTACK AGAINST THE GREEK SEAMEN HURTS AMERICAN MARITIME INDUSTRY AS WELL

American maritime workers are already feeling the effects of unemployment and danger to their wage and living standards as a result of cheaper foreign competition. The tactics of the Greek shipowners and Government have made Greek-owned ships the greatest rival to the American industry. For, on the one hand, the Greek Government acts as an agent of the Greek shipowners, imprisoning, executing and blacklisting active union members who ask for their rights and wages (which happen to be considerably lower than those of American seamen). On the other hand, Greek industrialists, complaining that they "do not know how to keep books," have been avoiding the payment of most income and corporation taxes, unlike their American rivals. Moreover, in order to avoid even the few taxes asked by the Greek Government, Greek shipowners have been switching the flags of their vessels to flags of countries asking even lower taxes and whose maritime workers are not adequately protected by trade-unions.

In registering such a complaint, referring to the damage done to Canadian seamen by the Greek shipowners, Eric C. Adams, economic consultant to the Canadian Seamen's Union, wrote to Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, on January 7, 1949: "While a few Canadian vessels have been sold to Panamanian registry the most disruptive influence in the industry is the switching of articles on Canadian registered vessels. Under Canadian law, a Canadian vessel whose articles run out in a foreign port may take on the articles of the foreign port. The Greeks are using this device since they operate as tramps and are thus able to arrange the expiration of 'time' articles for arrival in British, Panamanian, or other foreign ports. The owners then tell the Canadian crews they have the option of signing on foreign articles at lower wages and inferior working conditions, or being shipped home. To date, at least 13 vessels have adopted this device of getting out from under Canadian collective agreements and labor laws."

Thus we are confronted with a situation wherein the Greek Government and shipowners, using funds derived from American aid, are operating on American soil, employing every antilabor device condemned by American labor traditions, to beat down the working and living standards of Greek maritime workers and hurting American maritime workers as well. The operating costs of the Greek ships have decreased, profits have increased, and the Greek shipper thus enjoys a great advantage over the American shipowner, who cannot compete on equal terms. Ironically enough, many of the Greek ship purchases have been underwritten by the Greek Government with American-aid money.

According to figures published in the Naftika Chronika, London magazine of the Greek shipowners, of July 1, 1948, the Greek flag ship fleet consists of 300 ships, totaling 1,283,090 tons. Of these, 96 are Liberty ships purchased from the United States and underwritten by the Greek Government with American-aid money. Greek-owned ships flying foreign flags include 70 British freighters, 191 ships under Panamanian flags, and 19 ships under Honduran flags.

The Greek shipowners make it clear that they fully appreciate the advantages obtained through government intervention. The same issue of Naftika Chronika writes happily: "Our owners, large and small, benefit from the operation of the American ships. Their operating expenses are high, about 40 percent above those of Greek ships, even higher when compared with the Panamanian." The July 15, 1948, issue wrote: "The only encouraging fact for the consideration of the Greek cargoes and the Greek-owned Panamanian fleet is the increasing disappearance from the market of the American tramp steamers. The existing rates, even though higher for the Americans, do not cover the expense of the American Liberty ships. Statistics show that many are being returned to the United States Maritime Commission; 1,500 were chartered last year, today only 650 are in service. Perhaps the number will drop even lower. The fact that the number of American ships decreases facilitates the operation of the Greek cargo industry."

The Greek seamen and their organization, the Federation of Greek Maritime Unions, denounces the attempts of the Greek Government—climaxed by the death sentences against the 11 Greek maritime union leaders (Evangelos Claoudatos was condemned 2 months before the others) and their illegal retrial—to break their bona fide trade-union organizations. They call upon labor and democrats of the entire world to help them in their fight to save their leaders. They particularly look to their American brothers and friends to aid this fight by demanding that the death sentences of the 11 Greek maritime union leaders be commuted and the unprecedented retrials stopped immediately.

PRINTING OF HOUSE DOCUMENT ENTITLED "COMPREHENSIVE REPORT ON CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN FLORIDA FOR FLOOD CONTROL AND OTHER PURPOSES"

Mr. HOLLAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 70), which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That there be printed for the Senate document room 1,000 additional copies of House Document No. 643, Eightieth Congress, second session, entitled "Comprehensive Report on Central and Southern Florida for Flood Control and Other Purposes."

NOTICE OF HEARING BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to say that as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency we have set next Tuesday, at 10:30 a. m., to consider the so-called Murray resolution, the so-called Wherry resolution, and other matters in connection with small business, and we should like to have any Senators testify who desire to do so.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SESSIONS OF THE SENATE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, which is continuing its present hearings, I ask unanimous consent that committee hearings may be held during the sessions of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT OF OSWALD RYAN AS A MEMBER OF THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement I have prepared with respect to the appointment of Oswald Ryan to the Civil Aeronautics Board.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, it is with the greatest of pleasure that I have this opportunity to rise before the United States Senate and recommend the confirmation of the appointment of Oswald Ryan to another term as a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

A true Hoosier, who was born in Anderson, Ind., Mr. Ryan has displayed that characteristic of public service which has symbolized the growth of America into the greatest Nation in the world.

His record as general counsel for the Federal Power Commission from 1932 to 1938 prompted the late President Roosevelt to select him for membership on the United States Civil Aeronautics Authority when that division of our Government was first formed in 1938.

He continued to give his exceptional services to the Civil Aeronautics Board following the change to that title and in 1943 he was rewarded by reappointment.

Mr. Ryan has again been honored by President Truman through his nomination for further service to the extremely important duty of assisting in the development of aviation in this country.

He attended Butler University in Indianapolis, Ind., before going to Harvard for his law degree.

Later he practiced law in Anderson and served as state's attorney there until he entered the service in World War I.

After the war he served as city attorney of Anderson and again as state's attorney until his selection as general counsel to the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. President, it is indeed a privilege for me to recommend to this Senate the confirmation of Mr. Oswald Ryan.

REMOVAL OF EXPORT LIMITS ON FATS, OILS, AND OIL-BEARING SEEDS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to read a statement which has just come in on the news ticker. It is as follows:

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer said he is willing to remove export limits on fats and oils and oil-bearing seeds.

However, he will withhold final action until a study of the proposal is made by the International Emergency Food Committee.

The committee previously said it favored continued control over the commodity.

This course, Sawyer said, has been approved by the State Department and the Agriculture Department.

Sawyer said he hoped the committee would take prompt action and that in the absence of early word from it, he would go ahead with his plans.

If he does, he will place fats and oils on an open-end export basis, which requires exporters to obtain licenses from the Commerce Department but which sets no quotas.

Mr. President, I wish to make only one observation, and that is that I am delighted that the Senate of the United States wrote into the export-control bill the provision that the Secretary of Agriculture could make the determination rather than have some bureaucratic committee investigate what the Secretary of Commerce himself says he would like to do. In the meantime the prices of cottonseed, soybean, and other edible vegetable oils and fats from the farms continue to decline.

THE NATIONAL HEALTH PROBLEM—ARTICLE FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

[Mr. MAGNUSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times regarding the national health problem, which appears in the Appendix.]

COMPUTATION OF COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 128) to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be used in computing cotton acreage allotments for any subsequent year, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. LUCAS, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. YOUNG conferees on the part of the Senate.

POSTPONEMENT OF DATE OF REPORTING LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably House Concurrent Resolution 22, and I submit a report (No. 48) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the date of reporting the legislative budget, as set forth in section 138 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as it may apply to the budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, is hereby postponed until May 1, 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am somewhat confused. Let me address an inquiry to the majority leader. It was my understanding that the business of the Senate today was to be confined to a debate on the District of Columbia daylight-saving-time bill. I did not know that this resolution would be ready for debate today. The chairman of the committee has reported the concurrent resolution, and is asking unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Personally I do not intend to object to the immediate consideration of this resolution, but I want Members of the Senate to know that this is a highly important question. It is a question of placing a ceiling limitation on the budget this year. According to the Reorganization Act, however, the legislative budget must be reported and acted upon by February 15.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I am in favor of that. I think the resolution should be considered, but I think we should know what the Federal expenditures are to be. If we do not, the very spirit of the Reorganization Act is circumvented.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield the floor in a moment, so that the Senator from Massachusetts may address a question to the Senator from Tennessee.

Personally, I am not objecting to the consideration of this resolution at this time. I think it should be considered. However, I want Members on this side of the aisle to know that this is a very important matter. Some of our Members may not be able to be present, because I informed them that the immediate legislation for consideration would be the District of Columbia daylight-saving-time bill.

However, we are confronted with the dilemma that if we do not consider and act upon this resolution by February 15, we shall be guilty of postponing this question beyond that date. I believe that the resolution should be adopted. We should have the report before us. We ought to know what the appropriations are to be. When I say that, I think I reecho all the observations made by Members on this side of the aisle when this question was before the Senate on a previous occasion.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Is not this the same question which we had under consideration 2 years ago?

Mr. WHERRY. It was last year.

Mr. BALDWIN. At that time the Republicans asked for an extension.

Mr. WHERRY. They certainly did.

Mr. BALDWIN. Did they ask for an extension for the same reason for which the majority party is now asking for an extension?

Mr. WHERRY. I presume that the end results would probably be the same, except that at this particular time the Democratic Party is in control of the administration and in control of the various branches of government.

Mr. BALDWIN. All I have to suggest is that perhaps it should be stated for the RECORD that we would like to say the same things against extension that the Democrats said a year ago, so that we may be "even Stephen."

Mr. MCKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should like to clear up one point. I believe the Senator from Nebraska may have left that point in question. Last year the Republicans did not ask for an extension.

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. BRIDGES. We complied with the law. It so happened that the Senator from New Hampshire, in presenting the question, pointed out the hardships under which we were laboring in making our recommendation, but we asked for no extension. We complied with the law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. This is a question of considerable importance. Why can it not be made the unfinished business, so that we may proceed with the morning hour in the normal way?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I shall be glad to answer that question. The reason is that last year a similar resolution failed because of lack of time. The 15th of February rolled around before the two Houses could agree. There was a conference, and there was objection, and therefore no resolution was passed. Yesterday the committee ordered this resolution reported to the Senate. I shall read from the report of the committee, because it was put in, and very properly so, at the request of our Republican friends, and because I think everyone voted for it:

> The committee realizing that there should be a complete resurvey of section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which is the section pertaining to the legislative budget, respectfully suggests to the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget that it carefully study section 138 of the act with a view to making recommendations as to whether section 138 should be repealed, whether it should be amended, or whether in lieu of the method prescribed in section 138 for fixing a more effective control over appropriations and expenditures, Congress should provide for an omnibus appropriation bill as a means of placing before the Congress the over-all appropriation figure and permitting the Congress to have before it for action all the ensuing fiscal year appropriation bills at one time.

That was put in in order to have the joint committee look into the whole matter and make its report to the Congress. I see no objection at all to it, and I think it should satisfy everyone.

All of us realize that in the committee it is impossible in the next 4 or 5 days to arrive at a legislative budget or budget estimate, and the time should be extended so that we can submit a report on the budget estimate.

In view of what our experience has been and in view of what the experience of the Appropriations Committee was last year, I hope all Senators will agree to the request, and I appeal to Senators to let the concurrent resolution be adopted as the best way out of the difficulty which confronts us, and the only way that is now open to us.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator why it is proposed that the Senate act on this matter during the morning hour. It seems to me it would be a very bad practice to start rushing things through during the morning hour, and would lead to all sorts of confusion. I wonder why we cannot take up this matter after we conclude the morning hour, and then make the concurrent resolution the unfinished business and deal with it today. It seems to me that the practice, which is beginning here, of legislating during the morning hour is most unsound.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Massachusetts or if the Senate thinks that would be the better method of arranging the matter, I am perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent a little later. But it seems to me that it is obvious that there cannot be a report from the committee within the time limit fixed by the law, and so it is our duty to extend the time to a date by which we can have a report from the committee, which is May 1. So I think that should be done.

Mr. McCLELLAN and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I promised to yield to the Senator from Arkansas, and I now yield to him.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS DURING SENATE SESSION—POSTPONEMENT OF DATE OF REPORTING LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to the request for unanimous consent made by the Senator from Tennessee; but I should like to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be permitted to meet and to continue hearings this afternoon, while the Senate is in session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERGUSON. I object.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did the Chair correctly understand the Senator from Michigan to object?

Mr. FERGUSON. I did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then that ends the matter.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may I address an observation to the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan objected to the consideration of this matter.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe it was to the request for the consideration of the concurrent resolution that the Senator from Michigan objected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I object to having the concurrent resolution taken up during the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair ask the Senator from Michigan to what he was objecting.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to propound a parliamentary: What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. First, the unanimous-consent request propounded by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], to which the Senator from Massachusetts has now objected.

The other unanimous-consent request was made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], and was that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be permitted to sit and hold hearings during the session of the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, let me make the record clear. I wish to object to having the Senator from Tennessee bring up the concurrent resolution at this time. I thought that was the question before the Senate. I have no objection to the sitting this afternoon of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan objected to the consideration of the concurrent resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee; is that correct?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN] is granted; and on objection the concurrent resolution goes to the calendar; or if the Senator from Tennessee desires to have the concurrent resolution remain on the table until a later hour, he has a right to have that done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Must I obtain unanimous consent to have that done? I should appreciate it very much if the Senate would allow the concurrent resolution to lie on the table, so that it may be brought up a little later.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to having it brought up later. It was merely to having it brought up at this particular time that I objected.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the distinguished occupant of the chair, in reference to what has happened relative to the objection to the request made by the Senator from Tennessee: If unanimous consent had been granted, would not the concurrent resolution have been debatable at that time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. I merely wished to make the RECORD clear, because it was my understanding that the rule would permit free discussion and debate at that time, either before the morning hour was concluded or afterward.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate gives unanimous consent, out of order, to take up a bill out of order, during the morning hour, it is debatable.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is during the call of the calendar that the 5-minute rule applies.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

I should like to make one more observation, Mr. President. When the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] asked me whether the Republicans had requested an extension, my observation was that the end point result of the discussion last year was that an extension occurred, but I point out that the debate hinged around the evidence submitted in justification of the estimate, and not on an extension. We did not ask for an extension. The debate was based on the question of whether we could substantiate the amount of the estimate. However, I repeat, we did not ask for an extension. That is why I feel that, in keeping with the spirit of the Reorganization Act, we should not delay, but should see that the matter is taken care of between now and the time set by the Reorganization Act, which is February 15.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Did the Republicans ask for an extension in 1947?

Mr. WHERRY. No; we did not ask for an extension at any time.

Mr. BALDWIN. In other words, both in 1947 and in 1948 we submitted a legislative budget within the time set by the law; is that correct?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. The debate which occurred centered around the report and the evidence submitted in justification of the estimate.

JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF SENATE RESOLUTION 57

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on Monday I offered Senate Resolution 57, which calls upon the Senate to condemn the arrest and trial of Cardinal Mindszenty. The resolution was offered on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL and Mr. LODGE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], and myself. I now ask unanimous consent that the names of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] be added as cosponsors of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, apropos of the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit at this time an amendment to the resolution which the Senator from New Hampshire has offered. The resolution says nothing about the conviction of Cardinal Mindszenty. But I think that should be in the resolution, to make it fully effective from that standpoint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent, out of order, to offer for the information of the Senate an amendment to Senate Resolution 57, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES.] Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Are there any further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the morning business is concluded.

POSTPONEMENT OF DATE OF REPORTING LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee a few moments ago attempted by unanimous consent to get before the Senate a very important measure. There was some objection to it until the morning hour was concluded. I sincerely hope the Senate will permit the Senator from Tennessee to have this very important resolution considered, because of the time element involved.

That really is the essence of it. If we cannot obtain unanimous consent, the resolution would have to go to the calendar, and on Monday we would have to debate the resolution and try to adopt it, which I think we could do. It simply means that much delay. In view of the fact that a number of Members on the Republican side will be away, it seems to me this would be the proper time to debate the resolution, if there is to be a debate on it. I hope unanimous consent may be obtained.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 22, which went to the calendar a little while ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 22, which the Clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 22) as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the date of reporting the legislative budget, as set forth in section 138 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as it may apply to the budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, is hereby postponed until May 1, 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not object to its present consideration. I suggest, however, that the majority leader perhaps might request a quorum call before the debate begins, so that all Senators may be present .

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 22) postponing to May 1, 1949, the date of reporting the legislative budget.

Mr. LUCAS. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE ECONOMIC REPORT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming before suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report has been holding sessions all this week in the morning. Today, however, the House of Representatives is not in session. The Senate, of course, will be in session. The Secretary of Agriculture was to appear before the committee this afternoon. In order that the work of the committee and of the House Members may not be interrupted, I ask unanimous consent that the committee may sit this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. I want to say to my distinguished friend from Wyoming, I had the order in front of me and I apologize for not making the request. I was just getting around to it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no need for apologizing, I may say to the distinguished leader.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Anderson | Humphrey | O'Conor |
| Baldwin | Hunt | O'Mahoney |
| Bricker | Ives | Pepper |
| Bridges | Johnson, Colo. | Reed |
| Broughton | Johnson, Tex. | Robertson |
| Byrd | Johnston, S. C. | Russell |
| Cain | Kefauver | Saltonstall |
| Capehart | Kerr | Schoeppel |
| Chapman | Kilgore | Smith, Maine |
| Chavez | Knowland | Smith, N. J. |
| Connally | Langer | Sparkman |
| Cordon | Lodge | Stennis |
| Douglas | Long | Taft |
| Eastland | Lucas | Taylor |
| Ferguson | McClellan | Thomas, Okla. |
| Frear | McFarland | Thomas, Utah |
| Fulbright | McGrath | Thye |
| George | McKellar | Tobey |
| Gillette | McMahon | Tydings |
| Gurney | Magnuson | Watkins |
| Hayden | Maybank | Wherry |
| Hendrickson | Miller | Wiley |
| Hickenlooper | Morse | Williams |
| Hill | Mundt | Withers |
| Hoey | Myers | Young |
| Holland | Neely | |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

POSTPONEMENT OF DATE OF REPORTING OF LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 22) postponing to May 1, 1949, the date of reporting the legislative budget.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think that what is being considered is understood by every Senator, and I should like to have a vote on the question.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does not the Senator from Tennessee, from his long experience on the Appropriations Committee, agree that ultimately, in order to have before us a decent over-all picture of appropriations, we must have an over-all appropriation bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a very broad question, and I do not know whether, prior to our investigation of it, we should attempt to decide at this time. I think the present situation obviously is not a good one and that we should have some other method of getting appropriations before the Senate. I hope and believe that the joint committee which has had the matter in charge and which has not had time in which to make a report of the kind the Senate should have before it, will report a resolution or a bill which will enable the Senate to have before it what is known as the legislative budget.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The provision in the La Follette-Monroney Act was inserted in an effort to give the Congress a better picture in the absence of an over-all appropriation bill, was it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. By postponing action to the time to which we are postponing it this year we are really nullifying the whole effect of the law; are we not?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. I think by May 1 the committee will make a report which will certainly be a very good estimate of what the appropriations may be and what the revenues may be. I hope it will be helpful, and I think it will be helpful.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment to postpone the time for making the report to March 15 or even April 1?

Mr. McKELLAR. We fought that out in the committee yesterday, and the committee, as the Senator will recall, by a majority of several votes, reported the resolution as it is. The reason for that is obvious. Unless we agree to the resolution in its present form there is no chance to have any resolution regarding the matter go through at this time. It will meet the same fate as that met by the resolution last year. I believe the Senate will get a better result by postponing the making of the report to May 1 than by postponing it to March 15. I do not think we would have time to make a good report before that date.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator assure me that as chairman of the joint committee he will make every endeavor to include a study and a report on an over-all budget?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall certainly do so. I think it is very necessary, and I shall be glad to make every effort possible to lay before the Senate the best view we can present.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to propound a question to the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it not a fact that by May 1 practically all appropriation bills will have been passed by the House and will be on their way through the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think that has been the history in the last 2 years.

Sometimes we get appropriation bills from the House as late as July, and sometimes as late as August.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate that, but I base the question on the fact that I have conferred with some members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and they have advised that with the possible exception of the armed services appropriation bill, and one other, they expect the appropriation bills to be out of the way by May 1.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that the armed services appropriation bill is by far the largest appropriation bill we will have, and, until we find out something about that, we cannot make a very good estimate of what the appropriations will be.

Mr. FERGUSON. One further question, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Has the joint committee held any meetings?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot say that they have held any formal meetings.

Mr. FERGUSON. As a member of the committee I know of no notice I have received.

Mr. McKELLAR. There has been no notice of formal meetings that I know of, but I have talked to Members of the House and Members of the Senate who are on the committee, to ascertain if we could do anything by February 15. I was advised by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who is a member of the committee, and by several other members, that they could not possiblly reach a conclusion about the matter by February 15.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee will agree that it would be much more convenient for the Senate if the House would get the appropriation bills to the Senate by the first of May.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with the Senator. Instead of its being a disadvantage, I think it would be an advantage, so that we could discuss fully the action of the House. It would give us more time.

Mr. REED. It would give us more time, and we could do our work better, if we got the bills promptly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. REED. I do not recall, during my experience, that we have gotten many of the bills in the Senate before the first of May, and most of them come after the first of May, some of them as late as June or July, as the Senator from Tennessee has just said, and some in August.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some even later than that. I agree entirely with the Senator. During the time I have been a Member of the Senate, we have received very few appropriation bills from the House by the first of May.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I concur in what the distinguished Senator from Tennessee has said, and I should like to add a word or two about the armed services appropriation bill. From an understanding I had this morning, I would say to the Senator from Tennessee that 34 cents out of every tax dollar is represented in the armed services bill, and 80 cents out of every dollar in appropriation bills which will come from the Committee on Appropriations this year will represent the cost of wars, including veterans' hospitals, interest on the debt growing out of the deficit during the war, and so forth. So 80 cents out of every dollar the taxpayer pays goes for the armed services, for preparations for war and for activities made necessary by wars, appropriated for, as the Senator well knows has been the case, from 1939 to the present.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall the exact figures, but an overwhelming part of our expenditures are for the armed services and related activities.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CORDON. What is the Senator's view as to what the Congress meant when it adopted section 138 of the Congressional Reorganization Act, containing this language:

> The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or duly authorized subcommittees thereof, are authorized and directed to meet jointly at the beginning of each regular session of Congress—

And after due consideration and study to do certain things?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that language is perfectly clear.

Mr. CORDON. Has there been any such meetings?

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as I recall, there were no such meetings last year, and no such meeting the year before, and there have been no such meetings this year. I am informed by the clerk of the committee that the legislative budget committee met last year, but I must have been out of the city at the time. I recall no invitation to be present.

Mr. CORDON. The record will disclose that the same group met at the first of the session 2 years ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. CORDON. My question goes to this proposition: We have before us a concurrent resolution to extend the date of making the report to the first day of May of this year.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. CORDON. If the committees had been called together, if they had been given an opportunity for an orderly consideration of this matter, might they not have reached the conclusion that if a later date were necessary it certainly would not have to be the first day of May? It might be the first of April or the first of March or the middle of March, so that the report could be what the law intended it to be, a budget estimate and not an accounting.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will recall the language of the act, which I shall be glad to read, he will see that it is very confused. It gives to four committees, the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, certain directions. So far as I recall—and I shall read the act to see whether I am correct or not—it does not instruct which of those committees is to take the lead or which of the chairmen is to take the lead. It is very indefinite and confused—as the Senator will see. It reads:

> SEC. 138. (a) The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate—

Now listen to this language—> or duly authorized subcommittees thereof, are authorized and directed to meet jointly in the beginning of each regular session of Congress—

"To meet jointly in the beginning of each regular session of Congress"— > and after study and consultation, giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective House a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year. Such report shall contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year which shall include such an amount to be reserved for deficiencies as may be deemed necessary by such committees. If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. Such report shall be made by February 15.

I should like to ask the Senator, is it the duty of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to call that meeting together? Is it the duty of the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate to call the meeting? Is it the duty of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House to call the meeting? Is it the duty of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House to call the meeting? The language is, the committees or subcommittees. I believe I will frankly say, that the purpose of the section I read was good, that it was directed along the right line, but the language respecting whose duty it is to take action at the beginning of the year is so uncertain that I think every Senator must concede that some change must be made in the language.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGRATH in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Will the Senator agree with me that reason would be on the side at least of the suggestion that all four chairmen, all being members of the majority party, might have gotten together and resolved the question of the date of meeting among themselves? Would that not have answered the purpose?

Mr. McKELLAR. That, Mr. President, is a very uncertain way of legislating. Knowing the Senator from Oregon as well as I do, I am sure he will agree with me that the act is quite uncertain in its language. It raises doubt as to who is to take the lead. For instance, if the language of the act had provided that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate should call the meeting together, whether it be a meeting of a subcommittee or a full committee, or a part of a subcommittee or a part of a full committee, or whatever it may be, the Senator from Tennessee would have acted as soon as his committee was organized.

Mr. CORDON. Might not the majority have taken a leaf out of the record of the Republican control of the Eightieth Congress and followed a procedure which seemed at least to be sufficient to get the committees together in a meeting?

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall, the majority in the Eightieth Congress asked for an extension of time, but it was not granted them.

Mr. CORDON. But they did have a meeting, did they not?

Mr. McKELLAR. They did have a meeting. That is to their credit. I will frankly yield them credit for holding a meeting. I do not know who called it. Who called the meeting?

Mr. CORDON. The ambiguity or uncertainty of the statute was not an insuperable obstacle to securing a meeting, was it?

Does the Senator from Tennessee apprehend that the confusion which exists in the statute will be cleared up any more by the first day of May than it was by the third day of January?

Mr. McKELLAR. I certainly do, or I would not have presented the resolution. I believe it will be of very great benefit to wait until the first day of May. We have a part of February, all of March, and all of April, and I believe that in that time we will be able to present a recommendation which will be something more than a guess. I certainly hope we will.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; I gladly yield.

Mr. CORDON. Does the Senator feel that he needs the time from now until the first day of May to determine which of the chairmen of the several committees shall call the meeting?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not. We will have to do as the Republicans did last year, get all four chairmen together. I believe the year before Representative TABER was designated to take the lead. Last year we designated my good friend, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who was then chairman of the Appropriations Committee, to take the lead. Those who met made the best guess they could. But it is my hope that, if the resolution should be adopted, and we would then have a little more than 2½ months to consider the matter, we might agree on something better than a guess and something that will save the American people money. When the Senate and the House know more about how much money will be collected from the people we will then know how much we can properly spend for the same period. I do hope that the resolution will be adopted. I believe its adoption will be a step toward clearing up the ambiguity in the law as to who should have charge of calling the meeting.

Mr. CORDON. I am in agreement with the Senator from Tennessee, let me say—and I usually am——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very happy to say that that is true.

Mr. CORDON. I am in agreement with the Senator that the presentation of a proper budget carrying the best information available as to anticipated receipts, and the best guess that might be made as to the anticipated or expected expenditures, would be a very great help to the Appropriations Committee and to the Congress in the great task ahead of appropriating money, and finding the money with which we may make the appropriations. But it occurs to me—and I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question about it—that that information, to be of value to the Appropriations Committee, of which the Senator is chairman, should be before the committee before it takes final action on any appropriation bill, and should be before the Committee on Appropriations of the House before that committee takes action, and certainly before either House takes action. Otherwise will we not be in the position of blindly making appropriations without the information contemplated in this section of the law; perhaps making larger appropriations than we might otherwise make; on the first day of May finding that we have appropriated too much money in the several bills which have been passed, and then have to pare down on some final bills, the importance of which may be so transcendent that we cannot make any reduction or change whatever? By such action would we not be doing those things which this section seeks to prevent our doing?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before answering the question I may ask the Senator whether he recalls any regular appropriation bill having been passed during the Eightieth Congress before May 1? I do not refer to a bill making appropriations for incidental purposes. No regular appropriation bill was passed before May 1 during the Eightieth Congress. That has been true for some years past. I have been a member of the Appropriations Committee for a long time, and I do not recall of any regular appropriation bill having come to us from the House, which must originate all appropriation bills of course, in time to be passed by the first of May. So I do not think that will be a matter with which we will be troubled.

Mr. CORDON. I do not have the record. I cannot dispute the Senator's statement. My memory, however, is that the Senate Appropriations Committee has worked on appropriation bills before the first of May, in fact during the full month of April. I may be wrong.

Mr. McKELLAR. Senate Appropriations Committees may have done so, but we do not get any of the regular appropriation bills over here before the first of May. I hope we may receive some earlier this year.

Mr. CORDON. Assuming that that hope is well founded, then the situation the Senator from Oregon has just outlined will be in front of us, will it not, and we will not have the value of the congressional budget to direct us in our considerations and final actions?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we will have the benefit of it, because all the appropriation bills have to go to conference, and the information which will be obtained by the joint committee, which will be presented to us by the joint committee, will not only be of value to the Senate generally, but it will be of great value to the Senator from Oregon, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield further.

Mr. CORDON. But will not such a report be a budget with reverse English? It will be a report of that which has been done, not of that which we expect to do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot say what it will be, but I hope it will be more than a guess.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, when the Seventy-ninth Congress was in session it passed one of the most important measures ever to come before this great body. I am referring, of course, to the Legislative Reorganization Act, which, despite certain criticisms which we all recognize, accomplished a vitalization and improvement of the legislative branch of the Federal Government.

One of the most important objectives of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 was to strengthen the fiscal controls of the Congress. Advocates of the reorganization proposal stressed the fact that Congress would, for the first time, establish a budget or expenditure ceiling that would permit an over-all analysis of revenues and expenditures and a determination in the early days of a congressional session of the total amount to be appropriated to the executive departments and agencies for the fiscal year immediately ahead. It was thought that such a ceiling on expenditures could rather easily be determined by the Congress within the first 6 weeks of the session and that a recommendation could be made to the two Houses in the form of a resolution that, when enacted, would set the pattern of spending for the succeeding fiscal year.

The Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress was impressed by the number of witnesses who expressed themselves forcibly on this point and concluded that "primary responsibility rests with Congress to improve legislative control over governmental expenditures and that means must be provided to permit a closer scrutiny of them, not only by the committees charged with this duty but also by the individual Members and Congress itself."

The purport of the recommendation that revenues and expenditures be matched is that a ceiling would be placed on estimated expenditures when estimated revenues were insufficient to support a larger spending program and that only the specific action of Congress would permit the creation of additional public debt when revenues were insufficient and when it was decided that additional expenditures were needed. Likewise, when surplus revenues existed Congress could make a determination of how much the public debt should be reduced.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not true that almost every State and municipality has a system by which it has some knowledge of balancing revenues and expenditures? In that respect, is not the fiscal system of the Federal Government considerably behind the times?

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe that is true. In spite of the fact that the Federal Government is the largest, most powerful, and richest agency in the world, it lags far behind municipalities and States generally in the provision for an adequate fiscal system.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. So if the joint committee, of which the Senator from New Hampshire will undoubtedly be a member, has the opportunity to make some recommendations by which we can advance toward an over-all appropriation bill, thereby gaining a knowledge of how to balance our expenditures with our revenues, that will be a distinct step forward, will it not?

Mr. BRIDGES. It certainly will.

Two years of operation under the Reorganization Act is too short a period for positive declaration regarding the merits or demerits of most of its provisions. With respect to the legislative budget provision, however, I am prepared and feel qualified to speak out at this time.

From the standpoint of the appropriations procedure, the experience that we had last year with the legislative budget adopted by both Houses clearly indicated that there is no assurance that appropriation reductions will necessarily result in the desired expenditure cuts. To be more specific, the six billions of recommended expenditure reduction for the fiscal year 1948, although never finally acted upon by the Congress, was predicated on a $5,200,000,000 reduction in appropriations. The actual reduction in all appropriations effected by the Eightieth Congress, first session, was slightly in excess of $3,000,000,000. The President's August budget review, however, showed a revision in expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 of slightly more than one-half billion dollars, thus indicating that appropriation reductions affected expenditure reductions in a ratio of 6 to 1; that is, for every dollar of appropriation reduction, only about 16⅔ cents expenditure reduction resulted. The answer to this situation, of course, lies in the fact that the executive branch generally has at its disposal large sums from previous years' appropriations available for expenditure. It was a simple matter for the agencies to accelerate spending from these accumulations of previously unused funds.

It is with these observations in mind that I have repeatedly suggested the desirability of directing our energies toward strengthening the legislative budget provision of the Reorganization Act so that Congress will be better able to discharge its fiscal responsibilities. In consequence, in company with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 182 in the second session of the Eightieth Congress, which would have created a small workable joint committee to investigate Federal expenditures and prepare the legislative budget. This new committee would make a continuing study of all Federal expenditures looking to the elimination or reduction of those determined to be nonessential. The reporting date for the legislative budget would have remained unchanged from the present requirement of a February 15 deadline.

More recently in this Congress I joined several of my colleagues in the introduction of Senate Concurrent Resolution 16, which would require a consolidation of all general appropriations measures into a single or omnibus bill. This resolution would further require a consideration of available revenues and expenditures against such revenues during the fiscal year to which such appropriations apply.

Two years ago and last year I had the responsibility in the Senate of presenting for the Republican leadership the legislative budget as recommended by the joint committee created for that purpose and of which I was chairman. These were the initial efforts of an endeavor to make workable a most complex provision of law. But the Republican Party faced up to its obligation four-square. In good faith, the House and Senate Republican leadership met the deadline even though the first endeavor resulted in a deadlocked conference.

In discussing the report accompanying Senate Concurrent Resolution 42 on February 18 of last year, I admitted that there were doubts in my mind as to the feasibility of actually accomplishing the reduction in expenditures we were recommending for fiscal 1949, modest though the total was.

But the resolution was ready and was introduced on February 9, nearly a week prior to the deadline. Let no one say that there was not a great deal of committee and staff work on the report which went to the Congress.

On both occasions I was denounced by the Democrats despite the fact that every possible means was availed of by the Republican leadership to make a defective provision of law, inherited from the Democrats, a working reality. I have already indicated that the Democratic administration gave no evidence of a willingness on its part to regard the strictures of the Congress as, in any sense, binding on their profligate spending habits. The general attitude was one of ridiculing our sincere and honest efforts.

The Reorganization Act and the legislative budget provision are both a product of a Congress controlled by the Democrats when a member of that party was in the White House. Today the situation is exactly the same as it was in the Seventy-ninth Congress. This is the first real opportunity, therefore, to make the legislative budget ceiling an effective device for preserving the people's money and for guarding against overspending. All of the sources of information essential to the formulation of a legislative budget ceiling—and I am speaking from personal experience—are available to the party in power. Yet the very first thing the Democrats have done is to recommend postponement of the problem to a date when, for all practical purposes, it will be impossible to establish a true ceiling on expenditures because the Congress will have had presented and will have enacted a number of general appropriation bills by the time the reporting date of May 1 arrives.

The resolution which is now before the Senate is, in consequence, a stop-gap measure which avoids the inherent problem, and opens up the floodgates of Federal spending for the fiscal year 1950. The least that the party in power could have done was to endeavor sincerely and conscientiously to formulate a legislative budget, before throwing up its hands and admitting that it could not be accomplished.

I am sure that had the voters decreed otherwise, my Democratic colleagues would be insisting that the February 15 deadline be observed. If the attempt here is to do away with the legislative budget feature of the Reorganization Act, then simple honesty requires a repealing and not a postponing type of resolution. Please remember it was the Seventy-ninth Congress, not the Eightieth Congress, which enacted this provision, which the Eighty-first Congress now seeks to avoid. Mr. President, let us remember that it was the Democratic Seventy-ninth Congress which passed the Reorganization Act. The Republican Eightieth Congress endeavored to live up to it. The Democratic Eighty-first Congress now is attempting to repeal it.

I realize that February 15 is close at hand and that the Democrats have not yet done a thing about preparing and presenting the legislative budget by then; they have not even called together the chairmen of the committees to make preliminary plans to discuss this matter.

Inasmuch as the administration and the Democrats in this body and the Democrats in the House of Representatives have failed completely so far as carrying out this provision of the act is concerned, although we Republicans lived up to it faithfully 2 years ago and a year ago, and inasmuch as the Democrats and the administration now are "up against the gun," with nothing to report, I am going to offer an amendment to the concurrent resolution presented by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, in line 6, it is proposed to strike out "May 1, 1949" and insert in lieu thereof "March 15, 1949."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I hope favorable action may be taken on the proposed change of date, as set forth in the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Hampshire request the yeas and nays on the amendment?

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to have a quorum call, and then I shall request the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire now suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall do so later.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to associate myself with the views which have been expressed by the distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire in regard to House Concurrent Resolution 22.

It seems to me that there is presented to us today a fundamental question of fiscal policy and of legislative responsibility which, so far as the majority party is concerned, is being lightly dismissed by the resolution currently under discussion.

The spirit and the intent of the legislative budget are abundantly clear. The legislative budget is a charge upon the Congress to face its responsibilities and its intentions with regard to fiscal policy. It operates in the interest of governmental economy. It does not outlaw deficit financing, but it requires the Congress to state that if it intends to condone an unbalanced budget it will make that sentiment a matter of record, and will do so in advance and will not say later that it was compelled, because of appropriations, to go into deficit spending.

The legislative budget is, above all, a prescription for governmental fiscal policy and not a post mortem.

The concurrent resolution which is now pending, however, has the effect of abrogating the letter and the spirit of the Reorganization Act and its provision for the legislative budget. It would return us to a fiscal situation which the democratically controlled Seventy-ninth Congress found unsatisfactory, and sought to correct by requiring the establishment by Congress of a ceiling for Federal expenditures for each and every fiscal year. Senators on this side of the aisle supported that view and supported the passage of the Reorganization Act.

This concurrent resolution, as I see it, would put the legislative budget in a deep freeze. While the proponents of the resolution lack the candor to concede that it will kill the legislative budget, it can emerge as nothing more than a ghost.

At the very best, a May 1 reporting date will mean a mere summation of appropriation grants to that date and a projection of the remaining appropriations, which by that time the House Appropriations Committee will have passed on or at least will have readied for action.

Mr. President, I recognize that the preparation of the legislative budget is not an easy task. We who were in the majority for the first 2 years of the operation of section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act found it difficult to comply with. Obviously, further machinery is desirable to implement it, perhaps through closer liaison between Congress and the executive departments in the formulation of the budget, or perhaps through some device such as that which was submitted for study last year by the then chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

But we who served on the joint committee for the legislative budget in the last Congress also found the principle of the legislative budget sound, and accordingly we strove to submit and did submit an estimated ceiling on expenditures in accordance with the act and the law.

Mr. President, I admit that I am not a master of the sleight-of-hand mathematics which are employed by the administration in handling the people's money and in the formulation of the President's budget. Nevertheless, from my reading of the budget I cannot comprehend why it should be impossible, if one has a genuine desire to observe the purposes and principles or even the form of the Reorganization Act, merely to take the total estimates of receipts of the Government for the coming fiscal year and apply them against the expenditures as recommended by the President.

The Constitution of the United States places in the House of Representatives and the Senate the responsibility of determining what appropriations shall be made and how much the people of the United States shall be taxed to pay for the expenditures of the National Government. Therefore, a legislative budget is a requirement if the elected representatives of the people are to determine how much the Government can afford to spend and how much money it can take from the taxpayers to cover the expenditure.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or does he prefer to complete his statement before yielding?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. On the point the Senator from Michigan has been discussing, it is interesting to note some of the colloquy and debate between various members of the other party last year.

I quote now from former Senator Hatch, of New Mexico, now a Federal judge. He referred to the President of the United States, and said:

> I assume that the President of the United States submits his budget annually by virture of statutory mandate. The President is required to do that, and he does it.

Then the following colloquy occurred between Senator Hatch and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]:

> Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.
> Mr. HATCH. The President did that; did he not?
> Mr. O'MAHONEY. He did.
> Mr. HATCH. He submitted a budget, whether it was right or wrong; he complied with the law of the land, and he gave to the Congress and the country his best estimate of what that budget should be; is that correct?
> Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.
> Mr. HATCH. Is it not true that the statute which the Congress itself passed, requiring and commanding a legislative budget, is just as mandatory as the statute making that requirement of the President?

Mr. President, that is very clear. There was no misunderstanding on the other side of the aisle. There were two distinguished Democratic Senators, the then Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Hatch, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], each one of them very clear in his own mind that this requirement is mandatory, just as mandatory as the provisions requiring the President of the United States to submit his budget. However, instead of that, we now see the majority turning their backs upon this mandatory statutory requirement.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I am glad to have the record of the last session placed in the RECORD now, showing what actually happened; and of course the requirement for the submission of the legislative budget is just as mandatory upon the Congress as is the requirement for the President to submit a budget.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. It would not become mandatory if the Congress were to change the date, would it?

Mr. FERGUSON. No.

Mr. LUCAS. So far as February 15 is concerned, it is mandatory as the statute now stands.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. But in the event the resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee is adopted, it becomes mandatory according to that date, does it not?

Mr. FERGUSON. On May 1. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. So if we adopt the resolution we are not doing anything different from what we have done in the past, other than merely to postpone the date?

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall answer that a little later.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. But I assure the Senator we will comply with the law if the date is postponed.

Mr. FERGUSON. Most of the extensive hearings on appropriation bills are conducted in the House. I understand under the present system in the House, hearings on various appropriation bills proceed at the same time. Those who are interested in making up the budget and spending the money are called in for questioning as to how much is needed, and then after all the hearings have been concluded and many of the bills have been passed by the House, they come to the Senate and we conduct our hearings. The question may be asked, Are we then to have a limitation? If the date is fixed as May 1, while we can hardly expect a limitation on the expenditures, at least we shall go through the formality by that date of placing a limitation after Congress has gone ahead and appropriated vast sums of money and perhaps reached the point where it cannot retrace its steps.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRIDGES. The distinguished majority leader, the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], I think has an excellent memory. In case he has forgotten, I should like to refresh his memory, and remind him that in February 1947, when the date was being considered——

Mr. LUCAS. What date in February?

Mr. BRIDGES. February 21, 1947. The Senator from Illinois said:

> That committee had an obligation under the act, and they failed, * * * in the performance of that duty and obligation, in not giving to the Senate sufficient information of some kind and character upon which it might intelligently act.

And all through the RECORD I see statements by the Senator from Illinois, who was very active, as he always is, in that debate, and he was very ardently in favor at that time of the Republicans taking action on the legislative budget.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield, in order that I may answer my good friend from New Hampshire?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield. I should like to have the Senator from Illinois answer the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. LUCAS. I was ardently anxious that the Republicans take action. The Republicans could have done the same thing, after the first year's experience, that we are now trying to do. The only thing we on this side of the aisle are attempting to do now is to profit by the experience the Republicans had with section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act during the past 2 years. The Senator well knows that during the first year, 1947, there never was any agreement by the Republican Congress upon the budget. There was agreement in the Senate on a saving of $4,500,000,000, but the House adopted the figure of $6,000,000,000, and told the American people they were going to save that amount. The conferees, during all that year, never agreed upon any amount. Therefore, so far as complying with the provision of section 138 is concerned, the Republican Senators, I must respectfully submit, never complied with it, although they threw the people of the country into quite a bit of confusion with respect to what they were trying to do. That is one of the reasons why the Senator from Illinois desires postponement of the date at the present time, so that perhaps by May 1 the Senate can have sufficient information, after House action on appropriation bills, possibly to make an intelligent guess or approach concerning an estimate. Let me say, while I am on my feet, if the Senator will yield further for another observation.

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I never voted for the $4,500,000,000 savings estimate, as the RECORD will show. I have never been in favor of this provision of the Reorganization Act. I have never thought it workable. I said, and as the Senator will discover if he will look at my remarks in the RECORD, that so long as national defense appropriations were in the condition they were, and nobody knew exactly how much would be needed in 1947 and 1948 for that purpose, I would not vote for any reduction in the budget, because, if I did so, it would be a dishonest vote in my opinion. I think that is what the RECORD will show. I may be wrong about that, but I felt that way about it at the time, and I feel that way at the present time. I hope the committee in making its study of section 138 of the Reorganization Act will reach one of two conclusions, either a conclusion in line with the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire and others, with respect to an over-all budget, or a decision to eliminate this provision in its entirety, because I think it is wholly unworkable.

Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say, on May 8, 1947, just 8 days after the resolution which the Senator from Tennessee is presenting and which the Senator from Illinois is supporting, the Senator from Illinois said:

> Every member of the Senate knows, and the country knows, that the people were entitled many weeks ago to some kind of a budget report, good or bad, even though it was based on a speculative guess.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. Evidently the Senator believed that very ardently.

Mr. CAPEHART. Who said that?

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I made the same argument as the one now being made by the Senators on the Republican side, that there should be a compliance with the Reorganization Act, that they were not complying with it at that time, and that the country was entitled to know. I did not mean I was going to support the Republican position. You had not complied with the Reorganization Act up to that time, and I was merely reminding Members on the Republican side, and the country, of the failure to comply with the mandatory provision about which Senators are talking at this moment. That is all I was doing. That argument is hardly germane to the pending issue. Let us postpone the date and the majority will before that time live up to the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield, in order that I may answer a question asked by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator believe now that the committee and the Senate and the Congress should have more time in which to prepare the legislative budget?

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that for a long time I felt that the reorganization bill as enacted was not wholly satisfactory, but the point I made was that so long as it was the law, we should go ahead on the first of January and attempt to work it out, and we did so. Now we are within 2 or 3 days of the dead line, and the joint committee of which the Senator from Tennessee is the distinguished chairman, have not even had a meeting to make temporary plans. That is my point.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from New Hampshire has changed his opinion somewhat on all these matters within the past year. I read from the RECORD, if the Senator from Michigan will yield for that purpose——

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read from page 1401 of the RECORD, of February 18, 3 days after the time had expired, and nothing had been done.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in one moment. Let me read what the Senator said then. It is very interesting in view of his present position.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to reply, when the Senator is through.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield at the proper time. I do not have the floor, but I am sure the Senator from Michigan will yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, to enable him to reply.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read from the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire:

> For these reasons I restate my firm opinion that section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act, dealing with the legislative budget, should be amended as to the date of presentation. Only at a much later date—

The Senator did not fix April 1, but an even later date at that time. Maybe the 1st of July was in the Senator's mind.

> Only at a much later date, after hearings have been held, after we of the Congress have had ample opportunity to weigh carefully the requests of the President's budget, can we in justice to the country, to the taxpayers, to the departments and agencies involved, and to ourselves, judiciously arrive at a sound estimate of the proper relationship between appropriations, expenditures, revenues, and debt reduction.

I agreed with the Senator's statement at that time. He was in the same situation as I am now in asking for additional time. I think the Senator's views then were better than they are today. I think they were sounder, more reasonable, and better for the country. I think there will be a better report if we have more time in which to make it. Under the circumstances, I am wondering how the Senator can vote against the resolution, or how he can offer an amendment to it fixing the time at March 15, when he asked then not only for more time for the committee, but more time for hearings. The Senator knows that when hearings are begun they take a great deal of time. To be perfectly frank, I hope that the time may be extended to May 1. I do not believe extending the limit to March 15 will give sufficient time. I believe it will be more beneficial to every Senator and to the Nation if more time is given. I think it is really remarkable that there should be any opposition to the resolution. That may be due to the fact that I voted against this provision in the original reorganization bill. I doubted its wisdom then, and when I read section 138 I am more doubtful than ever. I do not think any such legislation as section 138 should ever have been passed; but I very sincerely hope that the joint committee, to which the matter is to be referred, may prepare a report which will make the law effective and not let it be ineffective as it has been during the past 2 years.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield so that I may answer the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Tennessee correctly quoted my remarks from the RECORD, but let me point out to him that the speech he quoted was made on the floor of the Senate on February 18. Why is that date significant? Because on February 9, 6 days before the deadline, the Republican majority of the Congress submitted a resolution to the Senate and the House of Representatives establishing a legislative budget. In other words, we complied with the law. Whether we agreed with all the provisions of the law, we complied with it. I pointed out the defects, and I still stand by my statement. That is why I am today offering an amendment extending the time to March 15, which I am sure will give ample time, when we think of the time the President allowed for the work of the Special Session of the Congress last summer. It might be interesting to note at this time that the President, in calling a Special Session of the Congress last summer, said that within 15 days, Congress could bring about the following program:

1. Reestablishment of an excess-profits tax.
2. Restoration of consumer credit control.
3. Greater authority for Federal Reserve Board to regulate bank credit.
4. Authority to regulate commodity exchange speculation.
5. Authority for allocation and inventory control of scarce commodities.
6. Strengthening of rent controls, and extra appropriations for enforcement.
7. Stand-by rationing authority.
8. Price control authority.
9. Wage control authority.
10. Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill.
11. Federal aid to education.
12. Increase of minimum wage to 75 cents an hour.
13. Fifty-percent increase in old-age pensions, lowering of eligibility age for women from 65 to 60, extension of social security to all not covered now.
14. Amendment of Displaced Persons Act.
15. A United States Government loan for construction of United Nations headquarters.
16. Senate ratification of an international wheat agreement.
17. Extra appropriations for a TVA steam plant and other power projects and removal of certain limitations from the law.
18. Revision of Federal pay schedules.
19. Anti-poll-tax bill.
20. Antilynch bill.
21. FEPC bill.
22. Compulsory health insurance.
23. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, and its replacement with another Truman-endorsed labor-management relations law.
24. Additional farm legislation.
25. Additional reciprocal trade agreements legislation.
26. Additional antitrust legislation.
27. Universal military training.
28. A national science foundation.
29. Approval of the St. Lawrence waterway treaty.

The President had great confidence, apparently, in the power of the Congress to pass that program in 15 days. I am sure that if the President had such great confidence that his program could be accomplished in 15 days, even though the Democratic majority has not done anything to date, and Congress has been in session somewhat longer than 15 days—two times 15 days—a very effective job could be done on the legislative budget by the date fixed in my amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long ago was it since that message was presented to the Congress?

Mr. BRIDGES. I read the President's recommendations to the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long ago was that?

Mr. BRIDGES. The President said that entire program could be completed in approximately 15 days.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that in August?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator be good enough to tell the Senate how many of those recommendations have been enacted into law, or whether any of them were enacted into law within the 15 days referred to?

Mr. BRIDGES. Two of them, in part.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of all those recommendations none was enacted into law in 15 days.

Mr. BRIDGES. The President said:

> Things are getting worse every day. We cannot afford to wait until the next Congress convenes.

So he called Congress into special session and outlined the program to which I have just referred. If it was so urgent in the special session, it is very interesting, to me, that the distinguished leadership of the Democratic Party has not done anything about putting into effect the program which was so necessary 7 months ago, for which the country could not afford to wait. It was very urgent in the summer of 1948, but now it goes into the back recesses of our minds—at least, the minds of the Democratic majority.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New Hampshire has referred to the report of the joint committee last year. I should like to read a resolution to him and ask him a question. I should like to ask him if he thinks it was of any benefit to the Congress in passing upon appropriations:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon present available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1949 will approximate $47,300,000,000 and that expenditures during the said fiscal year should not exceed $37,200,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $26,600,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereinafter made available for obligations in such fiscal year.

I am sure the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will not assert that this report he rather proudly boasts of today was of very much value to our committee or to the Congress.

Mr. BRIDGES. What the Senator read was the resolution, not the report. He referred to it as a report.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is the resolution which the Senator made up from the report. There was really no information. The Senator argued then we did not have sufficient time under the La Follette-Monroney Act, and we have not the time today. All we are asking is that we be allowed more time, and I can assure the Senator and the Senate that if we can have this resolution adopted there will be information in the report which will be of value to the Senate in passing appropriation bills.

I thank the Senator from Michigan for yielding.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, one other question. If the President had sufficient confidence that Congress could pass in 15 days all the measures I have enumerated, does not the Senator think that if we give the committee double the time, to March 15, they can really act on this one matter? I do not want to let the President down in his confidence in the Congress. If he thought all these things could be done in so short a time, I am sure this one little thing could be done by the date I have indicated in my amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Whatever the President may have thought about it before, I am quite sure he is convinced by this time, from the action of the Congress, that it takes more time to carry out this very foolish law, against which I voted.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as a matter of fact the President has already made compliance with the act easy by submitting a budget some $873,000,000 in deficit. The legislative budget could be made up in a few minutes, simply by recommending a reduction in expenditures of $873,000,000 to bring the executive budget into balance. Personally, I think that even greater reductions are possible—the additional savings to be applied to the public debt. But the present leadership does not want to do even so obvious and simple a thing. I confess a suspicion that there is demonstrated here that they are preoccupied in something else—a concern for more and more governmental expenditure with scarcely token acknowledgment of any fiscal philosophy of governmental economy.

I do not propose to be an alarmist with respect to the behavior of certain economic barometers that have been showing storm warnings in the last few days. I submit, however, that the behavior of the commodity market and of the stock exchange and the trend of unemployment in the last few days suggest serious consequences for a loose fiscal policy which any failure to face up to responsibility on the legislative budget represents. I note that already some of the advocates of increased taxation have been brought up short in their thinking by a look at those storm warnings, and the thinking of more sober authorities on taxation has been confirmed and crystallized.

If we in Congress do not set a ceiling upon governmental expenditures according to the purposes of the legislative budget, we are inviting either deficit spending or new taxes. Either consequence could be the influence to send the state of our economy, which is evidently in delicate equilibrium at this moment, over the brink.

Considering the economic state of the Nation at this moment, it appears to me that the proposal to disregard any limitation on expenditures by the majority party is an admission that the present Government spending will continue, or it is an admission that the majority has come face to face with some of the hard facts of economic life and is baffled, confused, and even badly frightened.

Let me restate my opinion that the President's budget is not airtight. It calls for a number of expenditures in new fields, and increases in others. Elimination of some of those newly projected enterprises, or their limitation, and a cut-back on other expenditures to a maximum over-all total, as contained in appropriations for the current fiscal year, would simplify matters as far as the legislative budget is concerned, and, I am certain, would exert a healthy influence upon our economy.

Let me observe, further, that if the majority leadership finds a problem in placing a limitation on expenditures at this time its problem will be immeasurably complicated next year. It may be expected that by that time new projects, contemplated in the present budget, will be in full flood, and demanding more and more sustenance. At the same time there will exist an aggravated threat of possible decline in national income and governmental receipts.

I am in full accord with the senior Senator from New Hampshire when he observes that while the present resolution is submitted as a stopgap measure it is in effect a repealer of the principle and purpose of the legislative budget. I think it is incumbent upon the majority leadership to admit as much. But I do not think that any such abrogation is wise or justifiable.

The legislative budget requires the Congress to call its shots with regard to fiscal policy. That is a sound proposition, as it was conceived to be by its proponents in the Seventy-ninth Congress. But this is no skeet match, and Senators cannot stand here on May 1 with appropriation measures in their final stages and expect to shoot in all directions. By that time any prospect for limiting expenditures will already be a dead pigeon.

I have been dwelling on these remarks on questions of fiscal policy and legislative responsibility for fiscal policy that are involved in this abrogation of the legislative budget. There is involved here also a grave question of legislative integrity and morality, which should command the attention of every one of us on this floor.

The Reorganization Act, with its provision for the legislative budget, was passed as an act of Congress in 1946. It was as binding upon the Congress as any law is binding upon an individual citizen, and certainly every citizen has a right to expect that Congress will observe its own legislation.

Now, however, we are asked to abrogate that law just 5 days before it is to expire, without any notice, and, moreover, without any attempt or gesture to comply with it. There has not even been a meeting of the joint committee on the legislative budget to explore the possibilities of conforming to the law.

Simply because Congress possesses the law-making power it is being asked to assert that power to absolve itself of an imposed responsibility which some apparently find burdensome.

It is perfectly in order, and I think an impelling question, to ask how we, the Congress, can expect individual citizens to obey our laws and not expect to have those citizens appealing to us for last-minute relief in any and every situation where they find the laws' restrictions burdensome upon them.

Here we are, on the 10th day of February, not having had a meeting of the joint committee, never having tried to follow the law at all, and we are asked to abrogate it when it requires action on the 15th. So I say we are asked to abrogate the law.

Now, with only 5 days left before the law requires something to be done, it is proposed that the law be changed so it will have no effect. Mr. President, I say there is involved the question of legislative integrity and legislative morality, which should concern every Member of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, as the Senator who in committee made the motion to advance the date to March 15, the motion which the ranking member of the minority on the committee has made on the floor today, I want to say that I support his motion now made. I made the motion in the committee because I believe that the whole fiscal administrative policy of our Government is far behind the policies which are now common in our States and our municipalities. The States and municipalities, in practically every instance know, when an appropriation is made, where the revenue is coming to pay for it. That is not so in the Federal Government, as its business is now conducted.

The procedure provided for in the La Follette-Monroney Act is a little step forward in an effort to enable Congress to have a better over-all comprehension of the fiscal policy of the Federal Government when appropriation bills are considered. I think it is particularly important this year to have the date set forward, if it is possible to do so, in order that we may have a better idea of the general situation when we come to the huge appropriations we will be asked to make for the armed services and are called upon to determine whether they shall be $15,000,000,000 or more and whether veterans' benefits, shall be increased, and what action shall be taken respecting the new benefits asked for by the President in his state of the Union message.

Furthermore, we confront the problem of housing, and proposals regarding health, education, and other problems. Then, there is the question of universal military training. All these are new proposals. We do not know how much, if provided for, they will cost. We do not know how large the revenues will be with which to pay for them.

So, I think, this year particularly, without any regard to what has been done in the past, that the provision contained in the La Follette-Monroney Act is of great value, and I urge that the date be advanced, and that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] be adopted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I want to associate myself as being in full support with the observations made by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and also my colleague on the Appropriations Committee, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]. As one who comes from a State which does not have deficit spending, I believe that the Federal Government should take steps as quickly as possible to place limitations on what it may spend. If we are ever to get away from deficit spending, we should try to place such limitations on our expenditures.

Mr. President, it may be said that we can pick a figure out of the air and shoot at it; that it would be better for us to shoot at such a figure than not to shoot at all. I was on the joint committee which brought out such a report a year ago, a report which was severely criticized because it was said that supporting evidence for it was lacking. I took that criticism rather well, because even though there was not full supporting evidence, yet in the figure submitted to the Congress of the United States we at least had something to shoot at.

I was particularly interested in the argument advanced by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] relative to keeping faith with the La Follette-Monroney Act. Whether it can be complied with or cannot be complied with, what is now proposed to be done by extending the date to May 1 is to circumvent the intention of the Reorganization Act.

I think all of us will agree—I am sure the majority leader, because of his long service in the Senate, will agree with me—that if the time is extended until May the hearings will have been had in the House on most of the regular appropriation bills. The regular appropriation bills will then come over to the Senate at practically the time when a ceiling is established, and by that time the amounts of the appropriation bills in large measure will have been determined. So in reality what is proposed to be done now is a complete circumvention of what is intended by the spirit of the Reorganization Act.

I followed rather closely what was done last year respecting the ceiling, because I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and it has been a privilege for me to have served under the chairmanship of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and also the chairmanship of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who was chairman for the past 2 years. I followed the proceedings closely in an effort to try to solve this one great problem.

Mr. President, at this point I should like to place in the RECORD a statement respecting appropriation bills, to show what will actually happen if the date is extended until the first of May. On May 5, 1947, the following appropriation bills had been reported in the House. House bill 1968, the urgent deficiency bill. House bill 2436, Treasury-Post Office, 1948. House bill 2700, Labor-Federal Security, 1948. House Joint Resolution 154, hoof-and-mouth disease. House Joint Resolution 159, to supply deficiencies. House bill 2849, first deficiency. House bill 3123, Interior Department, 1948.

House bill 3245, second deficiency, 1947.

House bill 3311, State, Justice, Commerce, 1948.

In other words, there were nine appropriation bills on which the evidence had been taken. The bills came to the House ready for final passage. So the ceiling would not have applied in that instance. Perhaps it would not have been possible to do any better anyway.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. When were those bills passed?

Mr. WHERRY. They were passed afterward, but they had been reported by May 5, 1947.

Mr. McKELLAR. They were passed long afterward, were they not?

Mr. WHERRY. They had to come to the Senate after they were passed by the House, and it was necessary to have conferences. They were all passed after May 1.

Mr. McKELLAR. What percentage of the money appropriations for that year did those bills constitute?

Mr. WHERRY. I did not compare the nine bills with all other appropriation bills.

Mr. President, I have before me a summary on the question asked by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. If there is no objection, I should like to have it placed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let us consider what happened in the case of the appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1948. By May 4, 1948—and if this resolution is adopted, the time will be extended to May 1—the following appropriation bills had been reported to the House—and there were more in 1948 than there were in 1947, reported by May 4.

House bill 5214, independent offices. That is quite a sizable appropriation.

House bill 5524, Army civil functions. The distinguished Senator will agree with me that that is a pretty heavy appropriation bill.

House bill 5525, urgent deficiency, 1948.

House bill 5607, State-Justice-Commerce.

House bill 5728, Labor-Federal Security.

House bill 5770, Treasury-Post Office.

House bill 5883, Agriculture.

House Joint Resolution 355, foreign aid—tax refunds.

House bill 6055, first deficiency, 1948.

House bill 6226, supplemental national defense, 1948.

House bill 6355, supplemental Federal Security Agency, 1949.

House bill 6430, District of Columbia.

The point I wish to make is that before the ceiling could be complied with, if the date were extended to May 1, if we did our work well in the House and Senate, another list of appropriation bills would be either acted upon or ready for action. The evidence would have been heard, and the figures would have been arrived at. There would be no opportunity to cut them, even though the ceiling might require that they be cut. In that respect we would circumvent the spirit of the act by extending the date under this resolution until May 1, when the appropriation bills would come up before the ceiling is established.

I merely make the point to show that if the time is extended in accordance with the pending resolution, the force and effect of the law will be lost. It will be of no particular service, because the appropriations will have been made. We shall have to appropriate the total amount, regardless of the ceiling.

It is my judgment that if this resolution is adopted, and additional authorizations are provided, we shall have to continue deficit spending. The only way to eliminate it is to establish a figure and say, "This is what we are going to receive, and this is all we can spend," and then keep within that figure. At least we can attempt to do so. By proceeding in the manner which has been suggested, when we pass the various appropriations and add them up, if we do not have the revenue we must resort to deficit spending to pay for the appropriations approved by both Houses, regardless of what the ceiling ought to be, based upon an inventory of income.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the House, and each member of the House Appropriations Committee serve on the joint committee? Will they not have all the information by May 1, or whenever the time comes for the passage of an appropriation bill by the House? The House committee will have such information if the joint committee is able to reach a conclusion by that time.

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to that observation by my distinguished colleague, for whom I have the highest respect, let me say that of course there will be more information than we now have. But the point I make is that if the time under this resolution is extended to May 1, there will be no ceiling. The appropriation bills will be passed. Hearings will have been held, and the amounts will have been arrived at, in most cases. Then if we pass additional authorizations, which we might do, additional appropriations will be required, and the very spirit of the Reorganization Act, with which we are pledged to keep faith, will have been violated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Congress follow the recommendation of the ceiling on appropriations last year?

Mr. WHERRY. I believe that the Congress did its level best not only to follow the ceiling but to cut the cost of Government and save as much money as possibly could be saved. In addition, it endeavored to pay as much as possible on the debt. I believe that the Congress kept faith with the figure which was pulled out of the air, whether it could be justified or not. I agree that today we possibly cannot justify each and every figure that might be placed in the budget; but I hope we can adopt a ceiling, and thereby make an effort to place the Federal Government on a sound financial basis.

If I may be indulged for referring to my own State, I wish to pay a compliment to the State of Nebraska, which has a balanced budget. It does not know what it is to have deficit spending. It knows what its revenue will be, and what its expenditures should be, and it keeps within its budget. If we want to protect the financial stability of the Federal Government and keep faith with the spirit of the law, we must keep our expenses within our income. Unless we do so, we must continue deficit spending, which, as it continues to rise, threatens the destruction of the financial stability of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator's State on having a balanced budget and looking after its finances in the way it does.

The Senator seems to lay great stress on the question of the limit on spending which the committee established last year. Is it not true that the Congress of last year wholly disregarded the limit set, and appropriated far beyond that limit?

Mr. WHERRY. There were additional authorizations, such as that for ERP, and there were other legislative requirements. There will probably be additional requirements this year. We cannot possibly anticipate everything. I have a great deal of sympathy with the viewpoint which the distinguished Senator expresses in that regard. However, that should not prevent us from trying to establish a ceiling and pare appropriations to keep them within what we feel should be the limit of expenditure in the light of the income we expect to receive.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator desires to pare appropriations. I believe the Senator will joint the Senator from Tennessee in cutting appropriations to the greatest extent possible, and saving as much money as possible for the American people and the American Government.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the resolution as it is presented, and in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

I wish to be perfectly frank in discussing this situation, with particular reference to the value of section 138 of the Congressional Reorganization Act of 1946.

Of course, the purpose of the section, Mr. President, is perfectly clear from its context. The Congress has directed that the four committees of Congress who deal with the fiscal affairs of the Government shall meet immediately after each Congress convenes; they are authorized and directed to meet jointly and—now I quote from the section—> after study and consultation, giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective Houses a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year.

Mr. President, I call attention to two words there. The first one is "budget"; the second is the word "estimated." Mr. President, a budget is a financial statement of expected receipts and expected disbursements. It is not a summary; it is not an accounting of things already past. It is an attempt to plan for the future so that the fiscal affairs in question may be orderly, so that those in authority may approach their problems with at least some general plan with reference to their solution. That is what the budget is for.

I submit that with reference to the Congress, the type of budget contemplated in this section is not of too great value. I recognize that the estimates may be considerably off from the facts, as they later develop. But, Mr. President, so far as anticipated revenue is concerned, that is not true. Certainly, with all the information available to the Treasury Department and to the joint committees on Internal Revenue taxation, and all available to the four committees, acting jointly, which are directed to proceed under this section, those committees could have followed and can follow the direction of section 138. They could have reported and they still can report to the Congress a close estimate of the income of the Federal Government for the coming fiscal year. That could be estimated. It may be that the committees would have to go somewhat into the realm of guess with reference to anticipated or expected expenditures; but, Mr. President, even there in this Congress those committees should be in a far better position to make that estimate than the corresponding committees in the Eightieth Congress ever were. The majority in this Congress is of the same political faith as the Chief Executive. The majority has access to the leader of its party, who at this time is also Chief Executive of the United States. Certainly, with the close liaison which must exist between the executive department and the legislative department when both are of the same political complexion, we could expect the American people to be given some reasonably sound estimate as to where the party in power expects to take those people. Let me say, Mr. President, that the Eightieth Congress did not have that kind of a break.

Let me call attention, further, to the fact that the Eightieth Congress, even without any information from the Chief Executive except what was contained in his budget, was able to present to the President and to the people of the United States its best judgment as to both expenditures and income for both the fiscal years 1948 and 1949, and to do so substantially by the date called for in the statute, the 15th day of February. Mr. President, I say it can be done if there is a will to do it. It can be done if those in the majority believe that the law should be carried out, even when they differ with it and its wisdom. It can be done because it has been done.

Mr. President, I further call attention to the fact that last year, after the budget had been submitted to the Congress and to the people of the United States, and after the majority had done its best to comply with the section now under consideration, and after the two Houses of Congress had struggled to get together on the question, the Eightieth Congress was faced with supplemental and additional requests for appropriations, totaling $9,947,768,096.79 — appropriations coming to the Congress after the Congress had wrestled with and reached the best conclusion it could as to a budget it believed sound. Of that amount, Mr. President, $8,998,964,535.87 was appropriated by the second session of the Eightieth Congress. Only a part of that amount was in contemplation at the time when the Congress went into session and was handed the President's budget. At that time it was contemplated that there would be an additional appropriation during the year for the Economic Cooperation Administration, in the amount of approximately $6,000,000,000; but the request for the other $3,000,000,000 came out of the blue sky, so far as the Eightieth Congress was advised when it opened its second session.

As a part of those supplemental or additional requests, there were 586 different items for consideration by the Appropriations Committees. That situation prevailed last year. It should not prevail this year. Certainly there can be a degree of cooperation between the Chief Executive and the administration and the majority in the two Houses of Congress which will at least permit the Congress to be advised by the majority as to what the majority expects from the Congress in a financial way at the present session.

Mr. President, if there be any real value in the type contemplated in section 138 of the Reorganization Act, if there be any value there, it lies in the action being taken by the joint committee early enough in the year to advise the Congress and particularly the Appropriations Committees of what the facts are. If those committees cannot have that information sufficiently early in the year so at least it may be, as the minority leader suggested, a target at which to shoot at least, they had just as well not have it at all. The thought of presenting a budget of anticipated expenditures on the 1st day of May and having any value to it is nonsense.

Mr. President, the majority, when they undertake that kind of delay, seek to present us with a budget with reverse English on it. They are using their future for a bustle; like a wahoo bird that flies backward and has no interest in where he is going but only from where he has come. They say they will present to us an estimate after the fact itself. All that can be presented then, Mr. President, is an accounting, so far as value to the Congress is concerned.

Let us take a look and see if that statement is not borne out by the record. In 1948, first in the month of January, one appropriation bill was reported by the committee on the House side, and in February, was passed by the House. In February three other appropriation bills were reported to the House, two of them passed in February, and the third one, in March. In the month of March, five bills were reported to the House, and of those five, four were passed in March, and one in April. All these bills I have just mentioned, if we may expect at least as much speed and diligence this year as the Republican-controlled Congress gave us last year, if we may expect at least like diligence, all those bills will have been considered by the committees, reported to the Houses, and passed at least by the House long before any consideration whatever is given to a budget which is expected to bring to us anticipated expenditures.

Let us get the rest of the record. In April two more bills were reported to the Houses, one passed by the House and one of those also passed by the Senate; nine bills had been passed by the House and passed by the Senate before the 1st day of May, according to the record. Now, Mr. President, again I say, if the budget can have any value—and certainly there should be some value to a committee working day after day, and night after night, and week after week, on these involved and complex appropriation bills, running into the billions of dollars—certainly there must be some value to it in at least having from the Congress of which it is member, and the Congress to which it must report, some word, some direction as to at least a target toward which it should aim in its consideration of those several thousand items in those estimates. But I say if it can have any value—and that value I contend it does have—then the word of the Congress, as expressed in the committee report required under section 138, and the resolution to accompany it, should be providently made, so the committees may begin their work with at least knowledge at the time they commence as to what the views of the two Houses are. That was the thought when the section was put in the law, and certainly there has been nothing shown to the Senate today to justify the emasculation of the statute in the way that is here suggested. It is utterly impotent, it is meaningless, unless action can be had. And, Mr. President, there is no answer in coming here today and confessing that there has been no diligence on the part of the majority in doing the job, by saying we have only 5 days. It is 45 days, Mr. President, that were available. If there be only five left, and nothing done, then let the responsibility rest where it should rest. Even so, we are faced with a situation, and I accept the confession from the other side of the aisle, and agree nothing has been done, not even a meeting called to discuss the matter—we are faced with that situation, then we must take such action as is necessary to correct the condition that never should have existed. The amendment offered here gives an additional 30 days in which to do the job that should be completed this week. That, added to the 45 that has gone, should have certainly enough time for the job to be done. Better, Mr. President, if we cannot have the legislative budget in time to use it, that we do nothing at all. Better to ignore the section entirely than to come in at the end of the extended time, flying backward, looking where you have been, with no thought as to where you are going.

Between now and the 15th day of March is adequate time in which to do this job. I am under no illusions, Mr. President, regarding the passage of the amendment, but I hope that the people of the United States will be under no illusion as to whether it should have passed. I think that is the point.

There is one other thing, Mr. President, and I am through. The action, or lack of action, to date, has, to me, an ominous implication. The pending resolution was not born, Mr. President, out of the old type of meeting of the majority and the minority which should always precede action in legislative bodies. There has been no attempt even to call the committees together. I am sure my good friend from Tennessee was not serious in attempting to excuse the failure by suggesting that the law did not indicate which chairman should call the meeting. A Republican-controlled Congress got by that objection for 2 years. Whether there be uncertainty or ambiguity in the law or not, there seems to have been found by the other side and the chairmen in question some way of cooperation in determining not to have a meeting and in urging concerted agreement as to a date definite on which to make a report under the same ambiguous and uncertain law.

Mr. President, it would appear clear that there has been no attempt to comply with the rule until the other House acted on the resolution. That was at least acting within the rule by attempting to avoid it by extension. That we have a perfect right to do. The section referred to is a rule of the Senate and a rule of the House, and we may abide by our rules or may amend them by unanimous consent. But until that resolution came in, nothing had been done. I say, Mr. President, that no minority member of the committee, to my knowledge, was consulted at any time with reference to the matter, or ever given an opportunity to present whatever views he may have had on the over-all subject.

I hope, Mr. President, that that action does not carry the implication it seems to carry. I realize that a majority can become so great and remain a majority so long that it can, in reprehensible arrogance, act in utter disregard of the minority. Let us at least carry out the forms of cooperation. Let us give to the minority at least a chance to be heard, no matter what our voting strength may be.

Mr. President, I wish I could hope that the amendment offered by my friend, the senior Senator from New Hampshire, will be adopted. I believe it would be for the best interests of majority, minority, Chief Executive, and the people as a whole, if it should be adopted. I believe that in that way only can we get even a scintilla of value out of a congressional legislative budget. But I have not that hope, more is the pity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Anderson | Hunt | O'Mahoney |
| Bridges | Ives | Pepper |
| Broughton | Johnson, Colo. | Robertson |
| Cain | Johnson, Tex. | Russell |
| Capehart | Johnston, S. C. | Saltonstall |
| Chapman | Kefauver | Schoeppel |
| Chavez | Kerr | Smith, Maine |

| Hill | Miller | Withers |
| Hoey | Morse | Young |
| Holland | Neely | |
| Humphrey | O'Conor | |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] are absent on official committee business.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is absent on official business at one of the Government departments.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is paired on this question with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN]. If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Connecticut would vote "yea."

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "nay," and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea."

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is paired on this question with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay," and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay," and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea."

If present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] is absent on official business and is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is absent on official business and is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. If present and voting, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is detained on official committee business and is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—24

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Bridges | Ives | Smith, N. J. |

So Mr. BRIDGES' amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 22) was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I realize the problems which confront a majority leader in getting legislation before the Senate. I am satisfied that when the majority leader made the announcement, on page 980 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on Tuesday last, that when the Senate concluded its business on that it was planned to adjourn until Thursday, and that he saw no reason why the Senate should be here for any considerable length of time on Thursday, he made it in the best of faith. Many Members on this side, feeling that important business would not be taken up, are not in the Senate Chamber today. I am not complaining at all about bringing up the legislation which has been considered, but I am sure that if Members on this side had known that it was to be considered they would have been present to cast their votes.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING TIME FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in line with what the distinguished minority leader has said, yesterday I called him with respect to the next bill for which I shall ask consideration. He advised me that he thought there would be no objection to taking up the bill at this time. In fact, he advised me that he had conferred with the ranking minority member of the District Committee, who had no objection to the consideration of the bill.

With that understanding, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 135, which is a bill to authorize the Board of Commissioners in the District of Columbia to establish daylight-saving time in the District.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 135) to authorize the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight-saving time in the District.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 135) to authorize the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight-saving time in the District.

ACTIVITIES OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION IN THE COMMODITY MARKETS

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, yesterday in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry Secretary of Agriculture Brannan made the following statement:

> It has been said in connection with wheat that perhaps one explanation of the downward trend in the price of wheat was the withdrawal of the Government from the market. That is an unadulterated fallacy.

Mr. Brannan pointed out that the Commodity Credit Corporation had not pulled out from price support in any manner in the wheat market. At the same time, he announced to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that he was taking steps to investigate the commodity exchanges of the country for speculative accounts.

What Mr. Brannan failed to discuss before the committee was the activities of the Commodity Credit Corporation in the corn market. As everyone knows, the break in the corn market is what precipitated the recent break in commodity prices. I have checked the record of the Commodity Credit Corporation in the corn market, and I find that while it is true the Commodity Credit Corporation did not pull out of the wheat market, it withdrew almost entirely from the corn market. Here are the facts:

During the week of February 4, 1949, the week in which the commodity markets started to break, the Commodity Credit Corporation had cut purchases of corn 93 percent below the average purchases for the four preceding weeks, that is, the month of January. The record of their purchases by weeks through the last 4 weeks' period shows that during the week ending January 14, the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased 5,190,660 bushels, and during the week ending January 21 the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased 16,024,950 bushels of corn.

In the week ending January 28, it purchased 6,644,263 bushels. However, last week, the week in which the commodity markets broke, it cut its purchases back to 512,810 bushels, or a cut back of 93 percent. So Secretary Brannan's statement that the Commodity Credit Corporation had not pulled from under the market is completely out of line.

Breaking this information down from the operations in the markets, I find that on the Chicago market the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased, in the week ending January 28, 3,982,000 bushels of corn. Last week the purchases were reduced to 386,500 bushels.

In Kansas City, week before last, the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased 2,562,263 bushels. Last week the purchases dropped to 126,310 bushels. These figures are a complete denial of Secretary Brannan's statement that the Commodity Credit Corporation had not withdrawn from the market.

The Secretary also failed to discuss operations in flour. In connection with flour, we find that during the week ending January 28, 1949, the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased 20,000,000 pounds, and in the week ending February 4, 1949, the week when the commodity markets broke, their purchases dropped to 4,430,000 pounds, or about 80 percent.

I make that observation merely because in the investigation of these exchanges I think the Secretary should also call for detailed operations on the corn market during the last 2 weeks, particularly to find out who, if anyone, in the Administration profited by this break.

The statement has also been made that perhaps some of this recent commodity break was due to a provision written by the Eightieth Congress — they always come back to that—in the European recovery program. That provision authorized or required the Secretary of Agriculture to maintain a 150,000,000-bushel wheat carry-over. I should like to read that provision for the information of the Senate:

> The funds authorized herein shall not be made available or used to acquire a quantity of wheat, wheat flour, and cereal grain in the United States which, after taking into consideration the amount estimated for export to other countries and the amount needed for domestic consumption in the United States, will leave a carry-over of less than 150,000,000 bushels of wheat on July 1, 1948, unless the estimates of the President after March 1, 1948, justify an increase in the amount available for export to the recipient countries, with full production for domestic needs.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. The provision which the Senator is now discussing is obsolete.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct, but Secretary Brannan yesterday used it as an excuse.

Mr. YOUNG. A former Secretary stated that a 150,000,000-bushel carry-over was too much. I agree with that. The present Secretary believes that we should have 300,000,000 bushels or more, which I believe is a depressing factor on the market.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. How does the Senator explain the fact that two distinguished Secretaries of Agriculture in President Truman's Cabinet disagree? Former Secretary Anderson, who is now a distinguished Member of this body, made the statement under oath before the committees that 150,000,000 bushels was a sufficient carry-over. Now a man who is equally prominent in the Cabinet, and who holds the same position, says that a carry-over of 300,000,000 bushels is necessary. What has occurred in the United States in the meantime to make those two distinguished Secretaries at variance to the extent of 100 percent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I prefer to yield to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], former Secretary of Agriculture. Perhaps he would care to reply to the question.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, the situation clearly revolves around the needs of other countries. At a time when the people of the world were very much in need of grain, it seemed unwise to have in this country a carry-over of 150,000,000 bushels of wheat. We had found in 1946 and 1947 that from 83,000,000 to 85,000,000 bushels, or approximately those amounts, was sufficient.

The very able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] protested the requirement of 150,000,000 bushels, and his position was stanchly defended by the then Secretary of Agriculture. Yesterday the Senator from North Dakota read into the records of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a letter from the then Secretary of Agriculture, a year ago, in which the statement was made that if a carry-over of 150,000,000 bushels were available, plus heavy crops coming in future years, we might see wheat prices break through support prices within a year. It is just about a year from the time that letter was written, and wheat prices did drop through the support prices.

Secretary Brannan in his testimony was saying that 300,000,000 bushels was not an unusually large amount for this country to carry over for national security purposes. The testimony of the former Secretary of Agriculture was that 150,000,000 bushels was not necessary; and the experience of the last year surely proves that to be true, and proves the correctness of the position taken by the very fine Senator from North Dakota in trying to defend the interests of his people. If we had been permitted to send 75,000,000 bushels to people who badly needed it a year ago, those 75,000,000 bushels would not now be plaguing the market.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a question: Does he really believe that had this provision been left out of the European recovery program legislation, 75,000,000 bushels would have been sent?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am sure that of the 75,000,000 bushels, 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 bushels would have been sent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator thinks that additional wheat would have been sent?

Mr. ANDERSON. I know it would have been.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator knows it?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to continue to quote from the law, showing that the President had full authority after March 1, 1948, to have reduced this carry-over:

> Unless the estimates of the President after March 1, 1948, would justify an increase in the amount available for export to recipient countries, with full adjustment for domestic needs.

In other words, under the law which the former Secretary of Agriculture supported, and which the present Secretary of Agriculture has criticized, the President had actual authority, after March 1, 1948, to reduce that 150,000,000 bushels.

I ask the Senator from New Mexico, the former Secretary of Agriculture, whether he wishes to deny that the President had this authority.

Mr. ANDERSON. The President of the United States could have tried to survey and certify as to the needs of the various countries; but the shipping schedules for shipments in May are not established in the month of May. One begins to order steamers on berth as early as February, for grain which is intended to be shipped in June, and the program is formed a long time in advance. Once the program is formed and once grain starts to move from the farms and the elevators, it is a long time before it reaches port.

If that provision had not been in effect, until we found out the size of the crop in June—and it is not until June that we know the size of the winter-wheat crop—it would not have been possible to make the exports in June. The planning cannot be done at the last moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I realize that the planning cannot be done at the last moment; but for 4 months the President of the United States had full authority to cut down the figure as much as he wished.

The Senator from New Mexico and former Secretary of Agriculture now states that they wanted to ship more wheat to Europe, and yet the report of the Secretary of Agriculture shows that on July 1 the carry-over of wheat was, not 150,000,000 bushels, but 196,000,000 bushels, or 46,000,000 bushels more than required by law on March 1. Yet the carry-over was not cut back to 150,000,000 bushels, and the additional 46,000,000 bushels was not shipped abroad.

Mr. ANDERSON. That very fact was pointed out to the committee, and it was stated that it is impossible so accurately to judge the shipments and purchases as to come out with an exact 150,000,000 bushels. So, in order to be safe, we ran beyond that amount, to the extent of the additional 46,000,000 bushels.

The then Secretary of Agriculture pointed out to the Congress more than a year ago that the existence of that limitation would make it extremely difficult to come out exactly at that figure; and that is how the additional carry-over of 46,000,000 bushels arose.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to say that had the former Secretary of Agriculture gone below the limitation, he would have gotten into trouble with many influential Members of Congress at the time.

I believe that the mistake was not too serious a one. It was only a 150,000,000-bushel limitation and probably 100,000,000 bushels would have been carried over anyway. But I think the mistake of the present Secretary of Agriculture is a serious one.

A few moments ago the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] said that Secretary Brannan was holding the 300,000,000 bushels for security reasons. That is almost entirely aside from the argument made by Secretary Brannan before our committee, although he did mention it. His position was that the 300,000,000 bushels was not surplus, and would not have a depressing influence on the market—with which position I did not agree.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. As I understand from what the Senator from North Dakota has said—and, of course, two men of differing views cannot positively be right in every respect—he thinks the former Secretary of Agriculture, the present distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], was correct, and the present Secretary of Agriculture is wrong. Is that the impression he wished to leave?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes. Three hundred million bushels of wheat is a surplus in my opinion and will have a lasting depressing effect on grain prices. There certainly is a difference of opinion on this subject between the present and former Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to point out the fact that the Department of Agriculture did not have to be so cautious about this 150,000,000-bushel figure after March 1. It was purely within the discretion of the President of the United States. Prior to March 1 they did have to be cautious; but for 4 months before July 1 they could have increased their shipments so as to include a substantial part of this 150,000,000 bushels. The Department of Agriculture was at that time reporting that we had a bumper wheat crop coming.

I wish to defend, first, the provision of the 150,000,000 bushels as security. I did go along with the former Secretary of Agriculture in the bill that we cut it to 120,000,000 bushels. The House never acted on this bill since it was found that the President already had ample authority, without any further direction from Congress, after March 1, to ship any amount of wheat he wanted to ship.

I do not wish to say that it is his fault that he did not, but I do not want him to be coming back to Congress and saying that it is our fault, as I have clearly demonstrated.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if any mistakes were made in congressional action as to the amount of carry-over last year, the authorities in charge added to that problem by going to Canada and, with the use of ECA funds, purchasing 151,000,000 bushels of wheat, which has added that much to the problem facing us at the present time, in view of the present high carry-over of wheat.

It seems unreasonable, in my opinion, that after the Congress appropriated funds in support of European recovery, the authorities should take some of those tax dollars and go to Canada and there purchase wheat in the amount of 151,000,000 bushels to supply the needs under the European recovery program, when at the same time we had in our country more than 300,000,000 bushels of wheat, which are depressing our market in the manner in which it has been depressed in the past week.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his observation. I agree with him 100 percent.

I wish to point out that the authorities were buying more wheat from Canada than they were from American sources, under the European Recovery Act, for a limited period.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I hope the Senator is very sure of his facts. Five hundred million bushels was to come from the United States, and 150,000,000 bushels from Canada.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said "for a limited period."

Mr. ANDERSON. There is no period for which that was true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over how long a period was the 150,000,000 bushels spread?

Mr. ANDERSON. It began somewhere in June 1948 and continues to the present time, with approximately 30,000,000 bushels yet to be delivered.

During the same period, more than 400,000,000 bushels have moved from the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, during the month of November there were purchased in this country 14,169,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is below the average monthly purchases for the 150,000,000 bushel total, if the total is divided by months. I do not say all of it was done at once; I said it was done in periods.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to say to him that the pattern of purchases of grain depends on the geography of the area in which the grain is being purchased. Some 900,000,000 bushels or more of grain grown in the United States is produced in the winter wheat areas, and that winter wheat is purchased at the time it is ready. The distinguished Senator from Kansas knows that when his great Kansas winter wheat crop, which this year was in excess of 200,000,000 bushels and was a very large crop in view of the crop predictions, became available, it was necessary to move large quantities of it immediatey, and that wheat was purchased immediately.

Therefore, from the 900,000,000 bushels or so of the winter wheat crop, a great quantity is purchased in the winter wheat areas by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and stored for later shipment. We then move into the spring wheat area, and the dividing line in Nebraska marks off the spring wheat area. We then move into the area where spring wheat is purchased. The wheat from the State of the Senator from Minnesota and the two Senators from North Dakota is then bought, and when that crop is over, we come into the area where Canadian wheat moves into the market and the Commodity Credit Corporation bought the Canadian wheat when it was available, and not in a regular pattern, month by month.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me say that is correct; but what I was pointing out is that there are periods in which you are buying more wheat from Canadian farmers than you were from the American farmers during the period of this operation. I do not think the Senator will dispute that. There were limited periods there. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. I gather from what the able Senator says that the present Secretary of Agriculture is blaming the Eightieth Congress. Of course, there is nothing surprising about that. I should likewise suppose he is blaming former President Hoover. But my question is, What are we going to do about the decline in farm prices? Corn, I understand, is below $1 a bushel and wheat is getting far below $2 a bushel. What are we going to do about it?

I should like to make this comment: It has not much to do perhaps with foreign wheat, but I notice that ECA recently purchased $240,000 worth of potato diggers in the United States and gave them to France. I remember as a youngster when I lived on a farm, I used to dig potatoes by hand, but I notice that our great Government here has just spent $240,000 of the taxpayers' money to buy potato diggers and give them to France. The whole thing is silly. It is ridiculous. The statement the Senator made a moment ago that the prices of farm products have been going up and down, as in direct response to the amount of purchases made by the Government. Do we have in this great Nation a false, synthetic economy where a bureaucrat can sit in Washington and buy or sell grains and push the price up and down and wreck tens and tens of thousands of farmers throughout the United States, and businessmen? Can he sit here in Washington and pull the strings, as the Senator indicated a minute ago, at least for the RECORD, that he had done, and buy, and, if he does not buy, the price goes down? Are 18,000,000 farmers at the mercy now of some bureaucrat who sits in Washington and pulls strings and pushes prices up one month and pulls them down the next month? Is that the sort of economy we have in this country? Is that what we actually have, or am I wrong?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Indiana can answer that about as well as I can, because frankly I do not know what kind of operations they are trying to conduct down there. When we stop to think that on the corn program, getting back to corn, which the Secretary of Agriculture yesterday, before the committee, was very careful not to mention—he talked about wheat; he did not talk about flour, he did not tell them about cutting back the purchases of flour that week 80 percent. He talked about wheat, and what he said about wheat was accurate. He did not tell them that the average purchases for the four preceding weeks on corn was 7,700,000 bushels. He did not tell them that he cut their corn purchases back 93 percent for the week of February 4, the week in which the corn market started this landslide.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am very happy the Senator brought up the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture had stopped his purchases, because I remember quite distinctly that immediately after the grain market toppled on February 6, a year ago, a Senator rose in his place in this assemblage and very sharply criticized the then Secretary of Agriculture for, he said, moving then by purchases to stop the downward price of grains.

Am I to understand the Senator to suggest that the Secretary of Agriculture should have used his purchasing powers in the corn market to stop the decline of corn prices? Will the Senator answer that question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I will answer that question in exactly the same answer I gave a year ago, a copy of which I have with me. If we want to get back to discuss that, we will do that also. I will answer that in the same manner, and that is that the purchases of the Commodity Credit Corporation for foreign relief should not be conducted in any manner to influence the markets.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is entirely correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But we are faced here today with a situation where the purchases for the foreign relief have been conducted in a manner to influence the markets, because, deliberately, somebody gave an order to pull the plugs from under the corn market the week of February 4, when they cut back their purchases 93 percent. That did not just happen; somebody gave that order. Now, who gave it, and why?

Mr. ANDERSON. I may suggest to the Senator that a year ago the same sort of speech was made here, and the time of the Senate and of the House was consumed with investigations of speculations in the commodity markets. The Senate committee that conducted that investigation—I have forgotten now who was chairman of the committee—filed, a short time ago, a report, and it certainly could not have been a report designed to defend the then Secretary of Agriculture, because it came from the Eightieth Congress, which was under the control of an opposite political party. But in a very fine report it was pointed out that after weeks and months of study they were unable to find one trace of evidence that there had been speculation from the inside in that transaction. That is a matter of official record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is right—that is a matter of official record, and pretty much the same report will come from the investigation which was suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture yesterday, if it is carried out the way he suggested, and that is to check only the purchases of wheat. I said before, and I repeat, I see nothing wrong with the purchases of wheat. They form a pattern as near on a level as could be expected. I do see something wrong with the purchases of corn, when it is admitted that in 1 week their purchases declined 93 percent below that of the preceding week. There is some explanation coming on that. I wonder if the former Secretary of Agriculture would wish to comment on that? I should also like to point out this, that at the time the criticism was made a year ago—I think he is referring to a criticism which I myself made—at the time that was made, the wheat market was $3 a bushel, or in that neighborhood, and was considerably above the level which it now is, which completely changes the picture.

Mr. ANDERSON. The point that was then made was that there was a difference in the criticisms leveled at the then Secretary of Agriculture. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] raised the question as to whether or not there had been a press release designed to bolster the market. At the same time, a Member of the House from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] said that the Secretary was allowing prices to crash. The point the Department tried to make was that when there is a break in the grain market, it is not a function of the Department of Agriculture to use its foreign purchasing program to aid one group of speculators or the other, but the wise course is to stay out of the grain market until prices seem stabilized, and then move back in and resume purchases. Otherwise, it is joining sides with one group of speculators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to refer the statement released to the press yesterday by Mr. Brannan in which he said that as near as his Department could figure without having an opportunity to study the reports of the Chicago board, the break was caused by untrue reports "that the Commodity Credit Corporation had withdrawn from the market."

Does the former Secretary of Agriculture still claim as true the statement made by Secretary Brannan yesterday in which he denied reports that the Commodity Credit Corporation had withdrawn from the market, in the face of the facts which I have given showing that he had cut his purchases of corn back 93 percent?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am pleased to say to the distinguished Senator that I am happy not to know whether the Secretary of Agriculture now is in the market or not. I am happy to be free from that responsibility, and I do not know whether he is buying or whether he is not buying, but I do know that the publication of a report that he had stopped buying would drop grain prices immediately, and that report was a false report.

The satisfying thing in this connection is that a great majority of the farmers have either placed their wheat under loan or have sold it prior to the period when the loan became effective. So far as corn is concerned, I am sure the Senator knows that every farmer who now holds corn which is not of extremely high moisture content can, at any time between now and the 30th day of June, get a corn loan to the full amount of his parity loan, and is not disturbed at all by the dropping price.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in reply I happen to have in my hand a copy of the so-called false report which was issued, claiming that the Commodity Credit Corporation had withdrawn from the market. This report was published by the Commodity Credit Corporation itself. It says, in part:

> The Commodity Credit Corporation bought 2,466,349 bushels of wheat, 512,810 bushels of corn, 224,927 bushels of grain sorghums, and 50,000 bushels of rye during the period from noon of January 28 through February 4.

This report was issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, through the Production and Marketing Administration itself. I have a copy of the report in my hand.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is it a fact or is it not a fact that some one gentleman can sit in Washington and raise or lower the prices of grains in America?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a fact that it is being done.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does the Senator say that that is a fact?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is my opinion.

Mr. CAPEHART. One man can sit here in Washington, then, and govern and set the price which I am to receive on my farm for the grain which I raise. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Whether it is one man or a board I do not know, but it is a fact that the control is in Washington.

Mr. CAPEHART. Who is to blame for the falling grain prices at the moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know. I am merely stating the facts as to the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the past 3 or 4 weeks, which completely contradict the statement which the Secretary of Agriculture made yesterday that the Commodity Credit Corporation had not withdrawn from the market. The Secretary yesterday discussed wheat, and there was nothing wrong with his testimony in that respect. The fault lies in the fact that he did not tell what happened as to corn.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. With respect to the statement that there is one man in Washington who can control farm prices, I think it is substantially true, so far as concerns the price which the farmer receives. The Secretary of Agriculture has that authority under the price-support legislation which was subscribed to by both the Democratic and Republican parties. I do not like to hear the program criticized on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not criticizing the program; I am criticizing the administration of it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I have no hesitancy in criticizing the program, because, so far as I am concerned at the moment, prices are going down and the farmers are receiving less. Something is wrong when prices drop as rapidly as prices have dropped in the last few weeks. It is an unsound economy, and something should be done about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know where prices are going. My opinion is that they will go lower and lower, unless this "almighty one" who is sitting in Washington decides to intervene by some magic. I frankly do not know what the magic is. I suppose it will be done with the taxpayers' money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not criticize the principles of the program. I think the administration of it has been handled inefficiently. Perhaps some of the inefficiency has been due to plain ignorance. I know of no other way to put it. Possibly it was deliberate on the part of whoever is handling the matter here. I think it would be most interesting to know who profited by the break. The farmers lost a great deal of money. We know that.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask a question of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON]. I wonder if the Senator did not misspeak himself a few moments ago when he said the farmer could control the loan value of his grain.

Mr. ANDERSON. If I misspoke myself, I thank the Senator for correcting me. Present corn values are below the loan value of corn, and a farmer does not need to sell at the low price. He must have storage, but he does not need to sell his corn below the present loan value.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The able Senator from New Mexico just said the farmer needs to have storage capacity. So far as I know, every ear of corn has been picked and, as we say in Indiana, has been "shucked." It must be stored somewhere. Why cannot the farmer receive the loan value?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not all storage in the United States is approved.

Mr. CAPEHART. Why can it not be approved?

Mr. ANDERSON. Because certain standards of construction are required. Most farmers have sufficient storage for their corn. When there is a very large corn crop, such as that of last year, there may not be adequate storage for it.

Mr. CAPEHART. In each county there is a committee of local men who themselves establish the standards for loans on corn and other grains. They can either raise the standards so high that no farmer can meet them, or they can lower the standards to the point of storage in an improvised crib or other facilities.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is what I have been told by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it is quite that simple. I do not think it can be said that open storage is satisfactory in one place and that there must be airtight storage in another place. Most of the farmer committees are trying to safeguard the farm program.

Mr. CAPEHART. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I was told, and I believe it to be true, that they can loan money and can establish any standards they wish, but if a loan is made on a thousand bushels and 200 bushels are spoiled, the farmer himself would have to pay for the 200 bushels that were spoiled. Those are the facts, are they not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to admonish the Senator from Delaware that he can yield for questions, but he cannot yield to other Senators for the purpose of a running debate on his time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall conclude by saying that the action taken by the Eightieth Congress did not affect the carry-over, particularly in view of the fact that the actual carry-over was 46,000,000 bushels more than was required on July 1, and therefore there was plenty of opportunity to ship out the wheat. The responsibility goes back to the Commodity Credit Corporation and the statement released yesterday in the press, namely, "that the Commodity Credit Corporation had not withdrawn from the market" was wrong. The Commodity Credit Corporation, according to its own records, did withdraw from the market on corn during the week of February 4 to the extent of 93 percent, thus precipitating the sudden collapse of all commodity prices.

THE FARMER'S PLIGHT—MANGANESE AND AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, relative to the debate which has just taken place concerning farmers, and the prices of farm commodities falling, I wish to say that I have received a great many letters and telephone calls within the past few days inquiring again about the prices of the products the farmer has to buy. After World War I farm machinery prices did not go down one single index point. Between World War I and World War II the prices of farm machinery went up and up, and never down, and although the price of wheat dropped from $2.50 a bushel to as low as 19 cents a bushel, in some sections of my State, the prices of farm machinery nevertheless remained away up.

Mr. President, sometimes it seems to me as though the only time that a farmer is consulted is for a few days before election, so that some party may get the farmers' vote, and then, as soon as the election is over, the farmer is again completely forgotten.

What is the situation today. A short time ago a Massey-Harris combine, 12-foot, self-propelled, cost about $3,300. Today one is lucky if he can find a second-hand combine that is in good shape which can be bought for $5,000 or $5,100. And what is true of combines is true of mowers, drills, binders, and all other kinds of farm machinery.

At the present time there are 23,000 telephone poles for REA, but it is not possible anywhere to get wire to put on those 23,000 telephone poles so that the farmer can get electricity into his home, and the farmer's wife can get some of the comforts which the people in the towns and cities enjoy. When a few days ago we had a hearing before the committee of which I am a member, we got the same old answer, that the kind of steel used in the manufacture of wire was not available. Who is to blame for that? Month after month and year after year I have stood upon this floor calling the attention of Senators to the plight of the farmer, how in one county in North Dakota, the county of Hettinger, the farmers lost over a million dollars from being unable to take off their wheat and their flax because their farm machinery was either obsolete, or because they were unable to get parts for the machinery they had.

Mr. President, Americans could not have a more frightening illustration of how suicidal the Truman foreign policy has been, than is contained in the news that Russia is now shutting off her exports of manganese to this country. We must have manganese if we are to have steel. It is shocking to discover that even after 2 years of the cold war our own statesmen have left our domestic economy and our national security almost completely at the mercy of the scheming politicians of the Politburo and of Russia's brutal slave-labor system.

Today, Mr. President, after 18 years of Democratic rule, after 18 years of Democratic Presidents, the United States is still dependent on Russia for 38 percent of our manganese and 42 percent of our chrome.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAGNUSON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LANGER. I will not yield until I conclude. Then I shall be glad to answer any questions.

It now appears that our diplomats have been so intent on appeasing Russia on the one hand, and savagely determining to destroy the steel capacity of Germany on the other, that their efforts to give away our own resources in order to make up for this economy of planned scarcity have led them into a criminal neglect of our own vital interests.

As proof of this shocking state of affairs, we need only remind ourselves that the American steel industry needs 1,500,000 tons of manganese in the coming year if it is to maintain its present high record and produce 96,000,000 tons next year.

Mr. President, what does the record show? It shows that Russia's embargo on manganese has caught our diplomats flat-footed, with less than a year's supply in the Government's stock pile, and less than a 7 months' supply for the entire steel industry. In addition, experts tell us we will need at least 17,000,000 tons in order to defend ourselves if another war should break out.

In the face of these facts President Truman's demand for power to increase Government-operated steel-producing capacity becomes so much hypocritical drivel, for we cannot produce steel without manganese, and at the present moment we produce only 12 percent of our national requirements.

It is time the American people were given the whole story of how this sorry state of affairs has come to be, and who is responsible.

Mr. President, on September 21 in Denver, Colo., President Truman said:

> I know that all of you recognize the importance of creating new industries in this region, using the resources of the West so as to reduce your industrial dependence on the East.

Again on September 22, in the Mormon Tabernacle he said:

> I stand, and the Democratic Party stands, for rapid and uninterrupted development of the land and forest and water and mineral resources of the West.

If one were to take these statements at the face value he would be compelled to believe that our Government has been developing a policy toward the utilization of our natural resources that would enable us to maintain our high standards of living in peacetime and also a self-sufficiency in vital raw materials so necessary for national defense in times of emergency. But what is the true story?

Let us take just the question of manganese. Manganese is an absolutely essential element in the manufacture of steel. It takes 14 pounds of manganese to produce a ton of steel. Contrary to popular belief, created by propaganda, the United States has tremendous resources of manganese ore, running from 8 to 40 percent, located in at least 27 States. Yet, in spite of the fact that manganese is such a critical item in both our peace and war economies, the record shows that the above propaganda only continues to blind the American people to the fact that for the last 18 years the manganese situation has left us still completely at the mercy of foreign sources of supply in 1948.

Where did Jesse Jones put the $120,000,000 when he developed the great plant to produce manganese? He loaned that money to Canada, and, today, when farmers in Oklahoma want to get a little electricity they cannot get the means for having it brought to them. When they try to buy manganese from Canada they cannot obtain it from Canada. Oh, they can secure it on the black market in Mexico. Canada can ship it to Mexico, and it can be bought there by paying the black-market price.

On November 10, 1930, Mr. Adkerson, president of the American Manganese Producers Association, told its third annual convention:

> Today we are drawing our manganese supplies from Brazil, India, Africa, and Russia.

Mind you, Mr. President, Mr. Adkerson, president of the American Manganese Producers Association, made that public statement 18 years ago. He continued:

> Manganese imports from Russia have increased from 3,284 tons, or less than 1 percent of our imports in 1922, to 330,000 tons, or approximately 50 percent of our total imports in 1929. Our country cannot afford to remain dependent upon foreign sources for its supply of manganese.

Mr. Adkerson continued:

> As far back as 1927 I publicly called attention to the fact that the treacherous hand of the Russian Bolshevik would delight in lulling us to sleep with the ease with which manganese is flowing to our shores, filling Red coffers with American gold and then suddenly close in on the sources of supply, while the United States struggles to develop her own manganese resources after the day of opportunity had gone.

With these facts so well known over 18 years ago, it is utterly incredible that today we should find the same situation confronting us. Yet such is the case.

The Mineral Industry Surveys (of September 22, 1948), released by the United States Department of the Interior, Bureau of Mines, reported:

> Manganese ore was being consumed at an annual rate of about 1,500,000 short tons (during the second quarter), a rate slightly in excess of that in 1947. Consumers of manganese ore were obliged to draw heavily on inventories during the second quarter, as receipts at consuming plants amounted to 24 percent of the quantity used. Imports of manganese ore during the second quarter dropped 21 percent from the first quarter. Of this, the U. S. S. R. furnished 38 percent, India and South Africa each 15 percent, Brazil 14 percent.

Mr. President, not only is Russia cutting off 38 percent of our supply, but we are also confronted with an even graver threat by the developments in the Far East, which stem directly from the betrayal of China by American representatives at Yalta. The Russian Communist conquest of China is daily becoming more of an ugly reality. If and when China falls, Korea and the whole southeastern Asiatic area will be next. Yet, we also find that we have been dependent on India for 15 percent of our manganese imports, which is now threatened to be cut off by these Communist advances.

What is even more ominous is the organization of 15 Moslem and southeastern Asian countries, which on January 24 met in New Delhi, India, to protest the policies of our allies toward Indonesia and the Asiatic peoples, policies which we are continuing to underwrite.

Speaking for this group of nations Prime Minister Nehru of India said on January 24:

> A resurgent New Asia, as shown by the conference on Indonesia should be notice to the United Nations that the Far East no longer intends to be satisfied with a minor or secondary role in world affairs.

In addition, Mr. President, this Government is becoming more deeply involved abroad in policies and commitments involving billions of dollars, designed to increase the productive capacity of nations on this side of the iron curtain. It is simple logic that as this industrial capacity is increased, there will be a proportionate struggle for increased allocations of available raw materials, which will cut down our own ability to obtain from foreign sources the materials we so desperately need.

No one has more clearly stated the extent to which our commitments go than Mr. William Philip Simms, who wrote on January 18, 1948, in the Washington News:

> Asia, home of half the earth's population, rapidly is overrun by Reds with little serious opposition.
> In western Europe, the battle seems to have reached a stalemate. But the outcome, British and other experts are now saying, depends upon at least another decade of American financial, economic, and military aid.
> Those 10 years will cost American taxpayers anywhere from 150 to 200 billion dollars. And 10 years is a long time and $200,000,000,000 is a lot of money.

Meanwhile, this administration continues the insane policy of destroying the steel capacity of central Europe, which could provide to the European nations everything we are being asked to furnish under the Marshall plan and under this prospective 10-year program. The fact that we are determined to destroy this industrial capacity is reflected in the fact that since we are underwriting the British and French occupation of Germany, as well as our own, we are spending $1,000,000,000 a year to carry on the senseless dismantlement program and to continue to ship behind the iron curtain into the Russian sphere factories we are dismantling. That policy cannot be defended. It is simply the old Morgenthau policy of hate.

Furthermore, as the National Council for the Prevention of War pointed out in its release of January 5, 1949, this policy of destruction is reflected in the implementation of our Marshall plan aid to Germany based on an analysis of Paul Hoffman's report to the ECA of December 15, 1948. The report shows that—

Germany, with one-sixth of Europe's population and one-third of Europe's industrial potential, is being awarded only one-tenth of Marshall plan authorizations. Only 25 percent of this has been shipped. This compares with 40 percent shipments for Europe as a whole.

Less than 1 percent of the shipments to Germany are classified as industrial or recovery goods, while more than 36 percent of ERP shipments to all Europe fall in that category.

Mr. President, as the facts indicate, the policies to which we are being committed by this administration are a mass of insane contradictions. Here we stand today with the whole cause of human liberty resting on our shoulders, with the defense of the anti-Soviet world dependent upon us, with the continuing prosperity of the United States an absolute must—yet with our vital interests criminally neglected.

Today we are still dependent on the Soviet Union for 38 percent of our manganese, without which we cannot produce steel, while 15 percent of our imports of manganese come from India, which is now threatened by continuing Communist successes in China.

This is the result of deliberate administration policies, as the following record shows. I always like to quote the record. Whose fault is it that today this country is dependent to the extent of 30 percent upon manganese from Russia, and 15 percent from India, not to mention the other countries to which I referred a while ago?

The sad truth is that on March 3, 1933, the Buy American Act was passed as a criterion for public purchasing by the governmental department, title III of which reads:

Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, and unless the head of the department of independent establishment concerned shall determine it to be inconsistent with the public interest, or the cost to be unreasonable, only such unmanufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been mined or produced in the United States, and only such manufactured articles, materials and supplies as have been manufactured in the United States substantially all from articles, materials, or supplies mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States, shall be acquired for public use.

Back in 1933 the Congress took action. It is not because during all these years the necessity for developing our own resources and providing against emergencies had not been discussed and dealt with by Congress, that we are in our present predicament. On June 7, 1939, the bill S. 572 was signed into law as Public Law 117. It has as its purpose:

To provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of critical and strategic materials essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in times of a national emergency, and to encourage, so far as possible, the further development of strategic and critical materials within the United States for common defense.

Again, on July 23, 1946, the Seventy-ninth Congress passed the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, amending Public Law 117, incorporating title III of the Buy American Act of 1933, and appropriated a total of $600,000,000 to implement it for the same purpose as stated above in Public Law 117.

How well I remember that on the very last night of the special session certain Senators from the eastern section of the country opposed a bill introduced and pleaded for by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] and other Senators who were familiar with the situation, and familiar with the fact that our stock piles of many of these critical materials had dwindled to almost nothing. Yet, when President Truman signed Public Law 520, he stated in his approval message, on July 23, 1946:

It is only because of the overriding importance of this purpose that I am able to overcome my reluctance to sign a bill which reaffirms the application to stock-pile purposes of the provisions of Title III of the act of March 3, 1933, known as the Buy American Act.

These provisions will not only materially increase the cost of the proposed stock piles but will tend further to defeat the conservation and strategic objectives of the bill by further depleting our already inadequate underground reserves of strategic materials.

Mr. President, so far as manganese is concerned, this is a completely erroneous assumption. I am speaking about a material of which our country may be short. But we have manganese in 37 different States. We have more manganese than any other material. Yet we have the President stating he is against the bill because he says it would deplete our resources.

Furthermore, there can be serious conflict between these provisions and the foreign economic policy which this Government is actively pursuing.

There we have it. It conflicted with the foreign policy. A thousand times better, the President thought, to take care of foreigners than to take care of the American people and the American taxpayer.

Recognizing the increased necessity for constructive action to protect our own national security, in July, 1947, the Eightieth Congress passed the Premium Price Act of 1947, the purpose of which was "to stimulate the exploration, development, mining, and production of certain minerals and metals by private enterprise to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the United States, by providing for the development and conservation of those materials in order to decrease and prevent, wherever possible, a dangerous and costly dependence of the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of such materials."

This bill specifically dealt with increased production of copper, lead, zinc, and manganese. Yet, on August 2, 1947, President Truman vetoed the bill. As a consequence, many of our mines closed their doors, and instead of our getting a stock pile, we wiped out the stock piles on the ground where these mines were producing.

If today we are unable to get manganese, let the President assume the responsibility. If today a farmer cannot get a binder or a tractor, or if the housewife cannot get electricity because there is no steel with which to make wire, they need not blame the Eightieth Congress, because President Truman vetoed the bill passed by the Eightieth Congress.

Even today, in spite of the tremendous amount of money appropriated by Congress to start raising domestic production of these crucial materials, particularly manganese, our Stock-piling Act has remained practically inoperative.

Why, Mr. President, are America's vital interests ignored and neglected? All the facts point to but one conclusion: This administration, and those who are carrying out its policies, are deliberately violating the specific will and intention of Congress as clearly expressed by the statutes the Congress has passed.

On January 25, Chief Donald F. Carpenter, of the Munitions Board, issued a progress report on the stock piling of critical materials. Is it not significant that in this report there is no mention of manganese? Why not? Was he ashamed of what the administration had done with regard to manganese? Did he want to hide what the administration had done regarding manganese? But this vital, critical material, which must be had if we are to be able to manufacture steel, was never mentioned by Mr. Carpenter in the report. Is it not even more significant that in this progress report Mr. Carpenter specifically states that they have embarked on a new policy, totally different from that provided for under Public Law 520—the strategic stock-piling bill—which states that purchases of strategic and critical materials shall "be made, so far as is practicable, from supplies of materials in excess of the current industrial demand"?

Now we are informed that this new policy is one by which materials will be taken from our industrial supplies—whether such action will cut into civilian demands or not.

Mr. President, I wish to repeat that statement, because here is where the poor farmer gets it in the neck again: Now we are informed that this new policy is one by which the materials will be taken from our industrial supplies, whether such action will cut into civilian demands or not. This policy is the result of an Executive order, issued by the President 6 months ago, which countermands the basic intent of Public Law 520.

Of course, the President says, "If you have to sock somebody, sock the fellow who needs the steel." Mr. President, if we do not have manganese, we cannot manufacture farm machinery. So every day the telephone calls come in, asking where the senior Senator from North Dakota can locate a combine or a drill or some other piece of farm machinery the farmers need. The men and women who signed the REA agreements 6 or 7 years ago in my State and in South Dakota and in some portions of Minnesota and Montana are unable to obtain the benefit of electric utilities in their homes, because they are unable to obtain the wire to be put on the poles, to bring to their homes the electric energy to run the various pieces of electric equipment, because Russia has cut off the supply of manganese.

But what is even more disastrous is the fact that Public Law 520, the one the President set aside by his Executive order, specifically directs the Secretary of the Interior, the Director of the Bureau of Mines, and the Director of Geological Survey "to make scientific, technologic, and economic investigations concerning the extent and mode of occurrence, the development, mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances found in the United States or its Territories or insular possessions, which are essential to the common defense or the industrial needs of the United States in order to determine and develop domestic sources of supply."

Yet the shocking fact is, Mr. President, that up to this moment neither the Department of the Interior nor any other branch of the Government under this administration has taken a single step to implement the specific directive of Public Law 520 to provide for the stimulation of domestic production of critical raw materials. Absolutely nothing of any kind or character, either directly or indirectly, has been done by the administration to carry out the provisions of that act.

As the record now stands, it is simply fantastic to read in an article by the Associated Press, as of January 25, 1949, that instead of developing our own raw materials, the President is coming to Congress to ask for a billion dollars to implement his "bold new program to develop the world's backward areas, and that this money would be available for loans by this Government to foreign countries which join in a plan for coordinated development of their national resources."

In other words, Mr. President, we are being committed to the extension of an international policy which will underwrite the interests and security of everyone but ourselves. In the West there may be all kinds of manganese, but Public Law 520 has been completely ignored by this administration, and nothing has been done to develop the manganese there. I think the time has come, Mr. President, for an investigation of the Department of the Interior, the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey—and the administration itself—as to what constitutes their real attitude toward the development of America's own natural resources, upon which we become increasingly dependent with every day that passes.

So, Mr. President, I merely say, in conclusion, that here we have the President and the various departmental heads, who are supposed to carry out the will of Congress as to the stock piling of critical materials, ignoring the direction given to them, not once, not twice, but three different times. They are ignoring those directions entirely and completely, with the result that today we are at the mercy of Russia and at the mercy of India in the matter of manganese, which we need so very much in connection with the production of steel. Yet we find the President saying, "If we do not get steel, we will nationalize the steel industry." That is his reply after three different laws passed by the Congress have been neglected or willfully disobeyed.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING TIME FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 135) to authorize the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight-saving time in the District, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia is authorized to advance the standard time applicable to the District 1 hour for a period of each year commencing not earlier than the last Sunday of April and ending not later than the last Sunday of September. Any such time established by the Commissioners under the authority of this act shall, during the period of the year for which it is applicable, be the standard time for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, the pending measure is Senate bill 135, an act to authorize the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight saving time in the District.

This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. So far as I know, there is no opposition.

Therefore I shall move the engrossment, third reading, and passage of the bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator know of any other Senator, on either side of the aisle, who wishes to debate or discuss this bill?

Mr. McGRATH. No Senator has expressed any interest in debating the bill, or has expressed any opposition to it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I simply ask that question for general information, and to protect any interested Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I strongly support the enactment of this measure. I do not wish to delay its passage by making a lengthy statement. However, I wish to call attention to two facts: First, that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has announced publicly on more than one occasion that he intends to give preferred attention to the creation of home rule, for the people of the District of Columbia, by having that matter brought as quickly as possible before the Senate and the House of Representatives. I fully approve and strongly support him in that position.

I note as well that he has requested the distinguished junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] to head an able subcommittee to bring as quickly as possible before the full committee, and subsequently before the Senate itself, a home-rule measure for our consideration and, I hope, for passage.

It seems to me that in considering this particular measure it is apparent that the distinguished chairman of the committee is not in any sense violating the commitment he has made and the effort upon which he has entered to bring home rule to the District of Columbia, but, rather, is recognizing the importance of home rule; and it seems to me that insofar as it is possible under the present law, this measure is a home-rule measure, and will delegate to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia more authority than they have ever had under any prior bill on this subject; that is, authority not merely for 1 year but from year to year, to determine for themselves and for their District, and after hearings of any kind that they care to employ, at which their citizens may be heard, whether or not daylight-saving time shall be set up in the District from year to year. I would not support this bill if it were not for the fact that it does leave to the local officials, local citizens who represent the District as members of the Board of Commissioners, to determine the facts as to whether or not daylight-saving time shall be established.

Mr. President, I think this home rule measure and this home rule objective is so important that I am going to take a few minutes to place in the RECORD a brief statement which I made at a recent forum program put on by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the District of Columbia, and which was broadcast over Station WOL, on January 27, last. The distinguished junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER] likewise participated in the program, and I am only sorry I do not have his statement to incorporate in the RECORD. At this time, without taking the time of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the copy of the opening remarks which I made at that time in the effort to answer the question which was being considered at that public forum, "What should Congress do to secure the democratic rights of the citizens of the Nation's capital?" My own answer to the question was and is that there is no other task within the power of the Congress which at all compares in service to the citizens of the District of Columbia, and, I thought, in service to the Nation, in this local field, with the giving of real home rule to the District. Therefore I confined my remarks in that opening statement and generally throughout the forum to supporting as strongly as I could this home-rule effort.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement by Mr. HOLLAND, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

I am glad to be here tonight to state my answer to the question, "What should Congress do to secure the democratic rights of the citizens of the Nation's capital?"

In my judgment, the first and most important task within the power of Congress, which would secure for the residents of the District of Columbia democratic rights which are regarded as basic democracy everywhere else in our Nation, is the speedy enactment of home rule for the District. Under home rule the people of the District, through representative citizens of their own choice, would have local self-government, comparable to that which is enjoyed by the citizens of every other large urban community in our Nation. This would operate in two fields which are generally kept separate: (1) A locally elected city or District council would handle those functions of government usually exercised by the municipal government of any large city; (2) a locally elected school board would handle those governmental functions under which the public school system operates.

The present thoroughly undemocratic government of the District, under which the citizens of the District have no direct control of any sort over their municipal government and their public school system, is a travesty on the fundamental American principle of representative government.

From the standpoint of the citizens of the district themselves, the present system, with its complete absence of responsibility on the individual citizens, breeds lack of interest, lack of pride, lack of information as to the details of their local government, and too often lack of confidence in and respect for the two local governments which are closest to them and have most to do with their daily lives and with the rendition of those services which mean most to them and to their families. Such services include, among others, police and fire protection, sanitation, public health, public safety, public welfare, and public education. Such a system, to my way of thinking, is very bad for the citizens themselves.

From the standpoint of the attitude of the public employees and the public services, such a system is bad. These employees and services cannot be, and they are not, as responsive to the will and the legitimate requests of the citizens of the district as they would be under a system of representative government which would allow the citizens to select the key officials who would have direct control and supervision over the District employees and services. I wonder if any citizen of the District who is listening to me tonight is so naive as to believe that his reasonable requests receive the same attention from many District employees as do the requests of a Member of Congress?

From the standpoint of giving to the local needs of the District the immediate and careful attention which they deserve and require, the present system is bad because every Senator and Representative has to give primary attention to the needs of the people of his State or district, who elect him, as well as to the needs of the Nation as a whole; and the District and its needs are bound to come last, and too often they come at long last.

There is nothing new in home rule. The founding fathers, as shown by Mr. Madison's clear statement on the subject, did not intend to abolish local selfgovernment in the District. By congressional action, local self-government actually existed here from 1802 until 1874. There is no constitutional question as to the legality of allowing the local election of members of the council and school board—no legal question about giving to the council and school board full administrative power, each in its field—no legal question about giving the council legislative power to enact ordinances covering the customary scope of municipal legislation. The only constitutional question is whether additional legislative power beyond the field of local municipal ordinances can be delegated by Congress to the council. This sole legal question can be solved by the courts through the years, but in the meantime it seems to me to be the imperative duty of Congress to enact home rule for the District and thus secure to the citizens of the Nation's Capital, basic democratic rights which are exercised by the citizens of every other city and town in the Nation.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, in closing these brief remarks on this subject, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that not only is it an imposition upon the nearly 900,000 citizens of the District to continue a form of government which bans them from having any say whatever with reference to the selection of the officials who preside over them, either the members of their city ccmmission or the members of their school board; not only are they hopelessly deprived of any semblance of any local control over their own affairs in these two intimate governments which have to do so vitally with their happiness and the happiness of their families and homes, but that from the national standpoint it seems to me to be a terrible waste of time and effort and energy for the two Houses of the Congress to have to give their time, hour upon hour, to the consideration of many, many questions which are of such small importance that they do not at all justify any such consideration. I am not speaking of this particular measure, because while it is not a major one it does at least have substantial meaning to the District and to the Nation. But I am talking about such measures as those that we had up in the last Congress, for instance, determining whether or not mixed boxing bouts should be permitted in the District of Columbia, and whether or not the immediate removal of two ancient stone columns in the streets near the White House should be permitted, and whether or not the starlings should be required to roost at other places than upon the cornices of the public buildings in the District of Columbia, and whether or not those who sell bottled beverages and soft drinks within the District should be required to furnish straws to their customers, and whether or not the members of the barber board should have certain powers, and whether or not barbers within the District of Columbia should be permitted to work a certain number of hours, and whether or not the names of streets should be changed, or railroads should be permitted to build needed spur tracks upon alleys within the District. There were numerous other matters of such trivial importance, Mr. President, which consumed in the total, in my judgment, hundreds of Senator hours and hundreds of Representative hours at a time when the problems of the Nation and of the world as a whole are so great and so grave that they certainly offer to the Members of both Houses of Congress a challenge to give their very best efforts for as many hours of each day as they can continue to work.

And so, Mr. President, it is my hope that the occasion of the passage of this measure—and I hope it will be promptly passed—will also serve to point up the necessity for the creation of genuine home-rule government in the District of Columbia, in which again the citizens of the District may have the privilege, which they exercised for many years constitutionally, the privilege of selecting the members of their own governing bodies by their own vote. I strongly hope the distinguished chairman of the District of Columbia Committee of the Senate may persevere in his announced intention to bring to the floor of the Senate shortly a home-rule measure under which the only city in the United States which does not have for its citizens the power of local self-government, the capital of the United States of America, may have that particular blot removed from its escutcheon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and withdrawing two nominations, which nominations were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. REED, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

John Monroe Johnson, of South Carolina, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for the term expiring December 31, 1955 (reappointment).

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

MUNICIPAL COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Aubrey B. Fennell to be an associate judge of the municipal court for the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the Senator, if he knows, what business will be coming up Monday, to which day I understand it is intended to adjourn the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to my able friend from Massachusetts, I have an understanding with the minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] that nothing will come up on Monday of importance in view of the fact that Republican Members of the Senate are now on their way, or soon will be, to various places throughout the country to make Lincoln Day addresses, and some of them will not return by Monday; some will not get back before Tuesday or Wednesday. So, with the sort of mutual understanding we have had in the past with respect to the celebration of Lincoln Day, Jackson Day, and Jefferson Day, I can assure the Senator that nothing of importance will come up on Monday, and Senators on the other side may praise the immortal Abraham Lincoln from now until then; and they would not be overdoing it if they should do that, because I think Abraham Lincoln was one of the great men of all time.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator include the Presiding Officer who, I understand, will go to Illinois to make an address?

Mr. LUCAS. The Presiding Officer has condescended to go to Springfield, Ill., to make a speech upon Abraham Lincoln; and I prophesy that it will be the best speech that will be made by anyone on that particular day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to suggest that it is not a condescension to go to Springfield, Ill., on any occasion, and especially is that true of this occasion.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until next Monday at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 14, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received February 10, 1949:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Philip C. Jessup, of New York, to be Ambassador at Large.

North Winship, of Georgia, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Union of South Africa, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Union of South Africa.

Myron Melvin Cowen, of New York, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Australia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Philippines.

SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

John C. Ross, of New York, to be the deputy representative of the United States of America, with the rank and status of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, in the Security Council of the United Nations.

UNITED STATES ADVISORY COMMISSION ON EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE

The following-named persons to be members of the United States Advisory Commission on Educational Exchange for the terms indicated, to which offices they were appointed during the recess of the Senate:

B. Harvie Branscomb, of Tennessee, for a term expiring January 27, 1951.

Harold W. Dodds, of New Jersey, for a term expiring January 27, 1950.

Martin P. McGuire, of the District of Columbia, for a term expiring January 27, 1949.

Mark Starr, of New York, for a term expiring January 27, 1949.

Edwin B. Fred, of Wisconsin, to be a member of the United States Advisory Commission on Educational Exchange for the remainder of the term expiring January 27, 1950, and until his successor has been appointed and qualified, vice Karl T. Compton, resigned.

The following-named persons to be members of the United States Advisory Commission on Educational Exchange for terms of three years expiring January 27, 1952, and until their successors have been appointed and qualified (reappointments):

Martin P. McGuire, of the District of Columbia.

Mark Starr, of New York.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Thomas C. Blaisdell, Jr., of the District of Columbia, to the position of Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Hawthorne Arey, of Nebraska, to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, D. C., for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 1950, vice William McChesney Martin, Jr., resigned.

THE TAX COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The following-named persons to be judges of the Tax Court of the United States for terms of 12 years from June 2, 1948, to which offices they were appointed during the recess of the Senate (reappointments):

Byron B. Harlan, of Ohio.

Miss Marion J. Harron, of California.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

Lester Luther, of Kansas, to be United States attorney for the district of Kansas. He is now serving under a recess appointment.

Alfred E. Modarelli, of New Jersey, to be United States attorney for the district of New Jersey. He is now serving under a recess appointment.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

James J. Boyle, of California, to be United States marshal for the southern district of California. He is now serving under a recess appointment.

Alfred J. Plowden, Jr., of South Carolina, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina. He is now serving under a recess appointment.

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The following-named employee of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to the position indicated:

TO BE ENSIGN

Ateven L. Hollis, effective January 26, 1949.

IN THE COAST GUARD

The following officers of the United States Coast Guard to be rear admirals, to rank from June 1, 1948:

Joseph F. Farley
Merlin O'Neill
Ellis Reed-Hill

(Admiral Joseph F. Farley, Rear Adm. Merlin O'Neill, and Rear Adm. Ellis Reed-Hill are presently serving in the Coast Guard, under 4 year statutory appointments, as commandant, assistant commandant, and engineer-in-chief, respectively. Their nominations to be permanent rear admirals in the Coast Guard are not intended to disturb their present incumbency in these statutory offices, nor the rank pay and other emoluments attaching thereto.)

TO BE REAR ADMIRAL, TO RANK FROM FEBRUARY 1, 1949

Louis B. Olson

TO BE REAR ADMIRAL, TO RANK FROM APRIL 1, 1949

Joseph Greenspun

TO BE LIEUTENANTS (JUNIOR GRADE), TO RANK FROM NOVEMBER 15, 1946

Raymond J. Evans — Allen E. Armstrong
Willis G. Partridge — James McMenamin

TO BE ENSIGN, TO RANK FROM JANUARY 15, 1947

Hardy M. Willis

The following officers of the United States Coast Guard Reserve to be commissioned officers in the United States Coast Guard:

TO BE LIEUTENANT, TO RANK FROM OCTOBER 1, 1942

William R. Sayer

TO BE LIEUTENANT (JUNIOR GRADE), TO RANK FROM AUGUST 1, 1944

Lloyd M. Logan

TO BE LIEUTENANT (JUNIOR GRADE), TO RANK FROM JANUARY 1, 1947

Charles R. Leisy

The following officers to be lieutenants (junior grade), dates of rank to be computed upon execution of oath in accordance with the regulations governing the determination of precedence as commissioned officers in the United States Coast Guard of Reserve officers, former Reserve officers, and former temporarily commissioned officers:

Dono W. Moore — Robert E. Foley
Bruce N. Jensen — John E. Riddell, Jr.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate Thursday, February 10, 1949:

MUNICIPAL COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Hon. Aubrey B. Fennell to be a judge of the municipal court for the District of Columbia.

IN THE ARMY

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS AND MAJOR GENERAL

Maj. Gen. Lewis Andrew Pick, O8096, Army of the United States (brigadier general, U. S. Army), Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, and as major general in the Regular Army of the United States.

Brig. Gen. Eugene M. Foster, O6228, United States Army, Chief of Finance, United States Army, and as major general in the Regular Army of the United States.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

Lt. Col. Walter J. Renfroe, Jr., professor of modern languages, United States Military Academy. (Given recess appointment on December 2, 1948.)

IN THE NAVY

The following-named midshipmen (aviation) to be ensigns in the Navy from the 3d day of June 1949:

Billy J. Baggett
Robert A. Westropp

John E. Parsons, Jr. (Naval ROTC) to be an ensign in the Civil Engineer Corps of the Navy from the 3d day of June 1949.

The following-named (civilian college graduates) to be ensigns in the Navy from the 3d day of June 1949:

Robert S. Blake — Thomas A. Kamm
William J. D. Bradford 3d — Adair Miller
William W. Davenport — Joseph J. Packo
Benjamin Dillahunty — Kenneth F. Pedersen
Edward J. Francois — Neil A. Swartz
Stanford J. Watson

Lek K. Von Kaesborg (civilian college graduate) to be an ensign in the Navy from the 3d day of June 1949, in lieu of ensign in the Navy as previously nominated, to correct date of rank.

James H. Greene (civilian college graduate) to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy (special duty officer).

The following-named (civilian college graduates) to be ensigns in the Supply Corps of the Navy, to rank from date indicated after each name:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Creator of mankind, we praise Thee for Thy immortal word—made in His image. Give us a courageous strength that we may never defile this blessed endowment.

As servants of the people of whatever section or creed, we pray for thorough cooperation and solidarity and mutual help for all groups. Give us courage to withstand anything that imperils our usefulness. Guarding our influence and example, help us to be worthy champions of those standards which exalt national character.

In all these experiences, work in us to do Thy will and Thy good pleasure. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S BOLD NEW WORLD PROGRAM

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, President Truman's bold new world program is not a new thing; it is simply an extension and an expansion of President Roosevelt's Interdepartmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation for the development and improvement of the Latin-American Republics. President Roosevelt's ICSCC has been in operation for 10 years exporting American know-how, American machinery, and American wealth to our Latin-American neighbors. President Truman's bold new world program to raise the standard of living of the world's undeveloped areas therefore is simply an extension to the rest of the world of Roosevelt's Western Hemisphere good-neighbor policy.

President Truman extended aid to Greece and Turkey in 1947 through the Greek-Turkish aid program, and extended aid to the countries of western Europe under the Marshall plan. American aid and help and skill and resources are now to blanket the world through his bold new world program. The question arises, What is back of this ambitious world program, this world WPA? Why is it sprung upon our weary, overburdened American taxpayers at this particular moment?

Mr. Speaker, there is growing concern in Washington today among President Truman's advisers over falling prices, increasing unemployment, surpluses that are beginning to pile up, and an anticipated glutted market. Something must be done to avoid the deflation that lies ahead. American surpluses must be disposed of in order that full employment may be maintained and our national income kept above the $200,000,000,000 mark. President Truman proposes therefore to give away more goods to keep the production machine going, to raise more taxes, to pay for more goods to give away, ad infinitum.

This game of give-away is to be sold to the American taxpayers—who have to pay for it—as a defense measure because a business slump would be playing into the hands of Joe Stalin. It is what he has been waiting for. If a business slump comes Joe Stalin will have won his cold war. So we must tax and tax, spend and spend, give and give, produce and produce to avoid a depression.

Mr. Speaker, America's postwar appetite for consumer goods is finally becoming satisfied; the inflationary effects upon price levels of our huge shipments abroad—$14,000,000,000 worth of scarce goods to Europe last year instead of our normal exports of $4,000,000,000 worth—are now diminishing, so a glutted market with falling prices threatens our economy. Economists, both inside and outside the administration, have known for some time that our high-price, high-income economy must be maintained to keep America solvent, to meet the heavy service charges upon our $280,000,000,000 debt, and to support our extravagant $45,000,000,000 Federal budget.

President Truman's blueprint for world-wide peace and prosperity is bound to develop into a robbing-Peter-to-pay-Paul process, a spend-ourselves-into-prosperity program, where the American taxpayer will be required to pick up the check. How long can this give-away game be kept up?

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS]?

There was no objection.

ORGANIZED BASEBALL

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HERLONG]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, organized baseball received a stunning blow yesterday when a court of appeals ruled in effect that the contract of a player is not binding. I certainly do not question the wisdom of the court's decision, but would like to make this observation.

Players, club, and league officials have traditionally had a complete understanding that the particular type of contract under which they operated was necessary to perpetuate our national game.

Now comes a player who jumps his contract to play in Mexico, and when the well runs dry down there, comes back here, and because he is disciplined for jumping his contract, brings this unprecedented action against baseball officials—an action that could well sound the death knell for the sport that has kindled the fires of ambition in the breasts of so many thousands of young Americans.

From the excellent program sponsored by the American Legion, up to the major leagues, baseball has been making splendid citizens out of boys who in many cases, were it not for baseball, would never have had a chance.

Some of these players have made an indelible mark in our sporting history. Their contribution to the youth of America can never be measured in money. I sincerely hope that any player who would destroy baseball for personal gain, will, for the sake of American youth, reconsider his action before it is too late.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ELLIOTT] may have an indefinite leave of absence, due to serious illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGEE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a talk made by him yesterday before the Brightwood Lions Club on education and Federal aid.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM ON OLEO

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the plank in the Democratic platform which proposes repeal of the Federal antimargarine taxes means just what it says.

I think I know what that plank means. I helped write it and heard the discussions which went on concerning it. I was a member of the subcommittee on resolutions at the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia. My group prepared the first draft of the platform and then submitted it to the platform committee.

The plank on margarine which we drafted meant repeal of Federal antimargarine legislation. There was no thought of substituting a ban on the manufacture and sale of yellow margarine, or of putting any other restriction on margarine in lieu of the taxes.

Naturally, we discussed the matter at some length and decided that sentiment in the country as a whole is for repeal.

The persons who now argue that the administration would be breaking faith with Midwest farmers if it goes ahead with its plans for repeal of the margarine taxes evidently do not know what went on at Philadelphia when the Democratic platform was drafted.

At that time the proposal by the dairy group that the taxes be repealed but that yellow margarine be banned had not been made public. There was no mention of this proposal at Philadelphia.

To say now that the proposed ban on yellow margarine is in line with the platform and the administration's position is to ignore the plain facts.

To repeat, the plank meant outright repeal of the Federal antimargarine laws without reservations. I am hopeful that the House will take speedy action to carry out the platform pledge.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLLING asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; in one to include an address by Howard A. Cowden, president and general manager of Consumers' Cooperative Association, Kansas City, Mo.; and in the other case a quotation from the Hoover Commission task force on natural resources.

Mr. HÉBERT (at the request of Mr. LARCADE) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain letters pointing out the difference between the organizations meeting with reference to civil liberties.

Mr. PRICE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the East St. Louis (Ill.) Journal.

Mr. MORRIS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

MEETINGS ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, there will be two conferences in this city during the next few days on the subject of civil rights. One, which is scheduled to meet on February 11 and 12, under the name of the Legislative Assembly and Rally to End Segregation and Discrimination, contains the usual list of Communists and Fellow Travelers, with the addition of one or two leading Republicans, plus several innocents some of whom are always unfortunately cajoled into these affairs by the Communists.

The other meeting the National Citizens Conference on Civil Liberties, is being held on February 15 and 16, called by the Civil Liberties Clearing House. This meeting has been given the blessing of the President of the United States who is the most courageous defender of civil rights our country has ever known. He wrote as follows to the chairman of this conference, Mr. E. Raymond Wilson:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. WILSON: Please accept my best wishes for a successful gathering of the National Citizens Conference on Civil Liberties which will be held in Washington February 15–17.

We must provide a solid foundation for the future growth of our country. Of great importance to the present and future generations of America is the development of a program of civil liberties guaranteeing to all people the heritage of freedom which we have received from the founders of this Nation. A free system can endure only when there is freedom of opinion, expression, and conscience.

Your conference has a great responsibility in formulating the kind of program which will give added strength to the principles of freedom which have come down to us from the fathers of the Constitution.

Very sincerely yours,
HARRY TRUMAN.

I call these two meetings to the attention of my colleagues so that they may discriminate between the one which is heavily Communist-dominated, and the other which is of interest to those good American citizens who are trying to give statutory meaning to our constitutional guaranties, but who are opposed to cooperation with those who expound totalitarian doctrines.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] has expired.

SHARING OUR MATERIAL PROSPERITY WITH THE WORLD

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of a few minutes ago, on this floor, by our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], call forth these extemporaneous remarks by me, as he apparently condemns the President of the United States, for the position he took toward sharing our democratic knowledge and advancements with other peoples of the world.

It seems to me that the President of the United States should be instead congratulated upon continuing to emphasize to the people of America, and the people of the world that the heart of America is still warm; that the heart of America is still intelligent and unselfish enough and Christian enough to be willing to share with the people of the world the material prosperity of America, and the spiritual attainments which the people of America have acquired through God's blessings, in part, in the form of our geographic location, climate, natural resources, and other features.

I wish to compliment the President of the United States upon renewing and emphasizing these things which our great President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, now deceased, emphasized in his lifetime. I am not surprised that President Truman has again reiterated those declarations of unselfish and sensible interests in the progress of the world, because I would expect the President of the great American people, with their thoughtfulness and unselfish attitude toward world progress, to reiterate them. In fact, I would not expect the President of the United States to do otherwise, than to be interested in the prosperity of the people of the world. He represents the thinking of the people and heart of America, and the intelligence and heart of America is to be generous and steadfastly helpful toward the progress of the people of the world. I would say that the great mass of American people recognize that only as the world goes forward in prosperity and in spiritualness can America go forward, and I am saying that the heart and mind of America recognizes that the peace of the world depends upon America's being interested in doing something about the advancement of all the people of the world, as well as the people of America. World prosperity is no longer divisible, nor is the peace of the world divisible. Uncertainty for any mass of people in the world spells uncertainty for many people of the world. Economical or social backwardness, or tardiness, for any mass of the people in the world holds back social and economical advancement for all the people of the world. President Harry Truman of the United States, in his inaugural address, in fact, spoke the heart and the mind of the great mass of people in America, when he urged that the people of America help in the material advancement of all of the people of the world.

I again compliment the President of the United States on doing this, again, and again, and again.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

ACQUISITION AND OPERATION OF THE FREEDOM TRAIN BY THE ARCHIVIST OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 95) to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. J. Res. 84) to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments which may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article from the Saturday Evening Post entitled "We Could Slip Into Socialism While Hating It."

Mr. D'EWART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a memorial adopted by the Legislature of Montana.

Mr. LOVRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a case study in international espionage in the Far East, notwithstanding the fact that the Government Printing Office estimates the cost will be $1,153.75.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on Monday next following the regular business of the day and any special orders heretofore granted for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

SPECULATION ON THE COMMODITY MARKETS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of congratulating the Secretary of Agriculture in ordering an investigation with respect to the operation of certain manipulators on the board of trade within the last few days that has resulted in an unusual break in the prices of grain.

While I believe the prices of grain are still high, I cannot subscribe to the manner in which a few manipulators and gamblers have acted in making short sales which resulted in such a drop in the prevailing prices.

I have frequently called attention on the floor to the operations of these few hundred speculators and gamblers in grains, as well as in stocks, who have been permitted to bring about breaks in the market which have caused a disturbance in the financial conditions of our country. However, what applies to the board of trade and grain speculators also applies to the stock exchange manipulators, short sellers, and gamblers.

Within the last few months some of these manipulators, taking advantage in the change in the result of the election, began to sell stocks short, which operation they have practiced from time to time whenever opportunity presented. Why should this Government permit a few hundred, or even a few thousand, of these professional speculators, by their operations, dislocate and affect conditions that invariably are destructive and affect the normal operation of business and the economy of our Nation?

None of the few hundred speculators on the Board of Trade grow a single bushel of wheat, corn, rye, oats, and other grain commodities, and still they sell not thousands but hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain a day that they do not own.

A former judge in New York and our former ambassador to Germany, James W. Gerard, made this observation: "He who sells goods that are not his'n, should be sent to prison," and I believe that some day in the near future a law will be passed that will make it a criminal offense for anyone to sell anything that he does not possess or own.

In 1929, and ever since that time, I have made many investigations of the manipulations of the grain and stock speculators and obtained valuable information satisfying me that 95 percent of the sales on the stock exchange, curb, grain, and commodity exchanges are professional deals on the part of a few of these manipulators, including the exchanges dealing in butter, lard, eggs, and other products. Of course, I realize that from time to time these gentlemen having friends on the floor have criticized me for calling attention to the outrageous activities of these brokers, but it has not and will not stop me from insisting and urging the passage of much stricter legislation than I advocated in 1929 which brought about the creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I recollect that 3 years ago I directed the attention of the House to the outrageous boosting of the price of rye on the part of a small group owning about 80 percent of the rye stock which they acquired at 65 and 70 cents a bushel. Through manipulation they forced the price up to $2 and $2.25 per bushel which price was 40 to 60 cents higher than the price obtaining for wheat. An investigation was undertaken by the Department of Agriculture and some of these speculators were suspended but, unfortunately, the infliction of that penalty apparently has not curbed or stopped the unethical and unfair practices as we have observed in the manipulations which have taken place in the last few days. In that connection I wish to say that notwithstanding that the prices of wheat, corn, rye, barley, and other grains have gone down, the flour millers and the bakers have ignored the drop in wholesale prices and the price of bread and all other food necessities have not been reduced or lowered to the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I also recall in the last Congress when I called attention to the activities of certain professional brokers and manipulators whose short selling brought about a break in the market, I was criticized by a gentleman from Pennsylvania, a former broker, whose defense of their operations indicated to me that he was connected with this coterie of gentlemen. Suffice to say that the gentleman is no longer here. I wonder whether today there may be some gentlemen who do not understand these manipulative stock practices who may come to the defense of these manipulators who are responsible for the recent break in the market.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the Secretary of Agriculture will continue in his investigations and bring to light those who are responsible for these artificially created breaks or upturns in prices.

Investigations should also be made of the stock exchanges and it is my hope that the Securities and Exchange Commission will make public, as I have frequently requested, timely reports on all short sales, what stocks have been sold short and by whom sold, and such reports to be made immediately and not weeks later.

THE WHITE HOUSE AND THE CAPITOL

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska a few minutes ago to the effect that he was instrumental in having signs taken down in front of the White House that it was being wrecked. That is what I was afraid they were doing. I hope from the reports I get that they do not wreck the exterior of the White House, because it has been a landmark for years and we appreciate it. Enough things have been wrecked; let us do a little repairing and building.

I also see in the newspapers that there is talk about spending $5,000,000 in changing the face of the Capitol. I hope that does not happen. We have not the money, and it is all O. K. as it is. But I do hope that the Architect of the Capitol will do something about the House Chamber. We should find some place where we could meet long enough to give them time to strengthen the ceiling and do away with the unsightly steel scaffolding in this room today. It is a disgrace that we should have permitted this condition to continue for so many years. I have served here for a good many years, and these beams have been here most of that time. I think the proper thing for us to do is to find a place where we could meet temporarily until the interior of this hall can be strengthened and these unsightly iron beams and braces removed. Its acoustics are bad. The steelwork is unsightly. In its present condition it is not a fitting place for the House of Representatives to meet. I hope prompt consideration will be given to this matter. We could move to some auditorium for 6 months so the work could be done, or better still, for the country, adjourn for 1949 the first session of the Eighty-first Congress now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

COMMODITY AND STOCK MARKET PRICES

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised at all to hear the 1-minute speech made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] in which he blames the speculators entirely for the slump in commodity- and stock-market prices. Of course, we all know that speculators like other folks are not simon pure, but we also know that when anything happens of this nature the party in power makes a whipping boy, and tries to make a scapegoat of the fellow who has a little money whether he made it by the sweat of his brow, or by legal speculation, or what not.

The thing causing these prices to be depressed today is the attitude and the power of Mr. SABATH's New Deal socialistic administration and the campaign pledges and recent actions of most every member of his party, including the President of the United States, who have said in effect "We are going to take care of the fellows here in America who have some money to invest. Yes, we are going to see to it that they are ground down into the dust." And the people are taking them at face value. The people with a little or a lot of money to invest are not going to invest much as long as you keep up this kind of talk about those who have worked and saved money with which they can buy things or invest in most anything they see fit. That is the trouble, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and every thinking American, including the President, knows it. Facts are, this is the very thing the New Fair Deal party has been crying for during the past several months. What has come over them all of a sudden?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what the program will be next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am in position to advise the House what the program will be until Wednesday next. It will be remembered that last week I said there would be nothing controversial called up on Monday.

For consideration on Monday I have assigned H. R. 2402, which is a bill extending the War Assets Administration to June 30, 1949. I will see that the gentleman from Massachusetts, also the minority whip, have copies of this bill. I do not think there is any controversy over that bill. It was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If anything should develop we can confer.

Mr. McCORMACK. We can agree to put the roll call over until the next day.

There is also House Joint Resolution 84, the Freedom Train bill, unanimously reported out of the committee and if anything develops there we can have the same understanding.

On Tuesday the first deficiency appropriation bill will be called up for consideration. There are certain controversial items in that bill. I make that statement in order that the Members might be advised of the fact. What the period of general debate will be I am unable to state at this time, however that is a matter of adjustment and determination by the appropriate members of the Appropriations Committee. Whether that will be completed on Tuesday or not, I do not know, but, if not, consideration will be continued on Wednesday.

The next order of business after consideration of the first deficiency bill, which I have tentatively assigned for Wednesday but which in any event will be the next order of business, is House Resolution 66, to authorize the Committee on Public Lands to make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction.

After that we have House Resolution 75, authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to conduct studies and investigations relating to matters within its jurisdiction.

Then there is H. R. 1661, a bill to provide for the continuance of authority for the regulation of exports. I understand that a rule has been applied for on that bill. Of course, this announcement is all dependent upon rules being reported out. A rule has also been applied for on the first deficiency bill.

Coming to Wednesday of next week, there is H. R. 782, a bill to constitute the Federal Security Agency as a Department of Welfare, assuming that bill is reported out of committee and a rule obtained.

I have nothing scheduled for Thursday or Friday, and I reserve the right to announce any program for those days early next week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I am filing a report on H. R. 1437, and, if it is convenient with the House leadership, I would like to have it heard either Thursday or Friday, if a rule is granted.

Mr. McCORMACK. I had a talk with the gentleman yesterday or the day before about that. That is a bill relating to the strength of the Army and the United States Air Force. But at this particular time I can make no statement to the House in relation to that bill in reference to programing it. I shall certainly keep in mind the wishes of the gentleman from Georgia and also the talk I had with him, but I cannot make a definite commitment at this time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, in reference to the bill establishing the Department of Welfare, the chairman this morning agreed to continue hearings until next Tuesday. There are several witnesses that desire to be heard on that legislation and I am just questioning whether you should bring that in on Wednesday.

Mr. McCORMACK. That may be so. I am not pressing it. I am glad to receive the information from the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have no knowledge about the agreement to continue it until next Tuesday, but if it is reported out and a rule can be obtained, then I shall bring it up in the order in which I stated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the text of a statement made yesterday by Secretary of State Acheson.

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. McSWEENEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 96, Rept. No. 63), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2402) to extend the office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

SPECIAL ORDER TRANSFERRED

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I had for Monday, February 14, be shifted to Wednesday, February 16.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD five short paragraphs by Mr. James Mountain, Jr., a young newspaperman and World War II veteran from my district which I think sets forth in an illuminating, concise, and simple style, the difference between trial procedures in a democracy and the farcical travesty on justice which has just occurred in Hungary. I call this article to the attention of the Members. I realize that we are all busy, and that a lot of things come to our desks every day, but I have read many stories and articles on the dastardly, inhuman, undemocratic, vicious persecution, not only of a man, but of Christianity itself in Hungary and I can recommend this article as being extremely pertinent. If you will take but a few minutes to read it, I am sure that it will give you food for thought for many days to come.

ALONG THE WAY

OHIO VALLEY MERRY-GO-ROUND

The cards were stacked against Cardinal Mindszenty in Budapest from the start. He was getting a crooked deal and everybody knew it. It wasn't the trial of a Catholic cardinal or a pressing of a technical charge of treason. Actually, it was a test of the strength of the Hungarian Communist Party—a test which wouldn't have been made unless the Kremlin was absolutely sure that its quislings are now solidly entrenched in Hungary. It would have been the same if the Protestant Church or the Jewish faith had been the last remaining obstacle in the path to complete subjugation of the Hungarian people.

The Hungarian Commies knew full well that in pressing the trial against Cardinal Mindszenty they were violating the terms of the Hungarian peace treaty agreed to by the Big Four and under which all were entitled to democratic justice. So now, in a major case which has attracted the attention of the world, the Hungarian Commies have thrown down the gauntlet and there are no takers among the democratic nations of the world. Mark up another victory for Russia. They have beaten down, in a farcical trial which was a travesty on justice, not Cardinal Mindszenty, but the last remaining idea of the Hungarian people that they are entitled to the dignity of human beings.

The goddess of justice now must reinforce her blindfold, and put a clothespin on her nose when she is called to sit on trials behind the iron curtain. Yet these Communists are the people who rave and rant about world peace, who vilify the United States as imperialistic, who deride our trial-by-jury system and who point a scornful finger at our brand of democracy. Compare the trial of the Hungarian cardinal to the trial of the 12 Communist leaders now going on in New York. The cardinal probably will go to his death. The 12 in New York stand a much better chance of living out their allotted span of years.

Here is factual proof, in these two trials, of the basic differences between communism and democracy. The cardinal's trial was prefaced by torture to wring from him a confession, and the man who was named to defend him actually praised the Hungarian court for its conduct of the trial. Following his arrest, the cardinal was thrown into prison while the Hungarian guards softened him up for the trial. The 12 in New York, before and during their trial, are permitted the freedom of the Nation, to enjoy the rights and privileges which they are actually trying to destroy, and their defense attorneys are using the court as a sounding board for propaganda.

The lights are going out again around the world, and not all the words that may be spoken in the court of the United Nations, or that may be written in the free press of the democratic countries, will stay the clubs of the Soviet storm troopers from shattering these lamps of freedom which are winking out one by one in the face of the Communist flood edging out from Moscow in widening circles. What the solution is no one seems to know, but definitely, it is not to be gained by diplomatic notes of protest, ineffective words of condemnation. Hitler is having the last laugh, because Stalin is doing the same things better than the unlamented Nazi louse.

JIMMY MOUNTAIN.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

GOVERNMENT FINANCES

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, we have before us for consideration the Budget Commission's recommendation that we enact legislation to spend approximately $41,900,000,000 in the next fiscal year. This budget recommendation is merely an estimate. It is likely that more requests for appropriations will be made, and this amount increased.

There are some cold and inescapable facts to be looked in the face as we consider, which duty requires us to do, the necessity or lack of it for spending this incomprehensible sum of money in one 12-month period. Unless the necessity actually exists, certainly we should not spend it.

This budget is $4,400,000,000 greater than the budget submitted for 1948, and it is $6,800,000,000 larger than the budget submitted for 1947.

How does it compare with actual spending in previous years?

Twenty years ago, in the peacetime year of 1929, actual Federal spending was $3,738,000,000. That was also about one-twelfth of the budget recommendation we are now considering for the next fiscal year. That was before the idea became current that the duty rested upon the American taxpayer to carry the rest of his world upon his back. That was at a time when the belief prevailed that every capable and able bodied man owed the duty to himself and his family to work and earn a living for them. It was at a time when thrift was considered a virtue and when economy was not considered a vice.

In 1930 Federal Government expenses were $3,789,000,000, a small increase over 1929. It was not until 1931 that Federal Government spending reached the $5,000,000,000 mark.

There followed year by year, almost without exception, a gradual increase in Federal spending. In 1940 it amounted to $9,802,000,000. That was our last normal peacetime year, so far as Federal spending was concerned. In preparation for war, the amount jumped in 1941 to $19,153,000,000.

At the 1929 rate of spending forty-one and nine-tenths billion would have operated our Federal Government nearly 12 years. At the 1940 rate it would have paid all Government expenses for more than 4½ years.

As Federal spending increased annually, so did the number of Federal civilian employees. In 1929 the number of these employees was 559,579. In 1930 they increased to 580,494 and in 1931 to 588,206. By 1940 in 11 years these employees almost doubled the 1929 figure, and had reached 1,014,117. In 1941 the number of Federal civilian employees had grown to 1,370,110.

In 1946 the year after the hostilities ceased there were 2,722,000 Federal civilian employees. In 1947 the number decreased to 1,995,469. It began to rise again in 1948. In 1948, according to the Byrd Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, Federal employees in the executive department increased by 108,987, or a net increase which averaged 297 new employees added for every day in the year. That committee's latest report, issued February 3, 1949, shows the number of Federal employees in the executive agencies in December 1948 to be 2,104,456 and still increasing. Compare this with 559,000 in 1929 and with 1,014,000 in 1940.

More than 3 years have elapsed since hostilities ceased. If we ever intend to begin to practice economy, and to reduce expenses, 3 years is time enough to make a start. It is time to reduce expenses instead of increasing them, and time to cut taxes instead of adding new ones.

I do not believe the resources of the United States are sufficient to support an annual Federal budget of nearly $42,000,000,000, or even $40,000,000,000 on a permanent basis. Many of our natural resources are being rapidly depleted. Instead of continuing to scatter our resources all over the world with a lavish hand, it is imperative that we begin to practice rigid economy in many particulars. I have learned from research completed in 1947 that at our present rate of consumption, if new oil fields are not discovered in the meantime, our known and proved supply of petroleum would be completely exhausted in 12 years.

There will be, I assume, discoveries of some new oil fields in this country. But it is food for thought that the present known supply is sufficient to last us at present rate of consumption only 12 more years.

The National Minerals Conservation Council has published figures procured from the United States Bureau of Mines, calling attention to the critical mineral resources situation in the United States. Their report shows that there are many strategic minerals and metals of which we have an utterly inadequate supply. This council points out that America's mineral resources contrary to the general belief are exhaustible, and that known reserves of every day metals such as lead, zinc, and copper could be completely used up within the life span of the present generation. We have plenty of iron and we have plenty of coal, but these researchers point out that of the known reserve of copper, we have in our mines a supply sufficient to last only 34 years, enough zinc to last 19 years, enough lead to last only 12 years, enough manganese ore to last only 2 years, enough tungsten to last 4 years, and enough mercury to last 3 years, at the present rate of annual consumption.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Listening to the gentleman's discussion now, I just wish we had 300 Members of Congress who would think along the lines that you are talking on now. It would be the best thing that could happen to this country if we could get a little spirit of that kind into the thinking, if we are going to keep a solvent country.

I would like to ask the gentleman this: With a budget of $42,000,000,000, many things that we would like to see happen and many people would like to see happen cannot be undertaken. Does not the gentleman think we had better go a little slow in starting a lot of new things that will require a greater expenditure of funds until we are able to do those things satisfactorily and to the best interests of the country from a financial standpoint?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for his observation, and I concur in his thinking. I intend to deal with that question further along in my discussion.

At the present rate of soil erosion approximately 107,000,000 acres, or about 25 percent, of our cropland is deteriorating rapidly, and the United States Department of Agriculture warns that to prevent irreparable damage this land should have conservation treatment by 1960. They further state that approximately 500,000 acres of former cropland is being ruined each year as the result of erosion and rendered useless for any further practical cultivation.

Investigation into our natural resources shows that we are getting close to the bottom of the barrel with many of them. They are exhaustible, and unless steps are taken to conserve them many soon will be exhausted. We are not in a position to continue to scatter our resources with lavish hand to every corner and section of the earth. Not only is erosion depleting our soil but every crop grown on it takes from that soil just that much of its fertility, which must be replaced, if the soil is to retain its capacity to produce.

How many generations in the future can be supported by this land of ours if we continue our present course? Are we taking into our consideration any generations except our own in the plans we are making? Do we owe posterity the duty to leave them anything but a huge debt? Have we set any goals, or are we merely drifting, and making no real effort to chart a course and follow it to a definite result? We now have a national debt of approximately $252,000,000,000. This budget of $41,900,000,000 makes no provision for a payment on this debt. It does include $5,450,000,000 to pay the interest on it. This annual interest amounts to more than the total cost of running the Government in 1933, just 15 years ago, and every year prior to that.

The cost of operating our Federal Government has grown at a steady rate and has reached a figure which I think can, without exaggeration, be called alarming. My own home State of Georgia will be called upon to pay, and will actually pay, upon this huge budget the sum of $590,000,000—considerably more than half a billion dollars; in fact, nearly two-thirds of a billion dollars, as Georgia's contribution toward the cost of the Federal Government for this one 12 months' period. This $590,000,000 which will be siphoned out of the State of Georgia to the Treasury at Washington for the fiscal year 1950 is more than four times the amount of the combined capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits of every bank within the State of Georgia, which total is $112,256,000. It is something to think about that the Federal Government is reaching its tax gatherer's hand into the State of Georgia and bringing from our people to Washington to apply on operating expenses for 1 year, more than four times the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits of every bank in the State.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I made one mistake when I said "300 Members of Congress like the gentleman from Georgia"; I wish we had 435 Members like him. If we did we would save this country of ours.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The budget for the State government of Georgia for the same period is $108,000,000, with conditional increases estimated all the way from $35,000,000 to $80,000,000. If we use the highest estimate of the cost of Georgia's government, namely, one hundred and eighty-eight million, Georgia taxpayers will pay more than three times as much for Federal Government in the fiscal year of 1950, as they do for State government. If the cost of Georgia's State government should be held at the actual budget of $108,000,000, then Georgians would pay more than five times as much for Federal Government as the cost of State government.

In either case, whether three times as much, or five times as much, the respective cost of the two governments is all out of proportion. It is unreasonable. States' rights cannot survive in this atmosphere and under these conditions. Furthermore, the question presents itself, How long can the State of Georgia remain solvent, when the cost to the taxpayers of operating the State and Federal Government is a minimum of $698,000,000 and a possible $778,000,000?

This contribution of $590,000,000 by the State of Georgia to the Federal Government in the year of 1929 would have paid every penny of the cost of operating the Federal Government for approximately 2 months. So greatly has the cost of operating the Federal Government increased in that 20-year period, that this contribution of $590,000,000 at the present rate of Federal spending, will operate the Federal Government only 5 days.

In addition to these huge sums already mentioned, the taxpayers of Georgia must pay the cost of operating all city governments, county governments, and other miscellaneous governmental subdivisions.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that our natural resources and our productive capacity can permanently support these huge governmental expenses, or anything near these sums. I believe that continuous spending on these levels will surely lead to national bankruptcy, State bankruptcy, and individual bankruptcy. We have survived it this long because of an unprecedented period of production, manufacturing and selling, resulting from accumulated shortages of nearly all consumer goods because of the war. But many of these shortages of consumer goods have now been supplied. Shelves and warehouses have been restocked. Already we are feeling the effects of a buyers market. Unemployment is beginning to increase. Production has caught up with demand in many lines, and the market will no longer support the high capacity production which has provided the jobs and the employment so largely contributing to the prosperity of the past few years.

However much we would like for these good times to continue, we are going to have to face facts and realities. One of these realities is that governmental costs are going to have to be reduced. I believe that this is one of the major problems toward which this Congress should direct its efforts. It is a task so tremendous that intermittent and sporadic efforts in that direction will not suffice. The thread of economy must run through all congressional action.

We have made a beginning, and have taken a step toward reduction of Government cost, by passing through the House Monday a bill to authorize reorganization, consolidation, and elimination of Government agencies. This bill, if wisely used, can be the instrument through which overlapping agencies and positions can be eliminated, and efficiency restored where confusion and inefficiency have prevailed. This reorganization bill is not all that could be desired by any means. It does not contain all the provisions I would like to see in it. However, its purpose is good, and if reorganization plans are submitted under it which will be drawn with the good of the country in mind rather than political advantage, billions of dollars can be saved.

Our Constitution was not drawn and adopted with the idea that Congress should be the rubber stamp of the executive department. I have in years gone by felt that Congress has surrendered too many of its functions to the executive department. Our Government was set up to provide three separate, distinct independent departments, namely, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. It will not remain a balanced government if either of those departments surrenders its prerogatives and functions. It will not remain a balanced government if either of those departments usurps functions and prerogatives which ought to be vested in one of the other departments.

I hope and trust that the majority party, of which I am a member, with the great power belonging to it in the Eighty-first Congress, will not undertake to rush through a program of legislation so fast and so hastily that Congress cannot give adequate consideration to the provisions of every bill we are called upon to enact, merely because it is part of an administration program. To do so would mean actually the surrendering by Congress of the duties and responsibilities which belong to its Members.

No emergency exists now which requires quick passage of speedily drawn and hastily considered legislation.

It is becoming more evident day by day that the American people will find it impossible from our own resources and productive capacity to maintain a high standard of living for the people of every other country on the globe, and at the same time continue to maintain our own high standard of living.

I believe that one of our first considerations should be reduction of our national debt of $252,549,855,401.63. In the past 3 years we have only reduced this debt approximately $6,000,000,000. The time to reduce it is when money is plentiful and times are prosperous. The time may come when we will find it a considerable burden even to pay the $5,500,000,000 interest on this tremendous debt.

I cannot help thinking that the people of the sovereign States of this Nation would do well to begin to think seriously of paying their taxes to their respective State governments and take care of their own functions, rather than send it to Washington and expect the all-wise, omniscient and infallible boards and bureaus here to provide a utopia for them.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield to my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The statement the gentleman has made evidences the fact he has made a very careful study and examination of the subjects which he has touched upon. He has given his brethren wise counsel and the statement he has made is extraordinary and worthy of the examination of the Members of this body. I congratulate the gentleman upon what he has produced because it is a statement of high quality and ought to have good effect.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the gentleman very much.

Considering the situation merely from the standpoint of my own home State of Georgia, I think it is extremely probable that we could take one-fourth the amount of money we will send to Washington in the next fiscal year, which one-fourth would be $147,500,000, add it to our present State budget, and provide for ourselves far, far better roads, larger pensions and assistance benefits to more people and more adequate public services of every kind, than we are getting now by sending it to Washington and then begging for a portion of it to come back to us, from people who do not have half the interest in our problems that we have ourselves, and whose primary interest necessarily is the maintenance and perpetuation of their own particular agencies, boards, and bureaus.

I know that the time is coming again, and it may not be in the far-distant future, when people are again going to recognize the virtues of thrift and economy, the necessity of paying debts, and of conserving our resources. I think that we in this Congress should devote much time to serious consideration of what agencies, boards, and bureaus can be dispensed with, not only in this country, but in our far-flung outposts and branch offices in other countries all over the world. If consideration is given and efforts made in these directions, I have no doubt but that savings can be made which will run into the billions of dollars. That will mean, of course, that some hundreds of thousands of Federal employees are going to have to leave Government service and get into some other line of work. This will, of course, bring objections and protests. However it is going to have to come sooner or later. I believe the sooner it comes, the better it will be for everyone, including the Federal employees.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to tell the gentleman from Georgia how much I have enjoyed the remarks he has made. He talks exactly the way that the people I represent think. I wish that I could tell it to the Congress in the able manner that he has done it. The sooner we get down to the fundamental principles that the gentleman is talking about, the better off we are going to be.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

If we could operate our Federal Government in 1929 with 559,000 employees, and we did so operate it, it is not necessary to have 2,104,000, 20 years later in 1949, and to continue to increase that number at the rate of 297 per day. It should be going in the other direction at a much faster clip than 297 per day.

We face the necessity of choosing between cutting expenses on the one hand, or raising taxes on the other.

The average wage earner now sees approximately one-fifth his wages go for Federal taxes. In other words, he must work Monday for the Federal Government. He must also work the greater part of Tuesday for the city, State, and county governments. That leaves the other three working days for groceries, shelter, heat, clothing, medicine, education, transportation, and the other necessities of life.

We are taxed almost to the breaking point. An increase in taxes would be a step toward inflation and disaster. This is a time for economy—not for more taxes.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, the former chairman of my committee.

Mr. REES. I, too, want to commend the distinguished gentleman from Georgia for the very splendid, effective, and informative statement he has just made, and I trust that the Members of both Houses of this Congress will give heed to what he has had to say.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Kansas.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

RADIO BROADCAST

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week, while driving down to the office, it was my privilege and pleasure to tune in on one of the finest radio broadcasts that I have ever listened to. I thought that the choice of words, and the manner of presentation of this speaker, as well as the subject matter, should be brought to the attention of this body and given wide publicity.

On arriving at my office I called the broadcasting station and asked to speak to the gentleman who had spoken over the air. I asked him for a copy of his remarks, and he gladly sent it to me.

I would like to read it to you at this time:

THE ATTRACTIVE MAN FROM GALILEE

(By Rev. Glendale Burton, minister, Wilson Boulevard Christian Church, of Arlington, Va.)

Jesus of Nazareth is the greatest personality ever to appear in the arena of human activity and play His part on the stage of life. No man equals Him in depth of character, breadth of soul, width of interest, or height of influence. He is the most outstanding individual who has ever trodden the dusty highways of life, or trudged up the steep, jagged hillsides of earth.

Jesus Christ of Nazareth is the Great Central Figure of all time. He divides history in two parts—B. C. (before Christ) and A. D. (in the year of our Lord).

It staggers the imagination to realize that a child could be born in an humble home; that home to be situated in an obscure hamlet, that hamlet to be located in a very insignificant small country less than the size of the State of Maryland; and yet from that humble home, obscure village, and small country should come One, the impact of whose personality should change the whole course of history, revolutionize philosophy, upset governments, revitalize religion, and transform men.

He was born in a conquered province of the Roman Empire held by the iron fist of military power, subject to the yoke of a slave—yet Jesus became the great Emancipator, setting free every man and woman of Adam's race.

He was born of a woman of lowly estate, living in the most despised city, Nazareth, from which "no good ever came." But He became the Fountainhead of all goodness.

He was born in a borrowed manger in the little town of Bethlehem. His father was an humble carpenter; but he instilled in his Son the creative genius of building, not a material house, but of constructing a new mansion of human beings called the Kingdom of Heaven. He lived but a brief 33 years. He was despised, lowly, and ignoble. Caesar ruled a great earthly kingdom, but he did not know that One would arise and found a kingdom greater in territory, wider in scope, infinitely richer in purpose which would endure when the stateliest of monuments and costliest palaces of the Roman Empire should crumble in the dust of oblivion.

He was not a general, yet He was to become the Conqueror of the world—not through the brutality of force but by the breadth of His mighty love.

He traveled little, confining His activity to Palestine, a country 45 miles wide and 100 miles long. He possessed no means of high-powered propaganda. There were no railroads, no steamships, no airplanes, no newspapers, magazines, printing presses, radio, or television.

He possessed no influential name, no wealth or position. He had neither training nor education, except that which He acquired at His mother's knee, in His father's carpenter shop, or in the humble village synagogue. He lived and moved among the common people. When He died they placed Him in a borrowed tomb. The estate He left was only a seamless robe which had been the gift of a friend.

He was not a doctor, yet He healed the sick, opened blind eyes, unstopped deaf ears, cleansed the lepers, and raised the dead. He was not a lawyer, yet He knew the law and interpreted it and applied it to the relationships which should prevail among men. He became the fountainhead of righteousness, and His principles are becoming more and more lodged in the hearts and consciences of men. He was not an author. He wrote no books, composed no poems, compiled no documents, edited no papers, contributed to no periodicals. The only sentence He ever wrote was a line in the sand which disappeared the same day.

No letter of it was preserved. He never used a fountain pen or a typewriter. We have no line, word, or syllable from His hand yet more books have been written about Him and His words than of any other man or group of men. He has affected the life of more people than all the authors of all the ages. The story of His life has been translated into more than 1,100 languages, read by countless millions, and is the best selling story every year.

He was not an orator, yet, "no man spake as this man." His discourses have become the theme of thousands of addresses. His thoughts are simple and clear. Very few adjectives are used—yet each sentence abounds with beauty, meaning, and grace. His sayings are hammered into polished marble, chiseled into imperishable granite, wrought into enduring bronze tablets, written in stained glass windows of numberless churches, fashioned in rich mosaics upon temple walls and set in arch domes of colossal cathedrals. They have been burned eternally into the hearts of the truly redeemed who down through the centuries have found comfort, relief, and healing. His words are literary gems. He stands without a peer in the literary field. Shakespeare, Milton, and Emerson must bow their heads in His presence, recognizing a superior. He used every form of speech without diluting the thought or overornamenting the truth. He was not a poet, yet He has inspired thousands of poets to utter their most sublime expressions.

He was not a musician; yet He inspired Mozart, Mendelssohn, Handel, and others. But for Him the great Christian hymns should have remained unwritten. He inspired Lowell Mason in "Nearer My God to Thee," Toplady in "Rock of Ages," Watts in "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," Charles Wesley in "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and thousands of others.

He was not an artist or a sculptor or a painter. He was a stranger to the canvas; yet He was the inspiration for Raphael, Michelangelo, Hoffmann, and others.

He was not an architect, contractor, or builder. He was a Galilean carpenter—a maker of wooden plows and ox yokes; but He has inspired the noblest, most marvelous architecture known to man. He specialized in character engineering—making men human masterpieces. He took Peter "The big fisherman" and made a saint. He took Saul and made a Paul.

He was not a statesman. He never aspired to official position. He never delved into politics; but He did found a kingdom—the Sermon on the Mount was His constitution. His principles dethrone error, oppression, and tyranny.

At this hour we adore Him:
Beloved Personality,
Lover of the Poor,
Healer of the Sick,
Matchless Teacher,
Incomparable Philosopher,
Ideal of Ideals,
King of Kings;
But beyond all of this, Glorious Saviour.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. SANBORN, for 1 week, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, February 14, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

198. A letter from the Chairman, Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, transmitting the Commission's report on personnel management (H. Doc. No. 63); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

199. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report and findings on the feasibility of the installation of additional generating capacity at Grand Coulee Dam, Columbia Basin project, Washington (H. Doc. No. 64); to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

200. A letter from the Secretary of Defense, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to establish land-based air warning and control installations for the national security, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

201. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a report of the proposed transfer of a motor barge to the central Atlantic area council of the Young Men's Christian Associations for the boys' training camp at Andover, Sussex County, N. J.; to the Committee on Armed Services.

202. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report and findings on the Solano County project in the Central Valley Basin of California (H. Doc. No. 65); to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

203. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 2 of the act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat. 537, 43 U. S. C., sec. 213), relating to additional homestead entries; to the Committee on Public Lands.

204. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated September 3, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a preliminary examination and survey of Mississippi River at Alma, Wis., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved on March 2, 1945 (H. Doc. No. 66); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with one illustration.

205. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 26, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on the Mississippi River between Missouri River and Minneapolis, with a view to harbor improvement in the vicinity of Hannibal, Mo., requested by a resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on May 10, 1945 (H. Doc. No. 67); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with one illustration.

206. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated June 28, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on waterway from Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Harbor, N. C., via Core Sound, in the vicinity of Marshallberg, requested by a resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on April 1, 1946 (H. Doc. No. 68); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with one illustration.

207. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated February 13, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a preliminary examination and survey of Scarboro River, Maine, between Prouts Neck and Pine Point, authorized by the River and Harbor Act, approved on March 2, 1945 (H. Doc. No. 69); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with one illustration.

208. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated September 27, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and two illustrations, on a review of reports on St. Petersburg Harbor, Fla., with a view to further improvement of Bayboro Harbor, requested by a resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on June 27, 1945 (H. Doc. No. 70); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with two illustrations.

209. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 26, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration on a preliminary examination and survey of Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, Wis., authorized by the River and Harbor Act, approved on March 2, 1945 (H. Doc. No. 71); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with one illustration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. COX: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 95. Resolution for consideration of House Joint Resolution 84, joint resolution to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 62). Referred to the House Calendar.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, midst all the traffic of our busy ways we are grateful for this noontide sanctuary of the spirit. Be to us a quickening presence, a sustaining power, a refuge from the confusion and tumult of our times. Direct us now to the sources of moral energy, so that Thy completeness may be linked to the limitations of our unaided strength.

We pray for the President and for the Congress, and for all in every land who bear the responsibility of public office.

As we enter upon the tasks of this week make us patient in argument, charitable in judgment, slow to wrath. As Thou givest us to see the right, make us strong to defend and maintain it, yet always seekers after a durable peace with justice and freedom for all mankind. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MYERS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 10, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"House Concurrent Resolution 1

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in Congress

"Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

"Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

"Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

"Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, October 11, 1931, October 11, 1932, to October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day, in the United States of America: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Eighty-sixth Indiana General Assembly (the senate concurring):

"SECTION 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

"SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith by the clerk of the house to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Indiana."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 1

"Whereas the prosperity of the State of South Dakota is dependent primarily upon farm prices, nevertheless, it is recognized that successful and profitable operation of our gold mines, and particularly the Homestake Mine at Lead, S. Dak., is a vital factor in a well-rounded State economy; and

"Whereas while in the 1930's, gold mining was at a high level of prosperity and South Dakota farmers were suffering from the ravages of drought, grasshoppers, and low prices, now the situation is exactly reversed with an unprecedented high level of prosperity on the farms of this State and a serious depression existing in the gold industry; and

"Whereas the gold-mining properties of the United States and Alaska, and more particularly the gold properties within our State of South Dakota are confronted by tremendously increased wage and material costs and are unable to sell their products in the markets of the world, but are instead compelled to sell only to the United States Government at the inexorable fixed price of $35 an ounce as set forth in the Gold Reserve Act of 1934; and

"Whereas, for example, since 1934, wage costs have more than doubled and material costs have increased 70 percent at the great Homestake Mine at Lead, S. Dak., during which period of time, there has been no increase in the price of gold; and

"Whereas the gold-mining industry of the Nation is at the present time in a precarious state of depression with practically all gold properties either abandoned, shut down, or with production vastly curtailed except for those mining companies which are fortunate enough to produce gold as a by-product to other metals such as silver, lead, copper, or zinc; and

"Whereas the gold mines of South Dakota do not produce other metals, but are dependent solely upon their production of gold; and

"Whereas the gold mines of this State sustained enormous losses during the compulsory period of the shut-down during World War II, and after reopening on July 1, 1945, have been confronted by declining profits and curtailed production;

"Whereas continuance of the gold-mining industry in the Black Hills, and particularly continuance of the operations conducted by the Homestake Mining Co. is of vital importance to the economic welfare of the State of South Dakota: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota Legislature (the house of representatives concurring), That we do recommend that the Congress of the United States amend the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 to permit gold producers of the United States and Alaska to sell their gold in the markets of the world by removing the present restrictions that prevent our citizens from buying, holding, or selling gold either domestically or in the foreign market.

"We recommend that Congress provide for the appointment of a commission or a committee to make a careful study of the relation of gold to the currency and its proper price in terms of dollars, and to formulate legislation to implement its findings."

Resolutions adopted by the Blue Star Mothers of America, at Detroit, Mich., relating to education, housing, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A memorial of sundry citizens of the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing universal military training; to the Committee on Armed Services.

A resolution adopted by landlords of Indianapolis, Ind., protesting against the extension of rent control; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A resolution adopted by a conference of 400 civic leaders and representatives of many groups in Greenwich Village, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation extending the social-security law; to the Committee on Finance.

The memorial of Beatrice Masterson, of Elmhurst, L. I., remonstrating against the persecution of Cardinal Mindszenty; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A letter in the nature of a petition from Mary McDowell, of Hawthorne, N. Y., relating to communism; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted by the San Carlos Tribal Council, San Carlos, Ariz., protesting against the expansion of the powers of the Phoenix regional office of the Indian Bureau at the expense of the San Carlos Indians; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Resolutions adopted by the City Council of the City of Providence, R. I., the Common Council of the city of Kenosha, Wis.; and the commission of the city of Birmingham, Ala., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A telegram in the nature of a petition, signed by E. Reed, executive secretary, Dental Laboratories Institute of America, Chicago, Ill., requesting hearings be held on Senate bill (S. 248) raising the minimum wage to 75 cents; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A petition of sundry members of the Dorton (Ky.) Parent-Teachers' Association, relating to Federal aid to education; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Petitions of members of the Dorton (Ky.) Parent-Teachers' Association, and teachers of the Evarts (Ky.) High School, relating to Federal aid to education; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Petitions of sundry citizens of the United States favoring the enactment of legislation to repeal the Taft-Hartley labor law; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Memorials of sundry citizens of the United States, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to repeal the Taft-Hartley labor law; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. McGRATH (for himself and Mr. GREEN):

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to insist upon and work for the proper kind of Federal rent control legislation to prevent inflationary prices

"Whereas the extraordinarily high cost of living is making such inordinate demands upon the family budget our citizens are finding great difficulty in 'making both ends meet' economically; and

"Whereas unless there is in force the proper kind of Federal rent control legislation inflationary prices will result inevitably: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States be and they are hereby requested to use their efforts to be certain that there shall continue to be the proper kind of Federal rent control legislation in order that our people may be protected by statutory control from such inevitable rise in rent prices; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States."

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations; to the Committee on Finance:

"Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to use their efforts to amend the Federal Social Security Act with the purpose of extending the coverage and the benefits now authorized by such legislation

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States be, and they are, hereby requested to use their efforts to amend the Federal Social Security Act with the purpose of extending the coverage and the benefits now authorized by such legislation; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States."

By Mr. MURRAY:

A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation appropriating sufficient money for the immediate construction of Yellow Tail Dam in Big Horn County, Mont.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on February 8, 1949 (p. 934, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Joint Memorial 2

"Joint memorial of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Montana to the Congress of the United States, the Honorable Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior, Hon. James E. Murray, and the Honorable Zales N. Ecton, United States Senators from Montana, and the Honorable Mike Mansfield, and the Honorable Wesley A. D'Ewart, Representatives from Montana, for an act of Congress or such other authority as may be necessary to allow veterans of World War II just concluded, to acquire submarginal lands from the Department of Agriculture or the Department of the Interior which have been acquired under an act of Congress dated June 29, 1934, known as chapter 865 (48 Stat. 1265–1275) and an act of Congress dated July 22, 1937, known as Chapter 517, title III, section 32 (50 Stat. 525–526)

"Whereas under an act of Congress dated June 29, 1934, known as chapter 865 (48 Stat. 1265–1275) and an act of Congress dated July 22, 1937, known as chapter 517, title III, section 32 (50 Stat. 525–526), the Secretary of Agriculture acquired enormous acreages of land in Montana designated as submarginal lands to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization; and

"Whereas a considerable amount of this land was acquired on Indian reservations from the Secretary of the Interior, and a considerable amount from individual land owners in agricultural sections of the State of Montana. Taking this land from private ownership has resulted in a distinct hardship to the political subdivisions of the State of Montana;

"Whereas it is the considered judgment of your memorializers that a great portion of the lands so acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture are not necessarily submarginal lands but are good agricultural lands which may be utilized for agricultural purposes in Montana to good advantage; and

"Whereas veterans of World War II are unable to acquire agricultural lands in Montana, particularly those owned by the United States under the acts of Congress referred to above; and

"Whereas it would be of great advantage to the people of Montana as well as to the veterans of World War II that such agricultural veterans be afforded an opportunity of acquiring such lands: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Montana Legislative Assembly urges the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as shall enable veterans of World War II to acquire agricultural lands owned by the United States Government, in economical units, or a part of an economical unit, under the submarginal program referred to above at valuations deemed reasonable by the United States Government; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted to the Honorable Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable James E. Murray, and the Honorable Zales N. Ecton, United States Senators from Montana, and the Honorable Mike Mansfield, and the Honorable Wesley A. D'Ewart, Representatives from Montana."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"House Joint Memorial 5

"Joint memorial to the President of the United States, and to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY and the Honorable ZALES N. ECTON, Senators from the State of Montana, and the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD and the Honorable WESLEY A. D'EWART, Congressmen from the State of Montana, for appropriate action to alleviate the shortage of tubular goods and steel necessary for the development of Montana's oil and gas resources, and for the end of discrimination against Montana by the shipment of steel and tubular goods to foreign countries for the development of oil and gas resources in such foreign countries, and the end of the gray market in steel

"Whereas there are vast undeveloped oil and gas resources as well as vast proven oil and gas fields in Montana; and

"Whereas during the past 3 years explorations for oil and gas in Montana have been seriously curtailed and hampered due to the difficulty, and sometimes impossibility, of obtaining the casing and pipe necessary and required for such development work in proven and wildcat oil areas; and

"Whereas this situation has resulted in what has been termed the gray market and exorbitant prices for steel tubular goods; and

"Whereas the ratio of oil discoveries and development of new production has been in almost exact proportion to the amount of pipe and casing obtainable and used; and

"Whereas the steel industry is unable to furnish tubular goods in sufficient quantity to meet the needs and demands of Montana producers in the ordinary channels of trade because of the desire of certain interests to exploit foreign oil resources at the expense of development within the borders of the United States, and has permitted and caused the exportation of thousands of tons of vital steel for the use and development of the oil fields of Saudi Arabia and in other parts of the world outside of the borders of the United States; and

"Whereas the situation is retarding the explorations and development of Montana oil and gas resources: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the President of the United States and Montana's Representatives in the Congress of the United States to take appropriate action to remove any discrimination which may exist against the oil operators of Montana, to the end that an adequate supply of tubular goods be made available in the regular channels of trade, and that conditions be corrected which retard the exploration for oil and gas within the borders of the United States and the State of Montana, so that the gray market in steel will not be necessary or possible; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the chief clerk of the house of representatives to the President of the United States, and to the Honorable JAMES F. MURRAY and the Honorable ZALES N. ECTON, Senators from Montana, and the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD and the Honorable WESLEY A. D'EWART, Representatives in Congress from Montana."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Memorial 2

"Whereas Yellowtail Dam site is located in Big Horn County in southeastern Montana, and Yellowtail Dam will be constructed across the Big Horn River, about three-fourths of a mile above the mouth of Big Horn Canyon—35 miles southwest of Hardin, Montana; and

"Whereas Big Horn Canyon is the passageway of the Big Horn River between the northern end of the Big Horn Mountains and the Pryor Mountains. For more than 50 miles Yellowtail Reservoir will lie within the rugged, inaccessible canyon, the steep walls of which tower hundreds of feet above the narrow and winding river bed, forming a natural damsite of unique splendor that will in future years provide Montana and Wyoming with one of the greatest lake-recreation areas in the Western Hemisphere; and

"Whereas the United States Bureau of Reclamation was authorized by section 9 of the Flood Control Act of 1944, as a part of the Missouri River Basin project to prepare preliminary surveys and construction of Yellowtail Dam; and

"Whereas the Bureau of Reclamation has practically completed preconstruction work at the site of Yellowtail Dam. Design specifications for the dam and power plant have been started. Surveys have been made of the irrigable area, and transmission line location, and plans are ready or completed for construction of access roads, construction camp and other essential base work necessary before actual construction is undertaken; and

"Whereas Yellowtail Dam is being designed to provide for irrigation, hydroelectric power production, flood control, silt retention, conservation of fish and wildlife, recreational development, and other related beneficial uses of value to all mankind; and

"Whereas construction of Yellowtail Dam will make possible the irrigation of 45,000 acres of new land along the Big Horn River from the Big Horn Canyon to approximately 10 miles north of the city of Hardin, and supplemental irrigation water for large areas now inadequately served will be also provided. Because irrigation of lands along the Big Horn, Powder, and Yellowstone Rivers is dependent upon pumping, a source of low-cost power is a prerequisite. Construction of Yellowtail power plant will make possible the irrigation of many proposed and desirable projects along these three valuable but presently little utilized rivers; and

"Whereas construction of Yellowtail Dam offers a priceless solution for the equitable interstate use of the waters of the Big Horn by the creation of the Yellowtail Reservoir on the Montana-Wyoming State line; and

"Whereas power generating facilities to be constructed at the dam will have an installed capacity of at least 120,000 kilowatts, and will produce about 712,200,000 kilowatt-hours of electrical energy annually. The said power produced at Yellowtail Dam will be used for irrigation pumping, and will serve as a part of the Bureau of Reclamation's power system constructed to provide power for construction of other developments and to supply surplus power to principal load centers to permit its use by new and old industries and residences of the area; and

"Whereas the Big Horn River is the greatest silt offender in the entire Yellowstone River system, retention of silt behind Yellowtail Dam will be of material benefit; and

"Whereas fish and wildlife resources will gain by the dam, fishing and hunting, as well as the many allied recreational opportunities that will follow will be of immense value to Montana and Wyoming; and

"Whereas Yellowtail Dam as planned will be a concrete arch-type structure towering some 499 feet above the river bed, and will have a crest length of 1,480 feet, and will have a storage capacity of 1,366,000 acre-feet; and

"Whereas the construction of said Yellowtail Dam will attract new industries into southern Montana, and thereby be of great benefit to the entire State of Montana, as well as the entire Nation, by supplying cheap electricity for industrial and home use, and this postwar period is the time to develop such industries: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana, That the Congress of the United States of America be respectfully urged and requested to make sufficient funds available immediately for the construction of Yellowtail Dam in Big Horn County in southern Montana; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be submitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of the National Congress—ALBEN BARKLEY and SAM RAYBURN—to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives in Washington, D. C., to the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, the Commissioner of Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, the Governor of the State of Wyoming, and the presiding officers of both Houses of the Wyoming State Legislature; and to each of the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the States of Montana and Wyoming."

PROTEST OF TRIAL OF JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY—RESOLUTION OF WASHINGTON HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Washington State House of Representatives protesting the arrest, trial, conviction, and sentence of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty. I ask that the resolution be carried in full in the body of the RECORD. I myself am in full accord with it.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Honorable HARRY S. TRUMAN,
President of the United States:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

Whereas the arrest, trial, conviction, and sentence of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty has shocked the conscience of all the peoples in all the Nations of the entire Christian world; and

Whereas such occurrence shows the underlying spirit of the communistic attack on religion in all forms; and

Whereas the trial of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty must be regarded as a forerunner of comparative trials against other branches of the Christian Church and other religions generally: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, do protest against such trial and do respectfully request your excellency to take every appropriate step to register a protest against the same by whatsoever means you may determine; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, and to each Member of Congress from the State of Washington.

RECLAMATION, IRRIGATION, AND POWER PROJECTS IN THE WEST

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a letter and resolutions from Herbert G. West, of Walla Walla, Wash., executive vice president of the Inland Empire Waterways Association, whose membership embraces the entire Pacific Northwest. Mr. West's letter covers in detail the attached resolutions which were adopted by the association in regard to our great reclamation, irrigation, and power projects in the West.

There being no objection, the letter and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INLAND EMPIRE WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION,
Walla Walla, Wash., January 28, 1949.

Hon. HARRY P. CAIN,

DEAR SENATOR HARRY: The fifteenth annual meeting of the waterways association, held in Lewiston, Idaho, on December 14 and 15, 1948, adopted many resolutions pertaining to the over-all development program which I would like to discuss with you.

I am enclosing a copy of Resolution No. 1, pertaining to the recent press releases to the effect that the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government will recommend the creation of a new Department of Public Works that would assume jurisdiction over the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers. I do not believe it is necessary to elaborate on the resolution as I think it thoroughly covers the situation from our viewpoint.

Resolution No. 2 relates to the review report of the Corps of Engineers in House Document No. 308. The members of our association feel that this comprehensive multiple-purpose report is very extensive and represents a carefully coordinated plan to provide for present and immediate future needs of the Columbia River Basin. We urge the adoption of this report by the Congress with such modifications from time to time as good judgment and planning may dictate. Hearings are being held by the Board of Army Engineers in the Pacific Northwest on this request, beginning in Spokane on January 31, in Seattle on February 1, in Portland, on February 2, and in Boise on February 4. When this report is submitted to the Congress we sincerely and respectfully urge your earnest consideration to introduce appropriate legislation seeking the authorization of the report as a guide for the multiple-purpose plan of development of the Columbia River Basin within the United States.

Resolution No. 4 recognizes the serious shortage of hydroelectric power in the Northwest and urges a $3,000,000 supplemental appropriation to initiate construction of Ice Harbor Dam, the first dam in the series of four dams on the Snake River to channelize that river from the mouth to Lewiston, Idaho. This project will produce approximately 250,000 kilowatts of power besides being an aid to navigation, flood control, and irrigation in Franklin and Walla Walla Counties.

Resolution No. 5 merely reaffirms our position that the comprehensive development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers for navigation remain undisturbed in the department of the Corps of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, United States Army. We do respectfully request your watchfulness on this subject and your support in behalf of its objectives.

Resolution No. 7 is urging your support in the authorization of The Dalles Dam and the high John Day Dam which will provide slack water navigation from the head of the Bonneville Pool to the foot of McNary Dam. It is our understanding that these two projects have been favorably acted upon by the Corps of Engineers and the document should be before the Eighty-first Congress for consideration.

Resolution No. 8 has been before the Congress and we believe that it is worthy of support of the Northwest congressional delegation in seeking the acquisition of the Hood River and Cascade Locks bridges across the Columbia River. These are now private toll bridges, but have been renovated and raised, due to the increased height of the Bonneville Pool, by the appropriation of money by the Congress. It is our feeling that toll bridges across the Columbia River definitely restrict free intercourse of travel and thus injure the economic welfare of the entire region. We would sincerely appreciate your support of such legislation when introduced as we believe it to be of benefit to the entire Pacific Northwest.

Resolution No. 9 is one of the more important ones and can be classified as probably the most important looking to the future. This resolution requests Congress to appropriate a sum of $40,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1950 for McNary Dam construction. This ties in closely with Resolution No. 10, which respectfully requests the Congress to make available $10,000,000 for supplemental appropriation as early as practicable in order to hasten completion of the McNary Dam and to make power available not later than 1953. I do not believe it is necessary to enlarge upon these two resolutions. They speak for themselves. You are all very well familiar with the statements of private and public utility companies, as well as the Governors of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, the Grange, Farm Bureau, all farm cooperatives, and chambers of commerce, who are unanimous in the need of early completion of McNary Dam.

Resolution No. 11 relates to the regular appropriation in the amount of $12,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1950 for construction of Ice Harbor Dam, the first dam on the Snake River. As related before, planning and design of this dam is completed and contracts can be let immediately upon receipt of appropriation money. It is urged that you support this legislation for the same reason that we should support legislation for McNary Dam and the beginning of Chief Joseph Dam.

Resolution No. 12 recognizes that the early completion of construction of the dams on the Snake River to provide slack water navigation from the mouth to Lewiston, Idaho, is essential to the economic welfare of the interior of the Pacific Northwest. I therefore believe that it is appropriate to seek an appropriation of $600,000 in the 1950 fiscal budget to complete the advance planning and designing of Lower Monumental, Little Goose, and Lower Granite Dams in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. Your support of this legislation is respectfully urged.

Resolution No. 15 we only wish to call to your attention at this time. This resolution provides for the change of names of the four dams on the Snake River. The names now employed (Ice Harbor Dam, Lower Monumental Dam, Little Goose Dam, Lower Granite Dam) have no meaning whatsoever other than names employed for navigation purposes. We are asking the State legislatures of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho to memorialize Congress to change these names as follows:

The first dam honoring the memory and work of Dr. Marcus Whitman and to be known as the Whitman Dam.

The second dam honoring the memory and work of Capt. Merriwether Lewis and to be known as the Lewis Dam.

The third dam honoring the memory and work of Capt. William Clark and to be known as the Clark Dam.

The fourth dam honoring the memory and work of the Reverend Henry Harmon Spalding and to be known as the Spalding Dam.

We thought that it was best to have the State legislatures memorialize Congress for these changes of names in order that it would eliminate any possible point of controversy in the Pacific Northwest.

Kind personal regards and best wishes.

Sincerely,

HERBERT G. WEST,
Executive Vice President.

Resolution 1

Now, therefore, be it resolved, The Inland Empire Waterways Association, in regular session this 15th day of December 1948, at Lewiston, Idaho, in light of recent press releases to the effect that the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government will recommend the creation of a new Department of Public Works that would assume jurisdiction over the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers; this association hereby makes known its unanimous and unequivocal opposition to any reorganization proposal to transfer the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers to any other Federal agency, new or old. We firmly believe that the prosecution of navigation, flood control, and other civil works under the Corps of Engineers as prescribed by existing law is efficient; is economical to the Government; is conducted in a thoroughly decentralized manner, giving full voice to State and local groups; is thoroughly coordinated with all other interested agencies, both Federal and State, and is in the best interests of the people of the Nation. Furthermore we believe it would be disastrous to the security of the Nation to take from the officers of the Corps of Engineers, upon whom we depend in time of war, the essential experience and development gained by those officers in large-scale engineering and construction tasks in time of peace. It is, accordingly, further resolved that if and when legislation is introduced to carry out any recommendations of the Commission that this association urge the Congress with all its vigor to include in such legislation phraseology that will clearly exempt the transfer of the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers to any other agency.

Resolution 2

Whereas the Inland Empire Waterways Association, in 1943, urged the adoption of a resolution by the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, to order a review of all reports and surveys by the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, with a view to formulating a definite development program embracing the Columbia River system as a future guide for the region; and

Whereas such a resolution was adopted by the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, immediately undertook the organization of such a review and survey by enlisting the cooperation and support of all Federal and State agencies in the Columbia River Basin; and

Whereas after 5 years of field and office surveys and reviews, the Corps of Engineers, North Pacific division, has developed a comprehensive and carefully coordinated plan to provide for the present and immediate future needs of the Columbia River Basin, also for later developments that will be needed as the region expands: Now, therefore, let it be

Resolved, That the Inland Empire Waterways Association, in regular meeting held in Lewiston, Idaho, this 15th day of December, 1948, does hereby adopt such comprehensive plan as the guide for the Inland Empire Waterways Association, with such modifications from time to time as good judgment and planning may dictate; be it further

Resolved, That the Inland Empire Waterway Association respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to immediately authorize the adoption of such comprehensive multiple-purpose plan of development for the Columbia River Basin within the United States; be it further

Resolved, That the Inland Empire Waterways Association respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to specifically designate existing Federal agencies as responsible for construction and planning as their respective existing responsibilities appear in the over-all comprehensive multiple-purpose plan.

---

Resolution 4

Whereas the Pacific Northwest is experiencing a serious shortage of electric power to meet the needs of an ever-increasing population and expansion of its industrial base; and

Whereas the construction of large hydroelectric projects require several years to complete; and

Whereas the planning and design of Ice Harbor Dam, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, is for all practical purposes completed: Now therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to appropriate a sum of $3,000,000 by supplemental appropriation in order to initiate construction of Ice Harbor Dam at once.

---

Resolution 5

Now, therefore, be it resolved, That the Inland Empire Waterways Association, in regular meeting held in Lewiston, Idaho, this 15th day of December 1948, does hereby reaffirm its position that the comprehensive development of the Columbia and Snake Rivers for navigation remain undisturbed in the Department of the Corps of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, United States Army.

---

Resolution 7

Resolved, In view of the surveys and report on the construction of the Dalles Dam and the High John Day Dam having been favorably submitted by the North Pacific Division, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, the Inland Empire Waterways Association respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to authorize these two projects thus completing the authorization of the slack water navigation program from the head of the Bonneville pool to Lewiston, Idaho, as contained in House Document 704, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, Columbia and Snake Rivers, Oreg., Wash., and Idaho.

---

Resolution 8

Be it resolved on this 15th day of December 1948 during the fifteenth annual meeting of the Inland Empire Waterways Association, That the officers of this association continue their efforts in support of the legislation in Congress leading toward the acquisition of the Hood River and Cascade Locks (Wauna Toll Bridge Co.) bridges by the Federal Government for toll-free operations; the construction of all structures of a like kind hereafter with the cooperation of the Federal Government and the highway departments of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho; and toward the maintaining of all such structures as free bridges.

Resolution 9

Resolved, In order to complete construction of McNary Dam and delivery of power by 1953, it is essential that appropriations be increased for the fiscal year 1950. Therefore, the Inland Empire Waterways Association respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to appropriate for the fiscal year 1950 the sum of $40,000,000 for McNary Dam construction.

---

Resolution 10

Resolved, That a definite power shortage exists in the Pacific Northwest, attested to by both public and private power interests. The urgent need of power from McNary Dam at the earliest possible date is essential to the national welfare and security. Therefore, the Inland Empire Waterways Association respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to make available $10,000,000 by supplemental appropriation as early as practicable in order to hasten the completion of McNary Dam, thus to make power available not later than 1953.

Resolution 11

Resolved, The advance planning and design of Ice Harbor Dam, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, the first in a series of four dams on the Snake River to provide slack water navigation from the mouth to Lewiston, Idaho, is for all practical purposes completed. Therefore, the Inland Empire Waterways Association does respectfully request the Congress of the United States to appropriate the sum of $12,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950 to begin construction of Ice Harbor Dam.

---

Resolution 12

Resolved, The early completion of construction of the dams on the Snake River to provide slack water navigation from the mouth to Lewiston, Idaho, is essential to the economic welfare of the interior of the Pacific Northwest. Therefore, the Inland Empire Waterways Association does respectfully request the Congress of the United States to appropriate the sum of $600,000 in the 1950 fiscal budget to complete the advance planning and design of Lower Monumental, Little Goose, and Lower Granite Dams, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho.

---

Resolution 15

Whereas the Corps of Engineers, Department of the Army, has favorably recommended the construction of a series of four locks and dams to provide slack water navigation from the mouth of the Snake River to Lewiston, Idaho; and

Whereas the site locations are, namely, Ice Harbor Dam, at mile 10.2 above the mouth of the Snake River; Lower Monumental Dam, at mile 44.7; Little Goose Dam at mile 72.2; Lower Granite Dam, at mile 113.1; and

Whereas the above-mentioned dams are enduring structures constructed for the welfare and security of the citizens of the United States; and

Whereas certain names of early explorers and missionaries, are indelibly linked with the Snake River and honored and respected nationally: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Inland Empire Waterways Association, in regular annual meeting this 15th day of December 1948, in Lewiston, Idaho, does hereby respectfully memorialize the legislatures of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, to in turn memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to authorize and so legislate; so that the names of the dams hereinabove referred to be now named: dam at mile 10.2 above the mouth of the Snake River—Whitman Dam, honoring the memory and work of Dr. Marcus Whitman; dam at mile 44.7 above the mouth of the Snake River—Lewis Dam, honoring the memory and work of Capt. Merriwether Lewis; dam at mile 72.2 above the mouth of the Snake River—Clark Dam, honoring the memory and work of Capt. William Clark; dam at mile 113.1 above the mouth of the Snake River—Spalding Dam, honoring the memory and work of Rev. Henry Harmon Spalding; and be it further

Resolved, That each Member of the Congress of the United States from the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho be respectfully requested to support such legislation seeking early and favorable action.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY—RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF LOWELL, MASS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and myself, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the city of Lowell, Mass., relating to General Pulaski's Memorial Day.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in Congress

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated from October 11, 1929, to October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day in United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Common Council of the City of Lowell and State of Massachusetts—

SECTION 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY—RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the City Council of Omaha, Nebr., and addressed to the Congress.

It urges the approval of pending legislation directing the President to officially proclaim October 11 each year as a memorial to Gen. Casimir Pulaski, the great Polish hero, who gave his life in the cause of American independence on October 11, 1779.

When we are bending such great effort to the winning of international understanding and good will I think it is particularly appropriate that we consider the subject and that this petition be noted and given full consideration in connection with the legislation to which it refers.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's memorial day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, October 11, 1931, October 11, 1932, to October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's memorial day in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Omaha, Nebr., That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve if passed, the General Pulaski's memorial day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Nebraska.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY—RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY CITY COUNCIL OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and myself, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the City Council of Providence, R. I., relating to General Pulaski's Memorial Day.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October, 1779, is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated from October 11, 1929, to October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day in United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Providence, State of Rhode Island, and Providence plantations—

SECTION 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from the State of Rhode Island.

JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD a telegram I have received from Albert Scavarda, grand knight, Knights of Columbus, embodying a resolution adopted by Kenosha (Wis.) Council, No. 973, Knights of Columbus, at its regular meeting in Kenosha, on February 8, 1949.

This resolution protested, as did hundreds of other resolutions, letters, and telegrams to me and to other Senators, against the outrageous prosecution of Cardinal Mindszenty and other spiritual leaders in Hungary and in other land-controlled Balkan States.

I have spoken on this matter on the floor of the Senate on January 10, right after the announcement of Cardinal Mindszenty's imprisonment, and again on February 8, and I shall continue to express my views along with my brother Senators in opposition to this fiendish persecution of man's spiritual conscience.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KENOSHA, WIS., February 12, 1949.
Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution on the arrest and trial of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty was adopted by the Kenosha Council, No. 973, Knights of Columbus, at its regular meeting in Kenosha, Wis., on February 8, 1949:

"Whereas the conscience of the American people and liberty-loving people all over the world is shocked and outraged by the imprisonment and trial of His Eminence, Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, primate of Hungary, whose only offense is his courageous espousal of truth and justice and his fearless resistance to the dictates of Red Russia; and

"Whereas Kenosha Council, No. 973, Knights of Columbus, has noted with approval that the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, and the Honorable Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, and the Members of the House of Representatives have voiced their condemnation of the trial and conviction of His Eminence: Be it

"Resolved, That Kenosha Council, No. 973, Knights of Columbus, earnestly entreat the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Members of Congress of the United States to demand the immediate release of this shepherd of millions of Hungarian people and to protest against the repetition of such iniquitous action unparalleled in our jurisprudence and revolting to our civilization; be it further

"Resolved, That it is the firm conviction of the members of our council, that failure by our Government zealously to explore all channels through which remedial action may be taken in behalf of the innocent victim of this travesty on justice will damage beyond measure the cause of human liberty everywhere as further evidenced by the persecution of the ministry in Bulgaria of more recent date, and will make a mockery of the affirmation of faith in fundamental human rights which is written into the preamble of the United Nations Charter; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of the resolution be spread upon the minutes of our council and copies thereof forwarded to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States; the Honorable Dean Acheson, Secretary of State; Hon. Lawrence Smith, Congressman of the First District of Wisconsin; and the Honorable Senators Joseph R. McCarthy and Alexander Wiley."

ALBERT SCAVARDA,

WILLIAM L. NELSON VETERANS MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for designation of the United States veterans' hospital now being constructed at Wilmington, Del., as the William L. Nelson Veterans Memorial Hospital, and I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the body of the RECORD at this point the text of the bill and a statement concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 928) to provide for designation of the United States Veterans' Administration hospital now being constructed at Wilmington, Del., as the William L. Nelson Veterans Memorial Hospital, introduced by Mr. WILLIAMS (for himself and Mr. FREAR), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Veterans' Administration hospital now being constructed at Wilmington, Del., shall be known and designated on the public records as the William L. Nelson Veterans Memorial Hospital.

The statement presented by Mr. WILLIAMS (for himself and Mr. FREAR) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. WILLIAMS (FOR HIMSELF AND MR. FREAR)

There is under construction at this time a United States Veterans' Administration hospital at Wilmington, Del., which it is expected will be completed sometime next year, and it is the purpose of the proposed bill to give it the name of William L. Nelson, the only Delaware boy who was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor posthumously during the Second World War. He was a Sergeant of the Sixtieth Infantry, Ninth Infantry Division. He was born at Dover, Del., and entered the military service at Middletown.

He won the Congressional Medal of Honor posthumously as a result of action at Djebel Dardys, northwest of Sedjenane, Tunisia, April 24, 1943. The Congressional Medal of Honor is the highest decoration which is awarded to American soldiers, and is awarded only for conspicuous gallantry above and beyond the call of duty in action involving actual conflict. It is awarded by the President of the United States in the name of the Congress. The following is the citation covering the exploit and description of the action in which Sergeant Nelson paid the supreme sacrifice: "G. O. No. 85, 17 December 1943. For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at risk of life, above and beyond the call of duty in action involving actual conflict. On the morning of April 24, 1943, Sergeant Nelson led his section of heavy mortars to a forward position where he placed his guns and men. Under intense enemy artillery, mortar, and small-arms fire, he advanced alone to a chosen observation position from which he directed the laying of a concentrated mortar barrage which successfully halted an initial enemy counterattack. Although mortally wounded in the accomplishment of his mission, and with his duty clearly completed, Sergeant Nelson crawled to a still more advanced observation point and continued to direct the fire of his section. Dying of hand-grenade wounds and only 50 yards from the enemy, Sergeant Nelson encouraged his section to continue their fire and by doing so they took a heavy toll of enemy lives. The skill which Sergeant Nelson displayed in this engagement, his courage, and self-sacrificing devotion to duty and heroism resulting in the loss of his life, was a priceless inspiration to our armed forces and were in keeping with the highest tradition of the Army of the United States."

It is therefore deemed fitting and appropriate that the new United States Veterans' Administration Hospital, nearing completion at Wilmington, Del., should be given the name of William L. Nelson. Naming this hospital after a deceased World War II veteran, who won the Congressional Medal of Honor, makes it not only a memorial to his gallant exploits, but it is also a distinction and honor to all war veterans.

AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION LAWS RELATING TO STOWAWAYS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary from the Department of Justice.

I ask that an explanation, furnished me by way of a letter from the Assistant to the Attorney General, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, together with the text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the text of the bill and the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 953) to amend the immigration laws relating to stowaways, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, 39 Stat. 875, as amended (8 U. S. C. 136), is amended as follows: "After the word 'stowaway' strike out the following language: ', except that such stowaway, if otherwise admissible, may be admitted in the discretion of the Attorney General'".

SEC. 2. Section 16 of the Immigration Act of 1924, 43 Stat. 163, as amended (8 U. S. C. 216), is hereby further amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsections:

"(d) The owner, charterer, agent, consignee, or master of any vessel arriving at the United States from any place outside thereof who fails to detain on board any alien stowaway until such stowaway has been inspected by an immigrant inspector, or who fails to detain such stowaway on board after inspection if ordered to do so by the immigrant inspector, or who fails to deport such stowaway on the vessel on which he arrived or on another vessel at the expense of the vessel on which he arrived when required to do so by an immigrant inspector, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each alien stowaway in respect of whom such failure occurs. Pending final determination of liability for such fine, no vessel shall be granted clearance, except that clearance may be granted upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine, or of a bond with sufficient surety to secure the payment thereof approved by the collector of customs. The provisions for detention of aliens for examination before boards of special inquiry and the right of appeal provided for in sections 16 and 17 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, 39 Stat. 887 (8 U. S. C. 153), shall not apply to aliens who arrive as stowaways and no such alien shall be permitted to land in the United States, except temporarily for medical treatment, or pursuant to such regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe for the ultimate departure or removal or deportation of such alien from the United States.

"(e) The owner, charterer, agent, consignee, or master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any place outside thereof which has on board any alien stowaway shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each alien stowaway aboard such vessel. No vessel shall be granted clearance while such fine is unpaid, except that clearance may be granted upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine, or of a bond with sufficient surety to secure the payment thereof approved by the collector of customs. No fine imposed under the provisions of this section shall be subject to refund, but the Attorney General may, upon application in writing therefor, mitigate such penalty to not less than $200 for any such violation for which such penalty is imposed, upon proof satisfactory to him that the presence of the alien stowaway aboard the vessel at the time of its embarkation from the last port outside the United States was not known to and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by the owner, charterer, agent, consignee, and master of the vessel aboard which such stowaway arrived in the United States."

The letter presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 17, 1949.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The economic, political, and social conditions prevailing in many parts of the world, particularly in those countries which suffered most heavily as the result of war, have enormously increased the problems connected with the immigration of peoples to the United States. One of the most vexatious of such problems is that of the stowaway. This problem appears to be in the ascendancy. Information available to this Department indicates that the owners and masters of vessels are not exercising proper precaution to prevent the boarding of their vessels by stowaways at points of embarkation of vessels bound for the United States. The provisions of section 2199, title 18, United States Code, provide punishment for stowing away on vessels or aircraft. Additional sanctions seem required, however, to curb this practice, and there is need for some penal provision against the owners and masters of the vessels. This Department recommends the enactment of appropriate legislation.

Stowaways are now excludable under section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (8 U. S. C. 136), but the statute authorizes the Attorney General in his discretion to admit the stowaway if he is otherwise admissible. This language was written into the act of 1917 prior to the enactment of later immigration statutes which made necessary certain documents including immigration visas in order for aliens to enter the United States. At that time there was no numerical restriction on immigration. It was therefore not believed that the fact that an alien was a stowaway should be a mandatory cause of exclusion. Invariably an alien stowaway not only avoids the payment of his passage to this country, but also is lacking any appropriate immigration documents for admission to the United States. The language authorizing the Attorney General to admit stowaways, if otherwise admissible, is therefore usually meaningless and should be repealed.

This Department is convinced that the practice of stowing away on vessels proceeding to this country can best be minimized by legislation placing certain responsibilities, subject to penalties, upon transport lines engaged in transoceanic travel.

Examples of other sanctions of similar nature may be found in sections 9 and 10 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (8 U. S. C. 145, 146), and in sections 16 and 20 of the Immigration Act of July 1, 1924 (8 U. S. C. 167, 216).

Enclosed herewith is a draft of a bill to effectuate the foregoing recommendations. It would repeal the discretion in the Attorney General to admit stowaways and would provide penalties in the sum of $1,000 to be paid by the owner or master of any vessel arriving in the United States with a stowaway aboard and a penalty in like sum for failure to comply with certain orders of immigrant inspectors in relation to such stowaways. The bill would further authorize the Attorney General to mitigate the penalty for bringing a stowaway to this country to not less than $200 each in proper cases.

A similar bill (S. 1450) was introduced in the Eightieth Congress at the request of this Department.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this recommendation.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

CLARIFICATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE IMMIGRATION ACT OF 1917

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary from the Department of Justice.

I ask that an explanation, furnished me by way of a letter from the Assistant to the Attorney General, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, together with the text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 954) to clarify the provisions of section 8 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 880; 8 U. S. C. 144), introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 880; 8 U. S. C. 144), be and the same hereby is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That any person, including the owner, operator, pilot, master, agent, or consignee of any means of transportation, who shall bring into or land in the United States, by any means of transportation or otherwise, or shall attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by any means of transportation or otherwise, or shall conceal or harbor, or attempt to conceal or harbor in any place, including any building, or any means of transportation, any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector or not lawfully entitled to enter or to reside within the United States under the terms of this act or any other law relating to the immigration or expulsion of aliens, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 and by imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, for a violation of any of the foregoing provisions in respect to each and every alien in relation to whom such violation occurs."

The letter of explanation presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 18, 1949.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Paul Evans, decided March 15, 1948, brought into focus the need for an amendment of the immigration laws. The defendant in that case was apprehended in the act of concealing a number of aliens who had not been legally admitted to the United States. The Government prosecuted him pursuant to the provisions of section 8 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (8 U. S. C. 144), which provides that any person who shall bring into the United States or shall conceal any alien not lawfully admitted shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, but the Supreme Court held that the section under which he was prosecuted was inadequate to provide a penalty for concealing or harboring such aliens. The result of the decision was to leave the penalty provided by the section applicable only to bringing into or landing in the United States aliens not entitled to enter but not applicable to the offense of concealing such aliens.

In holding that the statute did not provide an enforceable penalty for the act of concealing, the Supreme Court recognized the uncertainty in the law, referred to the matter of supplying the deficiency, and concluded its opinion by stating:

"This is a task outside the bounds of judicial interpretation. It is better for Congress, and more in accord with its function, to revise the statute than for us to guess at the revision it would make. That task it can do with precision. We could do no more than make speculation law."

In accordance with the above-quoted suggestion, it is recommended that the statute in question be revised. A draft of a bill to effectuate such recommendation is enclosed.

It will be observed that the bill proposes a number of changes in the existing language of the section. This section was enacted prior to the use of many modern means of transportation, and its language was directed principally to the transportation of aliens by water. The bill proposes changes in the language with a view to bringing the section more in keeping with modern means of transportation. The bill also proposes that an offense thereunder shall constitute a felony whereas it is now described as a misdemeanor, notwithstanding the fact that the penalty was fixed at a maximum of $2,000 fine and imprisonment for 5 years. Changing the classification of the offense from a misdemeanor to a felony seems more in keeping with the severity of the penalty. The words "any other law relating to the immigration or expulsion of aliens," at the end of the description of the offenses, were inserted so that the penalties for violation thereof would not be limited to violations of the Immigration Act of 1917, but would also apply to the Immigration Act of 1924, and any other laws which may be enacted of like character. The change of language which is designed to meet specifically the deficiency found by the Supreme Court in the existing section will be found in the last clause at the end of the bill.

Enactment of this measure will greatly facilitate control over the smuggling of aliens and the harboring of aliens who have illegally entered the country.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this recommendation.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940, RELATING TO NATIONALITY OF NATURALIZED VETERANS, ETC.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, from the Department of Justice.

I ask that an explanation, furnished me by way of a letter from the Assistant to the Attorney General, be printed in the RECORD, at this point as part of my remarks, together with the text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 955) to amend the Nationality Act of 1940, to preserve the nationality of naturalized veterans, their wives, minor children, and dependent parents, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (h) of section 406 of the Nationality Act of 1940, approved December 24, 1942 (56 Stat. 1085; 8 U. S. C. 806), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(h) Who is a veteran of the Spanish-American War, of World War I, or of World War II, his wife, minor children, or dependent parents."

The letter of explanation presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 27, 1949.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This Department invites your attention to the desirability of amending subsection (h) of section 406 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (56 Stat. 1085; 8 U. S. C. 806).

Section 404 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 1170; 8 U. S. C. 804) provides for the loss of nationality by a person who has acquired his citizenship by naturalization if such person resides for at least 2 years in a territory of a foreign country of which he was formerly a national or in which he was born, if he acquires through such residence the nationality of such foreign country by operation of law; by residing for 3 years in the territory of a foreign country of which he was formerly a national or in which he was born; or residing continuously for 5 years in any foreign country.

Section 406 of the Nationality Act of 1940 lists a number of classes of persons to whom section 404 does not apply. Subsection (h) of section 406 exempts veterans of the Spanish-American War and of World War I, their wives, minor children, or dependent parents.

No reason is discernible why this exemption should not be extended to veterans of World War II.

Accordingly the Department of Justice recommends that section 406 of the Nationality Act of 1940 be amended so as to include veterans of World War II. A draft of a proposed bill to effectuate the foregoing purpose is enclosed.

An identical bill (S. 489), which was introduced in the Eightieth Congress at the request of this Department, passed the Senate on January 12, 1948.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

ROYALTIES FOR USE OF INVENTIONS FOR BENEFIT OF OR BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary from the Department of Justice.

I ask that an explanation, furnished me by way of a letter from the Assistant to the Attorney General, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, together with the text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 956) to provide for the adjustment of royalties and like charges for the use of inventions for the benefit of or by the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of October 31, 1942 (56 Stat. 1013-1015, 35 U. S. C. 89-96), be, and it hereby is, repealed, and that all agreements in adjustment of royalties or otherwise made thereunder be, and the same hereby are, terminated as to future force and effect: Provided, however, That, as to proceedings initiated by and now pending under notices previously issued and as to rights accrued or liabilities incurred prior to repeal thereof, the provisions of such act shall be treated as remaining in full force and effect for the purpose of concluding, settling, sustaining, qualifying, or defeating any pending matter, suit, or claim thereunder.

SEC. 2. Whenever an invention, either patented or unpatented, shall be manufactured, used, sold, or otherwise disposed of by or for the United States, subject to a royalty or like charge therefor believed to be unreasonable or excessive by the head of the department or agency of the Government which has ordered such manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition, the head of the department or agency of the Government concerned, in behalf of such agency and the Government as a whole, shall give written notice of such fact to all known parties having a beneficial interest in such royalty or like charge, whether as payors or payees thereof. Within a reasonable time after the effective date of such notice, and in no event in less than 30 days, the head of the department or agency of the Government issuing such notice shall by order, directed to all parties to whom notice shall have been given, or who shall be found to have an interest in such proceeding, fix and specify such rates or amounts, if any, of such royalties or like charges as he shall determine are fair and just, taking into account all defenses available to a defendant in a patent infringement action and such other conditions as may be determined to be appropriate by reason of governmental procurement as contrasted with nongovernmental procurement, and shall authorize the payment thereof, if any be allowed, by any payor to any payee on account of such manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition: Provided, however, That any party to whom such notice is given, if he so requests within 30 days from and after the effective date of such notice, may, at such time as may be fixed by the head of such department or agency, present in writing or in person any facts or circumstances which may, in his opinion, have a bearing upon the rates or amounts of such royalties or like charges, if any, to be determined, fixed, and specified in view of the conditions aforesaid, and any order fixing and specifying the rates or amounts of such royalties or like charges, if any, shall be issued by the head of such department or agency within a reasonable time after such presentation. After the effective date of the notice, any payor affected by the notice may continue to collect royalties or like charges payable by or for the United States on account of such manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition of the invention, but all such royalties or charges shall be segregated and safely kept by such payor and shall not, until issuance of the order herein provided, be paid over to any payee of such royalties or like charges. After issuance of such order, any payor thereunder, unless otherwise directed in the order, may continue to collect royalties or other charges as aforesaid, but shall not pay over to any payee affected by the order any such royalties or other charges in an amount or at a rate in excess of that fixed and specified by the order and shall refund any such excess to the United States in such manner as directed by the order. The payee of such royalty or like charge shall not have any remedy by way of suit, set-off, or other legal action against the payor for the payment of any additional royalties or like charges foreclosed by such order, or for damages for breach of contract or otherwise, but such party's sole and exclusive remedy, except as to the recovery of the amounts fixed and specified in said order, shall be as provided in section 3 hereof. The notice and order provided for herein shall be mailed to the last known address of all parties to whom the same shall be directed and such notice shall be effective upon receipt or 5 days after the mailing thereof, whichever date is the earlier.

SEC. 3. Any party entitled to receive such royalties or like charges, claiming to be aggrieved by any order issued pursuant to section 2 hereof, may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims or in the district courts of the United States insofar as such courts may have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims to recover such sum, if any, as when added to the royalties or other charges fixed and specified in such order shall constitute fair and just compensation to such party for the manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition for the United States of the invention or inventions within the purview of the order, taking into consideration all of the circumstances set forth for the determination of such royalties in section 2 hereof. In any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general and special, that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for patent infringement as set forth in title LX of the Revised Statutes, or any other defense, general or special, which might preclude the right of such party to claim, or which might limit the rate or amount of, a royalty or other like charge.

SEC. 4. The head of any department or agency of the Government which has ordered the manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition of an invention, whether patented or unpatented, and whether or not an order has been issued in connection therewith pursuant to section 2 hereof, is authorized and empowered to enter into an agreement, before suit against the United States has been instituted, with the owner of, or a party entitled to receive a royalty or like charge under such invention, in full settlement and compromise of any claim against the United States accruing to such owner or party under the provisions of this act or any other law by reason of such manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition, and for compensation to be paid to such owner or party based upon future manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition of said invention. The head of any department or agency of the Government which has entered into an agreement under the provisions of this act or the act of October 31, 1942 (56 Stat. 1013–1015, 35 U. S. C. 89–96) is authorized and empowered to enter into supplemental agreements modifying, amending, or revoking such agreement as the equities of changed circumstances may warrant, any other law to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 5. Whenever a reduction in the rates or amounts of royalties or like charges is effected by order, pursuant to section 2 hereof, or by compromise or settlement, pursuant to section 4 hereof, such reduction shall inure to the benefit of the Government either by way of a corresponding reduction in the contract price to be paid directly or indirectly for such manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition of such invention, or by way of refund to the Treasury of the United States by the payor of such royalties or like charges insofar as the same may have been foreclosed from payment thereof to the payee.

SEC. 6. The head of the department or agency of the Government concerned is further authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to delegate and provide for the delegation of any power and authority conferred by this act to such qualified and responsible officers, boards, agents, or persons as he may designate or appoint.

SEC. 7. For the purposes of this act, the manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition of an invention, whether patented or unpatented, by a contractor, a subcontractor, or any person, firm, or corporation for the Government shall be construed as manufacture, use, sale, or other disposition for the United States; and for the purposes of the act of June 25, 1910, as amended (40 Stat. 705; 35 U. S. C. 68), the use or manufacture of an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States by a contractor, a subcontractor, or any person, firm, or corporation for the Government and with the authorization or consent of the Government, shall be construed as use or manufacture for the United States.

SEC. 8. This act shall apply to all royalties or like charges directly or indirectly charged or chargeable to the United States for any supplies, equipment, or materials to be delivered to or for the Government from and after the effective date of the notice provided for in section 2 hereof and shall also apply to all royalties or like charges charged or chargeable directly or indirectly to the United States for supplies, equipment, or materials delivered to or for the Government prior to the date of such notice insofar as such royalties or like charges have not been paid to the payee thereof prior to the effective date of such notice.

SEC. 9. The head of each department or agency of the Government may issue such rules and regulations and require such information as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act. The provisions of section 10 (1) of an act approved July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 787), as amended, and title XIII of Public Law 507, Seventy-seventh Congress, shall be applicable to the payor and payee of any royalty or like charge for an invention, whether patented or unpatented, manufactured, used, sold, or otherwise disposed of for the United States, and the term "defense contract" as used in said act shall mean and include an agreement for the payment of royalty or like charge regardless of the date of such agreement, under or by virtue of which any royalty or like charge is directly or indirectly paid by the Government or included within the contract price for property sold to or manufactured for the Government.

SEC. 10. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to preclude the applicability of section 408 of Public Law 528, Seventy-seventh Congress, as the same may be heretofore or hereafter amended so far as the same may be applicable.

SEC. 11. If any provision of this act or the application of any provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, or if any provision of this act shall be inoperative by its terms, the validity or applicability of the remainder of the act shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect 90 days after approval.

The letter presented by Mr. MCCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 27, 1949.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There appears to be a need for the enactment of a permanent statute for the adjustment of royalties and like charges for the use of inventions for the benefit of or by the United States.

Under the act of June 25, 1910, as amended (36 Stat. 851, 35 U. S. C. 68), the Government and its contractors are authorized to use patented inventions upon the payment of reasonable and entire compensation for such use. Defenses of invalidity, etc., are available as in ordinary infringement suits. It has been held, however, that the act of June 25, 1910, does not apply when the Government or a Government contractor is already licensed under a patent. Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. v. Isherwood (5 F. 2d 924). The result of this decision is that, despite a declared policy that the United States should be entitled to use patented inventions upon the payment of reasonable compensation, this policy is defeated whenever the Government or a person or corporation having a contract with the Government involving the use of certain inventions has entered into patent-license agreements with the owners of such inventions. As a consequence of that decision the Government has sometimes been forced to pay unreasonable royalties which may have been provided for by the license. Also, it must pay the royalties specified in the license agreement even where the patent may be invalid, or when the licensor for some other reason has no just claim to the royalties.

This situation was temporarily corrected during the war by the Royalty Adjustment Act (October 31, 1942, 56 Stat. 1013, 35 U. S. C., secs. 89–96) whereby the Government was authorized to reduce royalties payable under existing licenses where such royalties were excessive. This act is temporary wartime legislation and will at some early date become ineffective.

In view of the Isherwood decision, it would appear desirable to incorporate the principles of the Royalty Adjustment Act into the law as a permanent measure applicable both in wartime and peacetime. A draft of a proposed bill to effectuate this purpose is enclosed. The proposed legislation represents the consolidated views of the Departments of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Justice.

Enactment of the proposed bill before the termination of the Royalty Adjustment Act is necessary in order to avoid reestablishing the situation which existed at the time of the passage of that act.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this recommendation.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

MYRA M. HARDY

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 71), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Myra M. Hardy, widow of Charles Oscar Hardy, late an employee of the Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

DEVELOPMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC HEALTH UNITS—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on the 17th of January, I, along with certain distinguished Members of the Senate, introduced Senate bill 522, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act, to authorize assistance to States, and political subdivisions in the development and maintenance of local public-health units, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent that there may be a reprint of the bill, and that on the reprint the names of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] to be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATION OF WALTER L. POPE TO BE CIRCUIT JUDGE, UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, and in accordance with the rules of the committee, I desire to give notice that a public hearing has been scheduled for Monday, February 21, 1949, at 11:30 a. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, upon the nomination of Walter L. Pope, of Montana, to be circuit judge of the United States Court of Appeals, for the Ninth Circuit, vice Francis A. Garrecht, deceased. At the indicated time and place all persons interested in the nomination may make such representations as may be pertinent. The subcommittee consists of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], chairman, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is concluded.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

During the delivery of Mr. DONNELL'S speech,

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to address an inquiry to the acting majority leader. Is it the intention to call the calendar?

Mr. MYERS. No. I intended to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to agree to such a request, so that we may clear the record and pass the call of the calendar, in order that the Senator from Missouri may proceed at his leisure.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROPOSAL TO PLACE STATE LEGISLATORS ON A. F. OF L. PAY ROLL

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, an Associated Press dispatch issued under date of February 12 includes the following quoted language:

The A. F. of L. is considering putting State legislators on its pay roll so labor sympathizers can afford the lawmaking jobs.

This would be part of an extremely broad plunge into national political affairs about to be launched by Labor's League for Political Education, the American Federation of Labor's political arm.

Heartened by its success in helping elect President Truman last fall, the league is stepping up its national activities and planning extensive campaigns on State and local levels.

TO ENCOURAGE CANDIDATES

Details were worked out at the A. F. of L. executive council's recent midwinter session at Miami, Fla.

League leaders decided that union members or people sympathetic with labor's aims could have a great voice, or even control, in State legislatures if more such persons could be induced to run for office.

It was recognized, however, that the pay for State legislators is so low in most States that labor people often cannot afford to run for office or take time out from regular jobs for lawmaking.

Thus, it was proposed and virtually decided that the league will help elect and thereafter augment the salaries of legislators endorsed by labor where they have insufficient funds of their own to get by.

CITE A STATE FUND

The proposal was made by a high-ranking A. F. of L. official in a written statement presented to the labor league's administrative council.

Mr. President, I consider to be exceedingly unwise and highly reprehensible the proposal that the Federation of Labor put on its pay roll members of State legislatures. I should consider to be equally unwise and reprehensible a proposal, were one to be made, to put members of a State legislature on the pay roll of an organization which is or shall be created to promote the interests of management. Were proposals to be made to put Members of Congress on the pay roll of either an organization operated in the interest of labor or of an organization operated in the interest of management I should likewise consider such proposals to be exceedingly unwise and highly reprehensible.

My reason for the views I have stated are:

First. A person who is chosen to membership in a legislative body thereby becomes a part of that governmental unit the laws of which that legislative body enacts, and should under no circumstances allow himself to be placed in a position in which he is subject to the danger of allowing the performance of his official functions to be influenced by obligations to others.

Second. A person who is chosen to membership in a legislative body is thereby selected as an official of all the people within the jurisdiction of that body, and should not in his participation in its affairs accept any gift which is likely to cause or tend to cause him to be responsive solely to the interests of only a part of such people.

Third. For an official to be paid money, as is planned under the current proposal, would strongly tend to cause him to be responsive to the demands or wishes of the donor organization in the performance of his official duties.

Fourth. If the precedent of such proposal to place legislators on the pay roll of an organization formed for the promotion of the interest of one group of the population be established it may reasonably be expected that other organizations, perhaps of industry, such as railroads, or mine owners, or of the learned professional groups or of some other segment of our people, which may consider its members or the public interest to be in jeopardy because of public legislation, will follow the examples of such precedents and by paying either gratuities or salaries to legislators seek to make such legislators either exceedingly friendly to or perhaps virtually agents of the donor organization to carry out its will rather than to perform, free from bias or influence, the duties of the public official positions to which such legislators have been chosen.

Fifth. The proposal approaches closely and may easily lead to bribery of public officials.

Sixth. In addition to the evils which I have suggested which would result from carrying into effect the American Federation of Labor proposal, it may reasonably be concluded that as a likely result thereof not only would there be an undermining of the character and stamina of the recipients of the gifts, but also a crop of legislation in furtherance of special interests rather than of the general good.

Seventh. No self-respecting legislator could accept money under such a proposal, with the probable resultant feeling of obligation to the donor, with the diminished or extinguished zeal which he would experience in advocacy of a measure designed for the general good but opposed to the desire of the donor organization, or perhaps of entire omission or abandonment by him of such advocacy because of the desire of the donor organization, and with the mortification or embarrassment which he would be likely to suffer—that is the legislator—should he after the receipt of the money from the organization decline or fail to carry out the desire of such organization.

Although larger salaries are frequently paid to judicial and executive officials than are paid to the members of the legislative bodies, and consequently there may not exist in the case of the executive or judicial officer the urgent financial need which in the case of members of legislatures is the reason for the current proposal of the American Federation of Labor, yet, Mr. President, on principle, if it be proper for organizations such as labor unions, or political arms thereof, or manufacturers' associations, to assist by financial contributions during the term of office the members of the legislative branch of any unit of American government, it would be equally justifiable for such organization also to render assistance by such contributions during the respective terms of office to the officers of each of the other two coordinate branches of government; in the executive branch of mayors, governors, and even the President, and in the judicial branch to judges of the courts, from the lowest of them to and including the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is difficult to imagine a plan more violative of the principle that public officials are not to become private agents of special interests, more hostile to the view that no man can serve two masters, more conducive to embarrassment, degradation, and corruption of public officials, and more likely to result in gross disregard of an egregious injury to public welfare than is the proposal set forth in the Associated Press dispatch previously mentioned.

The proposal which is being considered by the American Federation of Labor to put State legislators on its pay rolls, if once placed in effect, may easily be followed by like proposals to place on the pay rolls of labor organizations Members of Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I hope that this pending proposal will be abandoned in its incipiency.

I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be printed as a part thereof the editorial appearing in the Baltimore Sun of this morning, entitled "A Curious A. F. of L. Scheme To Subsidize Legislators."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A CURIOUS A. F. OF L. SCHEME TO SUBSIDIZE LEGISLATORS

That is a curious dispatch from Washington which reports an A. F. of L. plan to subsidize State legislators friendly to labor. The plan apparently would be to put lawmakers on a special union pay roll if they bound themselves to see the public welfare through union eyes. The idea is limited so far, apparently, to State legislators.

The reason for the State limitation may be guessed at. A. F. of L. interests suffered a shattering surprise in the Supreme Court the other day on the closed-shop cases. They had attacked State provisions against the closed shop on constitutional grounds. But a normally prounion court found it could not in this case strain the constitutional doctrines enough to come out the labor way.

That returned the unions to the necessity of securing what they want from State legislatures. The proposal to supplement the salary of legislators friendly to labor follows. It is a proposal which wise heads within the labor movement will wish to reconsider and probably in the end to withdraw.

First of all, why should there be any need for this adventure? All State legislators are now paid, some very well. The State legislative sessions run only 40 to 114 days and in a recent year the national average was only 93 days. It is hard to believe that prospective legislators able to judge labor's claims fairly are too poor to meet these requirements without a union subsidy.

There is another consideration which the wiser labor leaders will keep in mind. Grant for the sake of the argument that some State legislatures are relatively conservative, in much the way the National House of Representatives is relatively conservative. But this is not because the members from industrial areas are relatively conservative.

It is because the makeup of many State chambers and the National House gives the rural areas wider influence than they get, say, in the United States Senate. In the Senate, elected by State-wide vote, massed urban population can often outvote rural congressional districts.

It follows that many city legislators now are as friendly to labor as labor could wish. To subsidize labor men running for office in the cities would hardly improve on the situation as it now is in the National House and many of the State legislatures. And to subsidize such men in rural areas would very likely be to kindle the kind of rural sentiment which many times has frustrated labor's legislative plans.

For countrymen would be quick to see the most serious objection of all, the one raising the question of morality and even of loyalty. A proposal by the Association of Manufacturers to subsidize poor men who would vote the NAM way would arouse a roar of outrage, and rightly. It is merely a symptom of our present confusions that the A. F. of L. proposal is made in quarters which would most loudly denounce such an NAM scheme.

It just is not true in the United States that labor can get fair play in legislation only by subsidizing legislators. It is still true in the United States that all groups in the population will fare best when independent men are elected to consider the interests of all groups.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that I completely associate myself with his observations on the basic principles of good government which he has risen to defend.

Along the same line, I point out that, of course, one of our difficulties today is that many people feel that our representatives in various legislative bodies, on a State basis as well as on a Congressional basis, do in fact represent special interests, and do in fact sit in their legislative seats not as representatives of all the people, but as representatives of certain forces which exercise tremendous influence on their elections and on their income.

I point out to the Senator from Missouri that I have had pending for a long time in the Senate a resolution which, so far as this body is concerned, would require every Member of the United States Senate to place on record for public inspection all the sources of his income, no matter where the source. If we are going to retain the confidence of the American people in the legislative process, they are entitled to know to what extent, if any—and they are entitled to draw their own inferences—the sources of income of any legislator may affect the votes which he casts, either in the United States Senate or any other legislative body.

Up to date I have not been able even to obtain a hearing on my resolution; but I say that it is fundamental to good government and to the preservation of a sound legislative process. If men do not wish to make the sources of their income public, they do not have to run for office. But if they stand before the American people for election to the United States Senate, then I say that they should be willing to make the record public as to where they get their income, and in what amounts.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as bearing upon the very matter upon which the Senator from Missouri has so eloquently spoken today, an article which appeared in a recent issue of This Week magazine, written by a State senator in the Oregon State Legislature. The article is entitled "I Am a $5-a-Day Senator."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I AM A $5-A-DAY SENATOR

(By Richard L. Neuberger)

My ears still burn from the scolding given me by a prominent constituent who visited the capital of our State on urgent business and could not find the senator from his district at any of the leading hotels. He wondered sarcastically where I had been keeping myself in Salem.

When I told him my wife and I had to live in a small auto court on the edge of town because my pay as a State senator averaged only $5 a day, he was flabbergasted.

Millions of other citizens of the United States, I have concluded, must be similarly uninformed. Otherwise, would they let the people who set policy for their schools, highways, courts, and welfare institutions work for lower pay than a baby-sitter or a caddie on a golf course?

I belong to the most neglected lawmaking body on earth—an American State legislature.

Nor is my State, Oregon, out of line with the national pattern. In New England, for example, Connecticut pays its legislators $600 for a 2-year term. The most recent session went on for 145 days, giving the senators and representatives a daily wage of $4.13. Vermont pays the framers of its laws $750 for one term of office. At the last session this meant $6.88 a day. And New Hampshire doles out just $200 to its legislators every 2 years. The 1947 session lasted 182 days, making the salary of New Hampshire senators and representatives $1.09 daily, the lowest in the Nation.

It's pretty much the same everywhere. The most recent Missouri legislature worked 6 months—which made its daily pay $9.41. West Virginia legislators get $500 a year. Texas pays $10 for the first 120 days, $5 thereafter. Utah musters yearly pay of $300. Tennessee's scale is $4 a day, a wage which vanishes after the seventy-fifth day of a session.

LUCKY HANDFUL

In evaluating these wages, remember that the legislators have to leave their homes and live at the capital. A few States—notably Alabama, Arkansas, Washington, Kansas, and Arizona—add modest maintenance allowances to meet the hotel expenses of legislators. But the majority of States still require their lawmakers to eat and sleep in a distant city on wages that the most unskilled laborer would spurn.

As a friend of mine in the Montana Legislature says, "I appreciate the privilege, but I don't know how long I can afford it."

Only a handful of States pay salaries to their legislators which total more than $100 a month for an entire year. These generally are the States which pay an annual salary. New York leads the list with $5,000 a year. New Jersey and Illinois are next with $3,000. Following them are Massachusetts with $2,759, Michigan with $2,400, and Ohio with $2,600. Pennsylvania and Maryland are the only other States above $1,200.

Over all, the average annual pay of each legislator in the Nation is about $900.

The other night my wife and I totaled up how much it will nick our savings to have me serve as an Oregon State senator. In addition to losing my normal income as a writer and journalist for nearly 3 months, we are behind at least $5 a day. And we economize by pooling our groceries and cooking with the family of a young senator in an adjacent auto court. We have a car pool, too. (We get 10 cents a mile expense money, but only for one round trip from home to the capital.)

SECRETARIES DO BETTER

There is one economy I have not yet practiced. Almost half our members try to struggle along financially by listing their wives as their secretaries. The wife then goes on the pay roll at $7 a day (a new bill may raise it to $8). This, combined with the member's $5 or $6 (he gets paid less than the secretary), just about enables these senators and representatives to break even.

Wives of most legislators are not trained stenographers and the business of the State is not exactly expedited by their efforts. As I write this, a senator at a nearby desk is attempting to dictate a proposed statute to his wife. The wife cannot take shorthand. The senator must linger several seconds over each phrase; later the wife will diligently hunt for the right keys on the typewriter for an hour or two. A bill which may change educational policy for Oregon's quarter of a million school children might wind up with a typographical error that will put the State supreme court to work for weeks.

THE CITY GETS A LAUGH

The economies forced upon members of the legislature often give the capital city a chuckle. More than one dignified senator has been sternly reprimanded for preparing breakfast on a hot plate smuggled into his hotel room. And virtually every member picks up a few extra dollars at the end of the session by selling his set of the State's legal code to a bookstore or law library.

"I ought to keep those books," a young businessman in the senate confided, "so I'll know exactly what laws we passed or amended, but, by golly, I'm so far behind I've got to have that extra $50."

It may all sound slightly comic, but there is an aspect to it which rubs away the humor. There are 90 members in our legislature, and for every member and representative a half-dozen lobbyists crowd the capitol cloakrooms and hotel corridors. Armed with liberal expense accounts, they like nothing better than to pick up a legislator's dinner check, provide him with a bottle of liquor or a baked ham, or furnish him with a car and driver. It's gotten to the point where if you're a good lobbyist you can sometimes swing a vote for a steak dinner.

The lower the pay of a senator or a representative, the less well he is equipped to resist such blandishments. A man who would never think of accepting a bribe will let a lobbyist take care of some of his meal checks. It all seems perfectly innocent. But when the time comes for the lobbyist to ask a favor, the member is hard put to turn him down.

The lobbyist's request may be trifling and perfectly proper; he may use his friendship with lawmakers merely to hasten passage of a harmless bill. But then again, the request may relate to exploitation of the State's natural resources. A lumber company may hope to cut timber on school lands without competitive bids. A State may suffer a loss in millions because it is unwilling to authorize the few thousands in legislative pay which would make its senators and representatives self-supporting. It's the old story of penny-wise, pound-foolish.

I know a man who lobbies at State capitals all along the Pacific coast. He admits frankly that it is easier and cheaper to bring his influence to bear in Oregon than in California, where members are paid $1,200 a year plus expenses.

DIME-STORE LOBBYING

"The Oregon legislators are just as honest but less independent," confides this lobbyist. "Their measly pay makes them susceptible to what I call dime-store lobbying. You can get a key committee member indebted to you for the price of eggs and bacon."

In some States reports frequently hint of some senator or representative allowing his hotel bill to be paid by the local utility company. How much independence can be expected of a lawmaker under such circumstances?

In our own legislature I notice an increasing number of members who are openly on retainers from corporations or trade-unions. They do not have to live within their pittance from the State. They are company lawyers or labor officials. But how will the interest of the public fare when it conflicts with that of the private organizations on whose pay rolls these men serve at the same time that they enact the State's laws?

Stunted legislative salaries work adversely in another manner. Members are under intense personal pressure to adjourn speedily and go home. They see their bank accounts melting away.

Put yourself in the place of a young electrical contractor I know, for example, who not only has to pay his living costs in the capital and support his household at home, but also hire a skilled man to carry on his business while he's gone.

FAST WORK

Yet the State's business must be transacted. Taxes must be levied and policies decided. When I served in the Oregon House of Representatives before the war, we rushed through bills in the closing days that not more than two or three of us had read. And they affected such vital matters as Columbia River water power and the commitment of insane persons.

What is the solution? The Council of State Governments, a national organization, recommends that legislators in all 48 States be paid an annual salary in keeping with their responsibilities. This would enable them to spend time on State problems all the year around, rather than only while the legislature is in session. As it is now, many men and women go to our State capitals wholly uninformed on the great issues they must settle.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

In 24 States the pay of legislators is fixed by the State constitutions. Some of these constitutions were written in pioneer times when a hotel room was 50 cents a night and a chicken-liver breakfast cost a quarter. The Council of State Governments believes legislative salaries should be set by statute so they may be varied with economic changes as they occur.

But, basically, the long-range answer is for the average citizen to take a more immediate interest in the government closest to him and his family, the government of his State. Not only the pay of legislators needs correcting. Seven dollars for a secretary fails to compete with the far higher wages she can receive from the Federal Government. I couldn't get a competent stenographer to go to the legislature until a family friend volunteered to do it "for the experience." Like her boss, she is losing money living at the capital.

Furthermore, virtually all State legislative districts in America require reapportionment. But the citizen, with his eyes on distant Washington, D. C., has failed to see that this is done. Our legislature has not been reapportioned since 1910. As a result, although the State constitution requires that all Senators represent equal numbers of people, I have 78,170 constituents while a member a few rows away has 7,268.

PREP SCHOOL FOR PRESIDENTS

We neglect our legislatures, yet we expect them to furnish our national leaders of the future. Washington and Jefferson were members of the colonial legislature of Virginia. Abraham Lincoln served in the Illinois State Legislature for 7 years. Theodore Roosevelt and Franklin D. Roosevelt graduated from the New York Legislature at Albany. Mention a prominent United States Senator and the chances are he began his career as a State legislator.

Lately Congress has been occupied with raising the pay of the President and other National Government officials, in line with the rise in salaries in private business. But there's been little talk about the far more overdue pay rises for State legislators. A notable exception is Michigan, where legislative salaries have been increased from $3 a day to $2,400 a year. Let's hope this is a straw in the wind.

We often speak glibly of States' rights when we want to express alarm over the encroachment of the Federal Government on local authority. Too often we forget that States' responsibilities are a partner of this slogan.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I greatly appreciate the contribution which my friend from Oregon has made. I had secured, at the moment he asked me to yield, consent of the Senate to the inclusion in the RECORD at that point as a part of my remarks of the editorial appearing in this morning's Baltimore Sun. I desire to emphasize particularly a few sentences which appear in the body of that editorial. It is entitled "A Curious A. F. of L. Scheme To Subsidize Legislators." One of the sentences in the editorial reads:

> The plan apparently would be to put lawmakers on a special union pay roll if they bound themselves to see the public welfare through union eyes. The idea is limited so far, apparently, to State legislators.

A little further along in the editorial I find this sentence with respect to the curious proposal of the A. F. of L.:

> It is a proposal which wise heads within the labor movement will wish to reconsider, and probably in the end to withdraw.

Near the end of the editorial is this very clear and pungent statement:

> For countrymen would be quick to see the most serious objection of all, the one raising the question of morality and even of loyalty. A proposal by the Association of Manufacturers to subsidize poor men who would vote the NAM way would arouse a roar of outrage, and rightly. It is merely a symptom of our present confusions that the A. F. of L. proposal is made in quarters which would most loudly denounce such an NAM scheme.
> It just is not true in the United States that labor can get fair play in legislation only by subsidizing legislators. It is still true in the United States that all groups in the population will fare best when independent men are elected to consider the interests of all groups.

Mr. President, I desire to touch very briefly today upon what is probably even a far greater and more important point than that which I have thus far referred.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Before the Senator leaves the subject which he has been discussing, may I inquire whether he has a copy of the resolution adopted at Miami?

Mr. DONNELL. No, I have not. However, I have in my hand the Kansas City Star of yesterday, February 13, with an extended Associated Press dispatch. Indeed, it is the first article on the front page of the Kansas City Star. It is entitled "A Labor 'Subsidy'." The subheads are, "A. F. of L. would put State legislators on pay roll so that they could 'afford' to run. May pay poll tax, too. This would boost the number of eligible voters in the South. A national newspaper and radio program also proposed to carry political views."

Apparently there is an identical article in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of yesterday.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator think it is quite fair to the A. F. of L. to attack them the way he has done without first getting a full copy of the resolution which was introduced?

Mr. DONNELL. I think it is not only fair, but I think it is imperative. One of the great news services of the country, the Associated Press, without any qualification whatsoever, has carried the dispatch which I have read. It appears in two of the leading newspapers of my State. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat is one among three great newspapers in that metropolis. The Kansas City Star is a great newspaper known throughout the Central West. It is published in Kansas City. I think we are entitled to take the word of the Associated Press, without requiring certified copies or other copies of the resolution, for the purpose of calling attention to the importance of the American Federation of Labor abandoning any such idea as this.

Further in response to the Senator, the fact that a great newspaper such as the Baltimore Sun has printed this interesting and important editorial is in itself indicative of the fact that it is appropriate and timely that this subject be discussed today on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I realize that my distinguished friend has had a great deal of experience in public life. If he is interested, I can show him one quotation after another from the Associated Press which is absolutely false. When I was Governor of my State, newspapers having the Associated Press coverage would leave entire paragraphs out of releases which I had given to the Associated Press.

In other words, if I make myself clear, the excerpts which the distinguished Senator has read from the Kansas City Star and the St. Louis Globe-Democrat may be absolutely true, and yet a part of the release given out by the A. F. of L. may have been eliminated.

It seems to me that we are entitled to have a full copy of the resolution, because the A. F. of L. made a remarkable record during the war for loyalty, and distinguished itself by the vast amount of work which it accomplished during that time. I believe that upon reflection the able Senator will agree with me that the full resolution should be obtained before he goes further.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I may say that I thoroughly agree that we should have in the Senate, and I hope there will be placed before the Senate by any Senator who can secure it, an exact, verbatim copy of what was done.

In this connection I call to the attention of the Senator the concluding sentence which I read from the Kansas City Star article with reference to the proposal. The sentence reads as follows:

> The proposal was made by a high-ranking A. F. of L. official in a written statement presented to the Labor League's administrative council.

I call to his attention also the fact that the preceding sentence of the article reads:

> Thus, it was proposed and virtually decided that the league will help elect and thereafter augment the salaries of legislators endorsed by labor where they have insufficient funds of their own to get by.

Mr. President, what I am saying is no attack upon the American Federation of Labor. I have a very high admiration for the fine public service it has rendered. I realize, as does the Senator from North Dakota, that during the war the American Federation of Labor made a notable and outstanding contribution to the welfare of our Nation.

What I attack here today is the principle of any such proposal as this one, a principle which is wrong and is a mistake and is reprehensible. If my statement of facts is incorrect, obviously the correct statement of facts should be placed in the RECORD.

Perhaps a mistake occurs here or there, of course, but I submit that in the Senate day after day and week after week we rely, generally speaking with assurance, upon dispatches sent out by the great press services of the country, particularly when they are used by outstanding journals as leading articles of those publications in our various communities.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. LANGER. In the first place, the article does not state who gave the interview. It simply says "a high ranking A. F. of L. official." Furthermore, the article does not say that such an agreement has been made. It simply says that the matter was "virtually decided."

Let me call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Missouri to the fact that I do not have the reliance he has upon the Associated Press. I remember only too well when in this very body, in 1915 or early 1916, I believe it was, the former Senator La Follette, Sr., was criticized by this body when it relied upon an Associated Press dispatch in connection with World War I. At that time the Senate nearly expelled Senator La Follette. But a few months later the Associated Press abjectly apologized for having given circulation to something that did not actually take place at the meeting at St. Paul, Minn., in connection with which the distinguished Senator La Follette was accused of saying something that he actually did not say at all.

So I am sure that the distinguished Senator from Missouri upon reflection will wish to obtain the entire resolution, because I know the fairness in his heart. I know his generosity, and I am sure he would not wish to say anything about the American Federation of Labor until he was entirely satisfied as to the real facts.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DONNELL. I do.

Mr. MORSE. Is the junior Senator from Oregon correct in his understanding that the Senator from Missouri has made these comments today in the belief that at the American Federation of Labor convention a proposal was made that when men endorsed by the American Federation of Labor for candidacy for State legislatures do not have sufficient financial resources with which to run for the office and serve during the term of the office, the American Federation of Labor should supplement their State salaries with labor money?

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator is precisely correct.

In addition, I have relied upon two further facts, or at least two further statements in the article by the Associated Press. One is as follows:

> Details were worked out at the A. F. of L. executive council's recent midwinter session at Miami, Fla.
> League leaders decided that union members or people sympathetic with labor's aims could have a great voice, or even control, in State legislatures if more such persons could be induced to run for office.

I also relied, if I may answer the Senator further, upon this additional sentence of the article appearing in the Kansas City Star, to which I have referred, as carried in the dispatch for the Associated Press:

Thus, it was proposed and virtually decided that the league will help elect and thereafter augment the salaries of legislators endorsed by labor where they have insufficient funds of their own to get by.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Is it the Senator's position today that if such a proposal were in fact made, it cannot be reconciled with good principles of sound government?

Mr. DONNELL. Precisely.

Mr. MORSE. Is it also the position of the Senator from Missouri that if such a proposal in fact were not made, then it is incumbent upon the A. F. of L. to make that fact very clear to the American people and issue a statement as to what the real facts in the matter are?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, without undertaking to tell the A. F. of L. what its duties are, I would say that it is certainly the privilege of the A. F. of L. to make a statement in that connection; and I shall be glad, if that is desired, to carry to the floor of the Senate, when it is furnished to me, anything the American Federation of Labor may desire to say in regard to the premises.

However, the Senator from Oregon is precisely correct. It would make no difference whether it were the A. F. of L., the CIO, the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Medical Association, the Association of Railway Labor Executives, or any other organization, whatever it might be, of either labor or management. Even if it were by mistake, if that were possible, or even if it shall prove to be the fact, which I have no reason to think, the very fact that the proposal is heralded to the public, placed before the Nation, and read by millions of people demands and makes not only important but imperative that the views now being expressed in the Senate be placed before the people of the United States. I take that position, not because they are my personal views or because I am the one who is making this statement, but because sound judgment, political morality, and proper concepts of government and of the proper functioning of a legislative body all demand that clarification be made of the proposal which is said to have been virtually adopted.

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 74)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1180.)

REPORT ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 75)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1180.)

THE PROPOSED NORTH ATLANTIC SECURITY PACT

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I now desire to address myself briefly to a further proposition which likewise appears in the newspapers, and I assume that the Senator from North Dakota will not be unduly critical of me if I accept the newspaper account, at least tentatively, for purposes of making a suggestion.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say that I would never be critical of the distinguished Senator from Missouri, because 99 percent of the time he is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. I wish to say that the loyalty and good friendship of my esteemed colleague, the Senator from North Dakota, justify a use of the superlative, but the fact is that I am wrong many more times than he so generously indicates.

However, I desire to adopt as the thesis of the further remarks I shall make, a portion of an important article likewise appearing on the front page of the Kansas City Times. Those Members of the Senate who are familiar with the newspapers of Kansas City will recall that the morning Kansas City Star is known as the Kansas City Times. The Kansas City Times of February 12, last Saturday, the day before yesterday, carried an article entitled: "United States Pledges Aid—Norway Is Assured It Would Have Substantial Military Backing—Long Talk on Problems—Oslo Foreign Minister Leaves for London After Meeting With Acheson."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks this article be set forth in its entirety.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in this article we are told that the United States was reported to have assured Norway on February 11 that it can enter the proposed North Atlantic alliance as a full partner and with assurance of substantial military backing from this and other member countries.

The article then proceeds to recite:

That summary of the basic American attitude toward Norway's defense problems is understood to have been given to the Norwegian Foreign Minister, Halvard Lange, by Secretary Acheson in an 80-minute conference at the State Department this afternoon.

That is, on February 11.

It appears, according to this article, that earlier in the day Mr. Lange had conferred briefly with President Truman. After meeting with the Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, he wound up his week-long visit to Washington with a call on the Republican foreign policy leader, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. The article then continues as follows:

Acheson and Lange issued a joint statement saying that they had held a "full and frank" discussion of the objectives and nature" of the North Atlantic security project.

The article then continues with respect to a further statement by Mr. Lange. Then, further in the article, is this:

Lange first saw Acheson Monday and raised a half dozen major questions regarding the Atlantic treaty proposal and the role Norway might play in it. He presented today a memorandum of the questions he raised in the first meeting and received answers from Acheson.

The article proceeds:

While the meeting was secret, it was understood that in general, Acheson covered these points.

There appear then a number of points, the third one of which is the one to which I address myself. In order that the third one may properly be before the Senate, however, I shall read points 1 and 2. I quote from the article. These are points, "it is understood," so the article states, covered in general by Secretary Acheson.

1. The United States and other North Atlantic countries—seven are now negotiating a treaty draft here—

That is to say, in Washington—

would be glad to see Norway join the group when it is enlarged before the treaty is put into final form and readied for signing. But no official invitation was issued to Norway to join and responsible informants insisted that no pressure was exercised to influence the Norwegian foreign minister one way or the other.

This is in bold type:

2. The United States, subject to Senate approval of the treaty, will make the strongest possible commitment to give prompt and effective aid if any one of the countries in the Alliance is attacked, but only Congress can declare war.

Then, the third of these points, being the one to which the attention of the Senate is specifically invited at this moment:

3. Military action, therefore, cannot be committed in advance. But—

Notice this sentence—

But in joining the Alliance the American Government would subscribe to the principle that an attack on one member nation was an attack on all, and this would be interpreted as a moral commitment to fight.

Mr. President, it is to this language, "this would be interpreted as a moral commitment to fight," that attention is respectfully directed. If the President of the United States of America shall make a moral commitment, the Nation must, and I believe it will be, scrupulously careful to keep that commitment, just as fully as if it were a legal commitment. Our national word, as well as the word of the individual members of this great legislative body, should be as good as our bond. So, Mr. President, if that be true, and again I may say to the Senator from North Dakota, I have not seen the draft—I do not know whether he has—of the proposed North Atlantic alliance pact, but if it be true, as stated in this article from the Kansas City Times, which in turn derived the information from the Associated Press—if it be true that Mr. Acheson in general covered the point that "in joining the alliance, the American Government would subscribe to the principle that an attack on one member nation was an attack on all"—and I say, if it be true, Mr. President, to read the remainder of the sentence, that "this would be interpreted as a moral commitment to fight," I want to protest, here and now, against our country being made subject to any moral commitment which, in good conscience, would in the ultimate effect require Congress to go ahead and declare war sometime, even though Congress has the constitutional power to determine whether or not war should be declared.

Mr. President, a legal commitment to fight would be, in effect, a promise to declare war. And, of course, any such legal commitment in the North Atlantic alliance pact is recognized to be improper. Yes, the earlier point I read before this third one itself says—and I quote it again, "only Congress can declare war." Of course, section 8 of article I of the Constitution says:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to declare war.

If it be true that the proposed Atlantic pact is to include something which is going to involve, or may be believed justly and reasonably by the other signatories to involve, a moral commitment to go to war, I protest against the inclusion in that pact of any such provision.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am scarcely in a position to speak for the Secretary of State on this subject. I am in position to speak for myself. I think the Senator will find when the pact is available for specific study that that North Atlantic community agreement, which is misnamed when it is called an alliance, because of the connotations which that word involves historically, is based essentially on the theory of the Rio pact, which starts out with the same general assertion of common interest the Senator has quoted in respect to the proposed North Atlantic community agreement. I remind the Senator, however, that under the Rio pact it is spelled out specifically that each signatory power retains unto itself the entire right of decision respecting the implementation of its obligations both as to its individual contribution and as to its collective contribution in respect to an ultimate armed attack.

I repeat, I am not even attempting to respond for the Secretary of State; I am responding only for myself. I am saying to the Senator that inasmuch as this is the outcome and the implementation of the resolution which the Senate adopted late last spring by a vote of 64 to 4, I know at least what was intended in connection with the prospectus, and I should say to the Senator I would expect that the complete right of decision respecting the type of contribution to be made either individually or collectively in the presence of an armed attack would remain exclusively with each signatory, and that this fact would be made plain.

For myself, I may add that in my opinion the mere formal recognition of this community of interest in the event of an armed attack upon the Atlantic community, without another word in the treaty, would be an infinite assurance against world war III. In my opinion, if the Kaiser in World War I and the Fuehrer in World War II had been on notice that an armed attack against any of the friendly nations with whom we associate ourselves would be considered a cause even for us to consider and study and determine whether or not we would enter into the common defense, it would have stopped both those wars before they occurred, and in my opinion that one single designation of a commonalty of interest in the North Atlantic pact, without any implementation at all, is the best assurance against world war III.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator. May I respectfully ask him a question? Am I correct in understanding, or in assuming, that the Senator would not favor including in the North Atlantic pact anything which constitutes a moral commitment to fight on the part of the United States of America?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator means an automatic commitment, my answer is Yes. Obviously, something is meant by a general assertion that we find common interest in our mutual safety. The implementation, I repeat, of that recognition, so far as the Senator from Michigan is concerned—the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] will speak for himself, but I know he agrees—so far as the implementation of any such community of interest is concerned, the decision will remain at home.

Mr. DONNELL. But the Senator would not favor, would he, a North Atlantic pact containing within it a moral commitment on the part of the United States to fight?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Not without its own independent decision to that end.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator, and I appreciate his contribution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. My name has been brought into the controversy.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Texas in a moment.

Mr. President, it was my privilege some few weeks ago to read a very large portion of the very interesting debate which took place at the time when the resolution which was adopted last spring by a vote of 64 to 4 was being considered. I have read over the debate in large part, and I remember that the Senator from Michigan then, in response, as I recall, to vigorous questioning by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], gave assurance, without any shadow of a doubt, that in his opinion, that is, in the opinion of the Senator from Michigan, the adoption of that resolution would still leave it open to this country to determine whether or not it would enter into further commitments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That continues to be the opinion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to say that I did not hear all the discussion, but I assume it was with regard to the assumed obligations of the United States in the so-called North Atlantic Pact.

Mr. DONNELL. If the Senator would like the precise language which was under discussion, I shall be glad to give it. I had quoted from an Associated Press dispatch appearing on the front page of the Kansas City Times of February 12, in the course of which reference was made to a meeting between Mr. Lange, the representative of Norway, and Secretary Acheson, representing this country. The dispatch says:

> While the meeting was secret, it was understood that in general Mr. Acheson covered these points.

And the third of the points was this, to which I particularly addressed myself:

> Moral action, therefore, would not be committed in advance, but in joining the alliance the American Government would subscribe to the principle that an attack on one member nation was an attack on all.

The portion from there on was what I was particularly addressing myself to.

> This would be interpreted as a moral commitment to fight.

I was protesting, inasmuch as the word of our country, its moral obligation, ought to be, I believe, as good as its bond—against the inclusion of any such moral commitment which would, in effect, mean a legal commitment, if we value the rule of the observance of obligations.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not, of course, approve of any language which may be adopted which could be construed as automatically involving the United States in war.

Mr. DONNELL. Or as a moral commitment to fight?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course. In the case of governments I do not know the difference between moral commitments and legal commitments. I certainly would not desire the adoption of any language which would morally commit us to fight. I think our morality is worth something in the world, and we would not want to play with a moral commitment, even though we might not be legally bound. But there are many people, and we have found them in government and elsewhere, who would favor automatically going to war, which would mean letting European nations declare war and letting us fight.

Mr. DONNELL. Which would, of course, be entirely contrary to the Constitution of the United States, would it not?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly. Congress alone has the power to declare war. Of course individual Senators declare war sometimes.

Mr. DONNELL. But those are only local wars.

Mr. CONNALLY. Seriously, I would not vote for any language of that kind. I have so told the Secretary of State, and I think he knows that I feel as does the Senator from Michigan, that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations would not approve or adopt any form of language in an international agreement which would commit us to go to war when some other country in Europe might be attacked. We are not responsible for the disagreements which may arise in the countries of Europe. Any European nation might attack another nation, not merely the one country about which we hear so much talk.

I would not attempt to assess all the different ramifications involved but when and if the situation shall arise, the Government of the United States can legally, morally, and constitutionally determine what our course shall be under the given circumstances; that is reserved to the United States. If we think the controversy or situation is of such a nature that we should go to war, we can do so. If we think it is not of such a nature, we shall not go to war.

That is my horseback attitude in regard to the question at the moment.

Members of the Foreign Relations Committee are in communication with the Secretary of State and have conferred with him a time or two, and we shall confer with him again regarding these matters. The Senator from Missouri need not be disturbed about the attitude of some of us, at least, regarding the whole proposition. We are making it very plain to the Secretary of State, and to anyone else who has a part to play in regard to the matter, that that is our attitude.

Some persons cite the Rio treaty. That treaty does not go that far. There is not an exact parallel between the Rio treaty and the proposed treaty. In the case of the Rio treaty, it simply put into legal form that to which we were already committed. We have been committed since 1823 to the principle that if any European power attacked a South American country we would intervene to resist the attack. We did so in the case of Maximilian, in Mexico, in 1867, when we told Napoleon III to remove his army from Mexico. He withdrew his army from Mexico. So we have had that moral, if not legal, obligation for many years. It was much easier to do that in the case of Latin-American attack.

The Rio treaty does not obligate us to go to war; it simply obligates us to consult with and call on the foreign ministers and take appropriate action in the interest of peace, not in the interest of making war.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall yield in a moment.

I am greatly pleased at the contribution made by both these distinguished statesmen and members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. As I understand, neither of the Senators desires to put into the North Atlantic pact anything which constitutes a moral commitment on the part of the United States of America to go to war. If I have misinterpreted their statements, I pause now for a statement to the contrary from either or both of them.

I hear no such statement to the contrary.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Missouri a question. While it is, of course, perfectly clear that this country cannot, of its own volition, become involved in an act of war except by the declaration of the Congress of the United States, does the Senator believe that in our own national interest this Government should be unconcerned at an overt act of aggression by any power upon any of the member states in the United Nations?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I would say that I certainly agree with the tenor of the inquiry, which I judge indicates that the Senator from California means that our country is to be concerned with peace or war anywhere in the world.

The point I am making is that if we sign the North Atlantic pact, I do not believe the Members of the Senate desire to have it understood that this country is entering into what is termed in the article I have read a moral committment to fight, any more than I would want us to enter into a legal commitment to fight.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I believe the Senator from California has not concluded, and I yield to him, then I shall yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say to the able Senator from Missouri that it seems to me in the day of airplanes and the atom bomb in which we now live, the American people and the American Congress must fully recognize the fact that peace in fact is in jeopardy, and that we can no longer be unconcerned at any overt act of aggression wherever it may occur in the world, because if the United Nations Charter means anything at all, it certainly must mean that the states which are signatories thereto hoped to establish a system of international law and order so that the peace of the world could be preserved for our generation, and for our children.

I do not believe that in this age, when transportation is as swift as it is, we could sit back twiddling our thumbs, so to speak, while nation after nation in Europe was being overrun by an aggressor power. I am sure the Senator from Missouri remembers, and would reply, that Holland was overrun in about 4 days, that Yugoslavia was completely overrun in about 18 days, if my memory serves me correctly, and that Poland was overrun in about 22 days. So, unless this Nation were prepared to take some affirmative action to uphold international law and order, we might find that the iron curtain had not only extended clear out to the English Channel, but perhaps beyond. I do not think the Senator wants to give the impression to the world that this Government would be unconcerned at any such act of aggression; and of course we hope that no such act of aggression will occur.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from California that of course I do not want the world to think that we would be unconcerned with acts of aggression. But neither do I want the countries or the people of the world, either signatory or not signatory to the North Atlantic Pact, to think that if we enter into it, if we do, we have made, not a legal commitment, because we cannot do that under the Constitution, but that we have made a moral commitment to fight. I do not want any such opinion to prevail anywhere. What I want may be stated in this way, that when the circumstances arise, even though they should require quick and immediate and prompt action, the Congress of the United States should have the power then, not as ceded away a few years, perhaps, before the circumstances should arise, and the legal right, and the moral right, unrestricted by any prior moral or other commitment, to determine whether or not we shall fight, whether or not we shall enter upon war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Regarding the inquiry propounded by the Senator from California, of course we are interested in the peace of the world. But that does not mean that we shall blindfold ourselves and make a commitment now to enter every war that may occur in the next 10 years, and send our boys and resources to Europe to fight.

Mr. DONNELL. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the view some people seem to take of the whole situation. The nations in Europe are not fighting now. All the outrages which have been committed seem to be tolerated by the people of the countries involved. I do not approve of them, of course. But I do not believe in giving carte blanche assurance to these people, "Do everything you want to do, you need not worry, as soon as anything happens, we will come over and fight your quarrel for you. In the meantime you may have a good time, and bask in the sunshine of leadership which you do not deserve."

Mr. President, the mere fact that we associate ourselves with these other governments in a consultative capacity, we will say for the moment, agree to talk with them, advise with them, and talk to their foreign ministers, will of itself have a tremendous moral effect upon any possible enemies who might appear. I do not believe any great power is hunting a war with the United States, and I do not think they look on us with any idea that they could successfully conquer us. But it would have an influence if they knew that we were in favor of democratic governments in other nations, that we are advising with them and talking with them, and possibly would join them, but that such joinder must come after Congress, knowing the facts, viewing the issues, weighing our own responsibilities, determines that we should go to war.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in my opinion the Senator has spoken sound words of wisdom, and I am very happy to hear him express himself so forcefully and vigorously on this subject.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from Missouri is to be congratulated for having opened up this discussion, which I think is a very valuable one, and the remarks which have been made by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Michigan on the legal and moral phases of the subject are, I think, of the utmost importance.

Certainly, if we were to agree to an old-fashioned European type of alliance, in which when one member of the alliance gets into war the war automatically spreads to every other nation, in my judgment that would be a very unfortunate result. I cannot conceive that such a proposal would be submitted to us, or that the Senate would ratify it. To put the war-making power in the hands of other nations, or for us to underwrite nations over whose foreign policy we had no control, would I think be a great mistake. I think the genius of the undertaking under discussion insofar as it has genius, is that it does not attempt to do that.

Mr. DONNELL. I take it the Senator would not favor our going into such a pact which contained a moral commitment on the part of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how it is possible to take away from Congress the right to declare war.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator would not be in favor of making a moral commitment, even it if were not a legal commitment.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure that I know the difference between a legal and a moral commitment, but I think it would be a mistake to attempt to take away from the Congress the right to declare war on the part of our country.

I think a strong argument could be made for the contention of the Senator from Michigan, so dramatically and interestingly developed, that if the Kaiser had known that the United States would take a very special interest in his war-making activities, or if Hitler had known that the United States would take a very special interest in what he was doing, those two wars might not have occurred. But I feel we should always remember, in considering this matter, not only the moral phase and the legal phase, but the phase of practical military implementation. How is such an agreement to be administered, how is it to be implemented? The answer to that question is bound to have a strong effect on any would-be aggressor, because people like the Kaiser and Hitler are never as much embarrassed by words and phrases and good intentions as they are by their knowledge of the actual physical military means that are ready to be used in order to fight. We on our part should always remember in considering matters of this kind that if they are worth anything they are going to involve a military effort by this country in the way of weapons, in the way of manpower, in the way of diversion of human energy from the pursuits of peace, and it would be most unfortunate if in looking at this proposition we do not always bear in mind the question of implementing it from the standpoint of weapons and practical military effort.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield so that I may address an inquiry to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]? I was sitting in the rear of the Senate Chamber when I heard an observation made by the distinguished Senator from Texas. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Missouri if he will yield so I may propound a question to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. It is my understanding that the hemispheric security we have enjoyed has been the result of the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. CONNALLY. I so stated.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I understood the distinguished Senator from Texas to say that the North Atlantic pact was only an extension of the Rio pact. Is that true?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. WHERRY. I was in the rear of the room and did not hear distinctly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I said there were those who were citing the Rio pact as a precedent for the North Atlantic pact, and I cited the Rio pact to show that it did not present a parallel situation at all. I said that since 1823 we had made the Monroe Doctrine our national policy, and that we were ready to fight without any treaty if any country in the Western Hemisphere were attacked, but that principle did not apply to the proposed new pact; that under it we had no moral obligation to go to war, and had not pledged ourselves to defend Europe.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the Senator from Texas if the South American countries have been considered in the formation of the North Atlantic pact, that is, the countries that are associated in the western hempispheric agreement?

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as I know, they have not. They may have been consulted; I do not know; but they are not nations who are supposed to be signatories to the North Atlantic pact.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I had in mind. I, of course, was asking simply for information. What I was trying to make clear was whether the North Atlantic pact is an extension of the Rio pact. I have now been informed by the Senator from Texas that it is not. The Senator, however, said that some contend it is an extension.

The question I now wish to ask is whether, in light of the security we in the Western Hemisphere have enjoyed because of the Monroe Doctrine, there has been any infringement upon the rights of any countries in this hemisphere, any of the South or Central American countries, in not inviting them to sit in during the consideration of the North Atlantic pact, and would such a situation affect in any way our relationship with them in the defense of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think there has been any infringement of their rights. There will be a protocol in the treaty, and the nations signing it will have to make the statement that the obligations they assume in no wise conflict with their own obligations to other countries not parties to the treaty.

Mr. WHERRY. So that they will have an opportunity to join as signatories to the pact.

Mr. CONNALLY. That part has not been completed.

Mr. WHERRY. Will they have to be consulted?

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot give the Senator that assurance. I suppose they will.

Mr. WHERRY. Should they not be?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know that they should.

Mr. WHERRY. That is all I am trying to find out.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that the North Atlantic pact or treaty has not been completed. On several occasions the members of the Foreign Relations Committee have been in conference with the Secretary of State concerning it. The Senator is aware of what happened to the Norwegian Foreign Minister. He came to the United States. He went back probably with different ideas than he had when he came. There is still uncertainty as to what the Scandinavian League may do. So that particular point, I will say to the Senator, has not yet been developed. I do not know what will be proposed. But let me say to the Senator that every line of the proposed treaty will be scanned by the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Michigan, and the Committe on Foreign Relations. We have had the pledge of the State Department that they will not sign any treaty until we have had a look at it. We propose to go through it pretty carefully in every respect. We have as much concern for the safety of the United States as has the State Department. We have as much concern about our relations in preserving the peace of the world as has the State Department. We want to preserve the peace of the world and we will do all we can to preserve it. We cannot, however, be Sir Galahads, and every time we hear a gun fired plunge into war and take sides without knowing what we are doing, and without knowing the issues involved. That is my attitude.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Texas for his observations. I also thank the Senator from Missouri for permitting me to propound the inquiries I did of the Senator from Texas. I wanted to have the point cleared up. It seems to me if we are to preserve the security of the Western Hemisphere it is vital that before the North Atlantic pact is concluded the Nation's signatory of the Rio pact be given an opportunity to set forth their views, so that we may not lose their good will, or the protection that has been accorded the Western Hemisphere by the adoption of the old Monroe doctrine. I do not believe we should conclude action without giving the South American nations opportunity to consider the pact.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say that some of the Nations signatory to the Rio pact have not yet ratified it, at least they have not filed their ratifications as yet.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it a fact that only two of the countries have ratified the Rio pact?

Mr. CONNALLY. It was a fact some time ago, but I think additional ones have filed their ratifications since that time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let us not have a misunderstanding on that subject. The Rio pact came into effect only when 14 countries had ratified it. Since the 14 have ratified others have ratified. I think there are some four out of twenty that have not deposited their ratifications.

If the Senator from Missouri will further yield, I should like to make very sure that the Rio pact, as involved in the present discussion, is not misunderstood. I think I was responsible for injecting it into the debate. The reason I injected it was to point out that even under the Rio pact—which certainly has a more intimate traditional obligation on us than any other sort of pact—there is no automatic obligation on the Government of the United States to do anything, and even if a consultation under the Rio pact results in a vote of the signatory powers to go to war, only those who vote to go to war are bound in the consultations.

Mr. DONNELL. So that there is neither a legal nor a moral obligation at this time in the Rio pact, for the United States of America to go to war. Is that correct?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. And I was pointing out that if that is the attitude we took in respect to our good neighbors in the Western world, obviously we not only could not but should not go beyond that sort of an obligation in dealing with the North Atlantic community.

I should like, however, to add a word further if I may, Mr. President. I am very glad the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] made the interjection he did, because I would not want the debate today to indicate that our sole interest in the peace and security of the North Atlantic community is confined to our ability to avoid any responsibility in connection with it, and I am sure that is not the attitude of the Senator from Missouri. In my opinion there is no obligation contemplated in the North Atlantic community which is not already inherent in our pledge to the United Nations and our membership in it. There will be nothing, in my expectation, in the North Atlantic pact which is not written within the four corners of the United Nations Charter, and will specifically be so confined. Even if there were no United Nations Charter, and even if there never was a North Atlantic community, the sheer reality of the facts of life in this atomic age today present us with a situation in the North Atlantic community which inevitably would challenge our interest if world war III were to start in any such fashion as the other two world wars did. In my view what we are undertaking to do in the North Atlantic pact is nothing more than to acknowledge in writing the facts of life as they are. In my opinion the fact that we have underscored those facts of life will serve a notice upon potential agressors which they will not ignore or overlook, and we will never have to examine anything except the first sentence in the North Atlantic pact in order to have substantially underwritten peace.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his very notable contribution to this discussion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FULBRIGHT in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that in the case of an outbreak of war or an act of aggression, we shall be following it along in our chancelleries. We shall know the issues involved, and the Congress will be better advised than anyone else as to whether we should take action immediately, or whether we should take action at all with regard to a declaration of war.

As I see it, this pact is more or less an official expression of our interest in peace and of our interest in the nations which are associating themselves together in the North Atlantic pact. We shall consult with them. We shall advise with them. But the pact does not carry any pledge—moral, legal, physical, or any other kind—that we must automatically go to war when some European nation demands that we fight its war.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may address an inquiry to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DONNELL. If the Senator will bear with me a moment, I cannot very well keep all these observations in mind unless I comment on them at the moment.

With reference to the comments made by the Senator from Texas, of course, I share with him, and I think every other Senator shares with him and with the Senator from Michigan, an interest in peace. I think we all realize the close interdependence of the world at this time. We are living in the atomic age, an age of shortened distances, when a jet-propelled plane can cross the country from the west coast to Washington in a little more than 3 hours. I believe I feel as other Senators do. But the point I have in mind is that I do not want anything in the North Atlantic pact, if we adopt it, to justify the statement that its contents would be interpreted as a moral commitment to fight. I want the power left in Congress to declare war or not to declare war. Even though the words "declared war" or "obligation to fight" be not in the North Atlantic pact, I do not desire, and I do not believe other Senators desire, that pact to contain something which inferentially contains some kind of a commitment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. If the Senator from California will bear with me for a moment, I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I speak with some degree of trepidation by reason of that fact. However, I have understood generally from the press that the North Atlantic alliance or pact—if that is the more correct term, as the Senator from Michigan indicates—is contemplated to be between the United States of America, Canada, Great Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and probably one or more of the other countries of western Europe.

A few weeks ago I observed a certain newspaper report which indicated that such a pact—and I quote from the newspaper report, which is not a quotation from the Secretary of State or from any official source, but which I trust is written in good faith—"will be written in general terms pledging mutual assistance in event of an attack upon any of the signatories, but avoiding any hard-and-fast clause committing them to go to war."

I am not satisfied with merely omitting a hard-and-fast clause committing us to go to war. I do not want in that pact anything that constitutes "the moral commitment to fight" referred to by the writer of this Associated Press résumé of what was understood in general to have been covered by Secretary Acheson.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Texas relative to his last statement.

I think all of us have recognized, from reading the press dispatches, that the so-called North Atlantic pact was never contemplated—at least I so understood it, as one Member of the Senate—to bind the United States to support any one of the signatories who might be bent on aggressive war against a neighbor. My concept of this pact is that it is a pact of nonaggression. Therefore I certainly want to reiterate that I believe that under our existing obligations, understandings, or commitments—whatever the proper term may be—under the United Nations Charter, if an act of aggression is committed by some power against one of the other signatory powers, we are vitally concerned about it, without any North Atlantic Pact. So certainly by no stretch of the imagination could this pact be considered as one which would bind us if one of the several signatories should itself engage in an act of aggression. It is merely defensive in character.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I apologize for taking so much of the time of the Senator from Missouri, but he yielded to the Senator from California to permit him to propound a question to me.

Mr. DONNELL. I will permit the Senator from Texas to answer it, if I have that prerogative.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from California has injected a great many controversial questions. What is aggression? We might consider a certain act to be an act of aggression, and some other nation might not think so. Someone would have to determine that question. It is true that the United Nations Charter deals with acts of aggression. Under article 51 it permits defense, either jointly or separately, against aggression. Article 51 of the Charter provides for the nations, independently of action by the United Nations itself, to adopt defensive measures, either with other powers or alone, against any act of aggression. The Senator's view does not change that situation.

It is possible that there might be a controversy between some of the nations which join this pact. If Germany were admitted as a member, which might well occur under the clause which allows nations to join at a later date, there might be a controversy between France and Germany. The Senator is aware of their divergent views on economics and on past wars, and their bitter nationalistic feelings. Of course we hope that no such controversy will arise. I am simply trying to preserve our own peace and security.

Something was said by the Senator from California about the atomic age. Yes; this is an atomic age. I believe that if the United States is to be a leader in the world or a help to the rest of the world toward preserving peace and restoring their economic life, the United States must remain strong. When it comes to atomic bombs, we must have more of them and better bombs than any other nation on earth, until they are regulated in some fashion under international agreement. We must have the best fleet of airplanes in the world. The Senator from Missouri mentioned jet-propelled planes. We must have better, faster, and harder-hitting jet-propelled planes, not for the purpose of conquest, not for the purpose of aggression, but to protect our own security and the security of our people.

This is not a chauvinistic attitude on my part. God knows, I do not want any more war. We have not demanded any reparations from the last war. We have treated our enemies better than they have treated themselves. We have asked for no territory. We have asked for no reparations. On the other hand, even nations which took up arms against us are today receiving the bounty of this Government through ERP and other relief measures. We are feeding the very people who fought us and killed our sons in various countries of Europe. So we are not out for conquest. We are out for peace. But in preserving the peace we ourselves must be strong. That is why I favor not assuming obligations which we do not intend to fulfill. I favor the Congress and the Executive retaining the right to determine the question of war or peace under the Constitution.

Mr. DONNELL. And under the circumstances at the time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, under the cricumstances at the time, and under our traditions. That is my attitude on this question.

Mr. DONNELL. I am grateful to the Senator from Texas for his continued statement on this subject.

Mr. President, reference was made earlier to the resolution adopted by the Senate by a vote of 64 to 4. I have been pleased to hear today the comment of the Senator from Michigan and to recall the splendid, strong, vigorous assurances he gave on the floor of the Senate at the time when the resolution was adopted. I am not undertaking to cast upon his shoulders the responsibility for an interpretation of that resolution, for each one of us has a duty in that regard which cannot be delegated to the Senator from Michigan, nor can we absolve ourselves from that obligation. Nevertheless, Mr. President, in the course of the debate in which the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Oregon participated with such vigor and clarity some months ago, immediately prior to the adoption of the resolution, it was made abundantly clear, it seems to me, that the full intent of those who proposed the resolution was that we in the Senate are not in any sense, either directly, indirectly, inferentially, morally, or otherwise, bound to support the North Atlantic pact because that resolution was adopted by a vote, as I have indicated, of 64 to 4—or, for that matter, if it had been adopted by any other vote.

I want it to be perfectly clear—not that it is of any special importance, but because I am one Member of the Senate—that I deem an expression of opinion on my part with respect to entry into this alliance or this pact to be premature at this time, and accordingly I make no such expression today. To my mind it is a subject on which, from its very nature, the most profound and careful thought must be bestowed, before it shall be acted upon by the Senate; and I have confidence that the Senate will devote such profound and careful thought to this subject before deciding what it will do with respect to entry into or refraining from entry into the pact.

In a few days, Mr. President, we shall hear upon this floor the reading, once again, of Washington's Farewell Address. So I take it that it is not out of place for me to mention now that that address contains certain language bearing most pertinently upon the subject now under discussion. Of course, I know it to be true that that address was written, not in the atomic age, but at a time when conditions of travel were very different. Nevertheless, it was written or delivered by a man whose words we regard with veneration and respect. We may not believe that his ultimate conclusions are entirely applicable to the situation confronting us in the year 1949. However, let us observe what he said:

> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But, in my opinion, it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.
> Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Mr. President, it may be of interest to note that John Marshall, who perhaps is not so frequently quoted on the subject of foreign alliances or pacts, when writing about 2 years after the date of the delivery of Washington's Farewell Address, used the following language:

> I do not think the interest and prosperity of America at all dependent on the alliance with any foreign nation; nor does the man exist who would regret more than myself the formation of such an alliance. In truth, America has, in my opinion, no motive for forming such connection and very powerful motives for avoiding them. Europe is eternally engaged in wars in which we have no interest, and with which the fondest policy forbids us to intermeddle.
> We ought to avoid any compacts which may endanger our being involved in them. * * *
> The whole of my politics respecting foreign nations are reducible to this single position. We ought to have commercial intercourse with all, but political ties with none.

Mr. President, of course there arises today the question whether present-day conditions—the atomic age, to which the Senator from California has referred, and perhaps the fact that the Atlantic Ocean, the crossing of which by John Marshall on his mission to France required 48 days, today can be crossed in a few hours—either demand or justify a new policy by the United States respecting foreign alliances. That question, as I have indicated, will require the most thorough consideration by the Senate, and will receive it I am confident.

So, Mr. President, in advance of seeing the pact and in advance of hearing the arguments by the distinguished Members of this body who will be far more familiar with the pact than will I, in my judgment it would be premature for me today to express an opinion as to whether I shall or shall not be in favor of the entry of the United States into the pact. But it is not premature, Mr. President, to my judgment, for me to express today, at this moment, strong dissent against any and all proposals to involve our Nation, by the North Atlantic pact, in any moral commitment to fight; and this I do.

UNITED STATES PLEDGES AID—NORWAY IS ASSURED IT WOULD HAVE SUBSTANTIAL MILITARY BACKING—LONG TALK ON PROBLEM—OSLO FOREIGN MINISTER LEAVES FOR LONDON AFTER MEETING WITH ACHESON

WASHINGTON, February 11.—The United States was reported to have assured Norway today that it can enter the proposed North Atlantic alliance as a full partner and with assurance of substantial military backing from this and other member countries.

That summary of the basic American attitude toward Norway's defense problems is understood to have been given to the Norwegian Foreign Minister, Halvard Lange, by Secretary Acheson in an 80-minute conference at the State Department this afternoon.

Earlier in the day Lange had conferred briefly with President Truman, and after meeting with Acheson he wound up his week-long visit to Washington with a call on Senator VANDENBERG, the Republican foreign policy leader.

CALL IT A FRANK SESSION

Acheson and Lange issued a joint statement saying they had held a "full and frank discussion of the objectives and nature" of the North Atlantic security project.

Lange subsequently told the Associated Press, just before he left by plane for New York, that he had had "a very good reception" and a "very good discussion" which had yielded "very frank information." At the State Department he informed reporters he planned to meet Ernest Bevin, British Foreign Minister, in London Monday. His itinerary called for him to stop over in New York tonight, then leave for England tomorrow morning.

As he boarded a plane, Lange said "there is no inkling of truth" in reports the State Department put pressure on him in his stay to link Norway to the North Atlantic alliance.

"The situation has cleared as result of my visit," he said. "And my recommendations will depend on my reflections on the way back."

Lange first saw Acheson Monday and raised a half dozen major questions regarding the Atlantic treaty proposal and the role Norway might play in it. He presented today a memorandum of the questions he raised in the first meeting and received answers from Acheson.

OUTLINE OF DISCUSSIONS

While the meeting was secret, it was understood that in general Acheson covered these points:

1. The United States and other North Atlantic countries—seven are now negotiating a treaty draft here—would be glad to see Norway join the group when it is enlarged before the treaty is put into final form and readied for signing. But no official invitation was issued to Norway to join and responsible informants insisted that no pressure was exercised to influence the Norwegian Foreign Minister one way or the other.

2. The United States, subject to Senate approval of the treaty, will make the strongest possible commitment to give prompt and effective aid if any one of the countries in the alliance is attacked, but only Congress can declare war.

3. Military action, therefore, cannot be committed in advance. But in joining the alliance, the American Government would subscribe to the principle that an attack on one member nation was an attack on all and this would be interpreted as a moral commitment to fight.

ON BASIS OF POWER

4. The objective of the security system, under the United Nations Charter, is peaceful, and not, as the Russians have charged, aggressive. It is based on the principle that aggression by any country would be discouraged by confronting that country in advance with a powerful array of allied nations.

5. Norway, like every other member of the group, would be expected to dovetail its defense plans with over-all western grand strategy for defense, but it would not be required to provide advance bases, a point which the Russians recently raised with the Norwegian Government.

6. The United States is not prepared to say at this time in detail exactly what military arms and equipment it can supply under a mutual-aid program paralleling the alliance. President Truman is expected soon to recommend authorization for such a program to Congress.

On his part, Lange is understood to have taken the line that he was on a fact-finding mission and Norway's formal attitude toward the security project will not be determined until he has reported to the Government in Oslo and the matter has been discussed in the Storting (Parliament).

STRONG OPINION BEHIND IT

However, it is understood that he reported strong sentiment in Oslo for basing Norway's long-range security on the Western alliance rather than on a Swedish-proposed alliance of armed neutrality.

On this point, the State Department publicly has taken the position that because the supply of American military aid is limited, no aid can be promised those western European countries which do not join the alliance.

This, in effect, had already put Norway, Sweden, and Denmark on notice that they could not expect American help if they held aloof from the North Atlantic grouping of powers.

Another question which Lange is understood to have raised with Acheson is that of Norway's security during the period in which the North Atlantic treaty is being negotiated and pending its final ratification by all the nations. Diplomatic officials said the basic United States position on this point—and presumably the position which Acheson stated to Lange—is that the United States is already committed by the United Nations Charter to oppose aggression at any point and intends to live up to that commitment.

CROSS-WIND LANDING GEAR FOR AIRPLANES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, toward the end of last year there were rumors that the Civil Aeronautics Administration was going to stop its work with cross-wind landing gear for airplanes.

I was much concerned, and on January 8 I wrote to the Civil Aeronautics Administration, asking for a detailed report on the cross-wind landing gear project.

I am happy to say that the report which has been furnished to me indicates that the Civil Aeronautics Administration not only has not stopped and is not planning to stop its cross-wind landing gear project, but, on the contrary, has had very good results to date, considers the project very much worthwhile, and is continuing the work.

For the information of the Members of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the report on cross-wind landing gear which I have received from the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, consisting of a four-page letter with an enclosure in the form of a summary report prepared by Mr. John H. Geisse, consultant for cross-wind landing gears, and Mr. Lloyd Child, assistant to the Administrator for personal flying development, may be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, February 7, 1949.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have your letter of January 8, and I am pleased to be able to give you a detailed report on the cross-wind landing gear project.

Enclosed is a copy of the Summary Report on Cross-Wind Landing Gears of May 1948, which covers the results on the Fairchild PT-19 and the Piper J-3 Cub equipped with the cross-wind landing gear. On pages 6 and 7 of this report are comments quoted from various pilots who have flown the cross-wind landing gear.

As you know, the appropriation which you obtained for cross-wind landing gears made it possible for us to contract with six manufacturers to have cross-wind landing gears designed and installed under CAA supervision. A brief report on these is as follows:

FAIRCHILD PT-19

Covered by enclosed report.

PIPER J-3 CUB

Covered by enclosed report.

ERCOUPE

The Firestone Aircraft Co. installed a cross-wind landing gear on the Ercoupe and delivered it to the CAA on August 12 1947. Various degrees of restraint in the swiveling were tried. Continuous experimentation was carried out with all kinds of schemes to improve the characteristics. It was found that a tie rod between the main wheels was beneficial. The favorable results obtained on this airplane have convinced us that cross-wind landing gears are suitable for tricycle undercarriages. These findings have been borne out by the Beech Aircraft Co. on their Bonanza airplane. At the start, Beech asserted that their Bonanza could land satisfactorily in cross-winds and that a cross-wind landing gear was not necessary. However, the Goodyear Aircraft Co. furnished a cross-wind installation for the Bonanza and have reported that they and the Beech officials are completely satisfied with the results. Apparently the Beech people are convinced that cross-wind landing gear is beneficial on a tricycle undercarriage.

BELLANCA-CRUISAIR

The Bellanca airplane was delivered to the CAA on April 15, 1948; on it the landing gear swiveled in the shock-absorber strut. Dual wheels on the main landing gear were furnished so as to eliminate the necessity for shimmy dampers. The original contract called for our flight testing this airplane for 50 hours. During that time we indoctrinated numerous pilots, all of whom were agreeably impressed by its performance. The airplane was demonstrated to the United States Army, United States Navy, the press, and delegations from England. We displayed it and gave demonstrations at air shows throughout the East. After 50 hours of satisfactory flying, we renewed the contract so as to have 50 more hours available. At the present time we are continuing the demonstrations and pilots' indoctrinations.

TWIN BEECH

The cross-wind landing gear was installed on a CAA twin Beech airplane by All American Airways, Inc., and delivered on April 15, 1948. The castering of the wheels took place in the oleo struts. Shimmy dampers and centering cams were also incorporated inside the struts. The airplane was demonstrated formally to the press, and the United States Army and Navy. After 3 months of flight tests, it was decided that improved shimmy dampers would be desirable. All American Airways was directed to design and install external hydraulic shimmy dampers and centering cylinders. Now the cross-wind landing gear functions satisfactorily. Pilots who have flown it are favorably impressed. At present, the airplane is assigned to our fourth region where flight demonstrations and pilots' indoctrinations are being held in the South and Middle West. We are obtaining an NC license for this installation.

DOUGLAS

The Goodyear Aircraft Co., of Akron, Ohio, was awarded the contract to install a cross-wind landing gear on a CAA Douglas DC-3 airplane. This consisted of castering mechanisms inside the wheels of the airplane similar in principle to those which had been so successful on the Piper Cub. The airplane was delivered to the CAA on March 14, 1948. Exhaustive demonstrations and flight tests have been performed on this airplane, both in connection with obtaining an NC license and in displaying it to the United States

Army and Navy, the United States and Canadian air lines and to the British representatives. All pilots' comments on this have been favorable. The Canadian Airline is particularly interested as they have the problem of snow removal and are of the opinion that the cross-wind landing gear may be worth while because only one runway would have to be plowed. The United States Army officers charged with airport construction were especially interested in the prospects of only having to build one strip because the runways for their big airplanes are excessively expensive. The Army pilots and our own pilots, who are involved in all-weather operations, have stated that the cross-wind landing gear is of great value during blind landings. After we had demonstrated it to the Sperry officials and pilots, the Sperry company ordered a set of similar wheels for their blind-landing DC-3 airplane.

NORTHROP-PIONEER

An order was given to the Northrop company to design a cross-wind landing gear for their Pioneer airplane. Only enough money was available for engineering through the design and stress analysis stages, but the work done by Northrop is of value because it contributed to the engineering art. It is hoped that their cross-wind gear will be installed on future Pioneer-type aircraft.

Increasing interest has been shown in the adoption of this type landing gear by both private and commercial flyers. At present the Goodyear Aircraft Co. has delivered more than 140 sets of cross-wind landing wheels for personal aircraft. Cessna airplanes have received most of these cross-wind undercarriages, but a few have been sold for Stinsons, Cubs, and Goodyear amphibians, all of which have passed their tests and have been approved by the CAA. Goodyear castering wheels have been installed experimentally on Aeronca and Beech Bonanza airplanes. Orders on hand have resulted in production go-ahead by Goodyear on 1,000 sets of cross-wind landing gears for personal aircraft and 20 sets for DC-3 air-line-type airplanes. Enclosed is a copy of the Goodyear report covering these installations.

I quote from a letter received from Mr. C. O. Bell, manager, landing gear and flight operations departments, Aviation Products Division, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., dated January 6, as follows:

"We are going ahead obtaining approval on all the current light-plane production models of the various manufacturers and will be in a position this spring to supply cross-wind units to all manufacturers of light airplanes. We are in hopes that orders will start developing pretty rapidly because we now have quite a sizeable investment in this development."

In the Federal airport program our office of airports is favoring one-runway airports wherever possible, and not approving more than two runways except where traffic conditions so require.

As a result of the cross-wind landing-gear development, under CAA auspices, funds for which were provided by Congress largely through your efforts, I am happy to report that cross-wind landing gears are increasing the utility of airplanes.

Sincerely yours,

D. W. RENTZEL,
Administrator of Civil Aeronautics.

SUMMARY REPORT ON CROSS-WIND LANDING GEARS BY JOHN H. GEISSE, CONSULTANT FOR CROSS-WIND LANDING GEARS, AND LLOYD CHILD, ASSISTANT TO THE ADMINISTRATOR FOR PERSONAL FLYING DEVELOPMENT, OFFICE OF THE ADMINISTRATOR, CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

SUMMARY

The Civil Aeronautics Administration initiated an investigation of the possibilities of cross-wind landing gears for airplanes in 1945. The objective of the program was to determine whether the safety and utility of the airplanes could be increased and whether large savings could be made in airport construction costs by the use of such landing gears.

The program was carried out by the award of contracts to manufacturers in the aviation industry to design, construct, and test such undercarriages on airplanes ranging in size from the Piper Cub to the Douglas DC-3 and including an airplane with a tricycle undercarriage.

This report covers the inauguration of the program, description of the modifications to the first two airplanes: the Fairchild PT-19 and the Piper J-3 and the results obtained therewith.

It is concluded from these results that personal type airplanes can be economically modified to enable pilots to take them off and land them across the wind with no more skill than that required for into-the-wind operations and with no more hazard and that the principle appears to be applicable to transport type airplanes.

Other advantages are noted and the opinions of some prominent aviation personalities who have flown these airplanes are given in support of the results reported and conclusions drawn. It is reported that in the tests the airplanes have been flown by over 200 individual pilots.

Heretofore it has been considered necessary that airports be constructed with sufficient runways to enable the airplanes to be landed directly into the wind or not more than 22½ degrees from directly into the wind for all winds in excess of 4 or 10 miles per hour. The lower velocity was accepted practice up to 1944 and since then the higher velocity has been used.

These restrictions were made necessary by the high degree of pilot skill required to make successful landings with a cross-wind. This high skill requirement was in turn due to the noncastering type of landing gear used.

The need of providing multiple runways to cover changes in wind direction has required the use of large areas for airports, thus greatly reducing the number of suitable sites available and materially increasing their initial cost and the cost of maintenance.

In 1946, the Congress passed the Federal Airport Act authorizing the appropriation of $520,000,000 of Federal funds to match State and municipal funds for the construction of new and improvement of existing airports. With the passage of the bill, the Federal Government acquired a prime interest in the costs of airports.

OBJECT

The objective of the development program, of which this report is a part, was to determine whether or not alterations could be made in the airplane landing gears at a reasonable cost in dollars and pounds which would eliminate requirement of multiple runways to accommodate changes in the direction of the wind.

SCOPE OF THIS REPORT

This report covers the inauguration of the program and the results obtained with two personal type airplanes: the Fairchild PT-19 and the Piper J-3. Later reports will be issued to cover modifications of the Ercoupe, the Bellanca Cruisair, the Beech AT-7, the Douglas DC-3 and the effect of this development upon commercial air transportation. All of the latter planes had successfully completed flight tests prior to the preparation of this report, but had not been subjected to the extensive service testing given to the Fairchild and Piper J-3.

CONCLUSIONS

1. Personal type airplanes can be constructed at a reasonable increase in cost and weight to make it possible to land and take off across the wind with the same facility and safety as into the wind.

2. There has been no indication that the principle involved cannot be applied as readily to transport type airplanes.

3. The expressed opinions of well over 200 pilots who have flown either the Fairchild or the Piper have been universally favorable and in most cases enthusiastic.

4. The number of close-in sites for the smaller airports (classes I, II, and III) which would be opened because of the smaller landing areas and the more limited approach areas which would be required is a factor of major importance.

5. This same factor together with aircraft noise abatement would bring aviation within the reach of the potential private flyer in metropolitan areas where the largest unrealized market for personal aircraft exists.

6. The cross-wind landing gear could also bring short haul commercial transportation to these metropolitan areas and to large cities which have a potential air transport market which, to date, has scarcely been touched.

7. Adoption of cross-wind landing gears would reduce pilot skill required for take-off and landing and hence would shorten pilot training time.

8. Adoption of cross-wind landing gears would materially reduce the number of landing accidents.

HISTORY

An undercarriage with castered wheels aiding cross-wind landings was described in the Pinaud patent of 1873. Again in 1910, the first crossing of the English Channel was made by a Bleriot airplane with a similar undercarriage and a United States patent was issued to Bleriot covering this undercarriage in 1911. Also, the earliest airplanes were equipped with the tricycle type undercarriage which incorporated main fixed wheels back of the center of gravity and a castered nose wheel. This type, as compared to later types, might also be termed a cross-wind landing gear.

Prior to the First World War, the castered and tricycle type undercarriages had been almost universally discarded in favor of undercarriages having two fixed wheels ahead of the center of gravity and a castered or steerable tail-skid or V-wheel. With the introduction of this type of undercarriage, ground loops due to landing in a drift became the principal source of landing accidents.

The Bureau of Air Commerce, the predecessor of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, reintroduced the tricycle gear in its small-plane development program in 1934. This led to its adoption by the military and transport air services. The Bureau also had started development of castered main wheels ahead of the center of gravity but the program was discontinued before its completion.

Prior to and during World War II, Mr. O. W. Maclaren carried on developments in England using steerable main wheels which could be set by the pilot in flight to accommodate drift landings. Mr. Maclaren was granted a United States patent on this type of undercarriage in 1940. In 1944 Piper Aircraft Corp. constructed and tested two experimental cross-wind undercarriages on their J-3 airplane but then dropped the project.

In 1945, when it became apparent that the aircraft industry was not inclined to carry on further development work on undercarriages to facilitate cross-wind landings on its own initiative, the Civil Aeronautics Administration was given an appropriation of $150,000 to foster such a development. In 1946 Congress reappropriated the unexpended balance and this was all obligated in fiscal 1947.

METHOD

It was decided at the start of the program that all of the development including design, construction, and tests would be placed in the hands of the industry through development contracts. It was also decided that these contracts should include a provision that, if any patents resulted from the work under the contracts, they would be assigned to the Government.

Contracts with individual inventors or others not in the aviation industry were not considered in the best interest of the program and none were granted. The reason for this was that the major objective of the program was not the development of novel cross-wind landing gears but that of determining the feasibility of the idea and interesting the industry in their adoption.

In line with this policy, the program was first called to the attention of the Aircraft Industries Association with the request that they interest their members in the taking of contracts. When this failed to produce results, individual manufacturers were requested to submit proposals and, as a result, contracts were awarded as follows:

| Contractor | Date | Airplane | Amount |
|---|---|---|---|
| Fairchild Engine & Airplane Corp. | Feb. 8, 1946 | Fairchild PT-19 | $8,413.42 |
| Goodyear Aircraft Corp. | May 27, 1946 | Piper J-3 | 22,885.00 |
| Firestone Aircraft Co. | Dec. 19, 1946 | Ercoupe | 12,000.00 |
| All American Aviation, Inc. | May 21, 1947 | Beech AT-7C | 35,000.00 |
| Bellanca Aircraft Corp. | June 12, 1947 | Bellanca Cruisair | 5,650.00 |
| Northrop Aircraft, Inc. | June 19, 1947 | Northrop Pioneer | 10,000.00 |
| Goodyear Aircraft Corp. | June 27, 1947 | Douglas DC-3 | 51,800.00 |
| Total | | | 145,748.42 |

An early decision to include the steerable-type main wheels developed by Maclaren was later abandoned due to the excellent results obtained with the original castered gears and all of the above contracts cover castered gears.

Initial acceptance tests were conducted at the contractors' plants. Thereafter, the airplanes were brought to the Washington National Airport and made available for trial flights by both Government and civil pilots and for demonstrations to others interested. Thereafter, the airplanes were routed to the eight regions of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for further testing and demonstrations under the supervision of the personal flying assistants to the regional administrators. These demonstrations included demonstrations at various aviation meetings, and at the factories of aircraft manufacturers. Forms were prepared on which all pilots operating the airplanes could make a record of their flights and give their experience with an opinion of the modifications.

FAIRCHILD CONTRACT

The Fairchild Engine & Airplane Corp., Airplane Division, Hagerstown, Md., was awarded a contract to modify a Government-owned Fairchild PT-19 trainer in accordance with designs submitted by them.

The first modification consisted of providing an inclined kingpin ahead of the shock strut with hydraulic shimmy dampers and coil springs for centering. The springs were found insufficient to provide static stability and the propeller thrust was found insufficient to straighten the wheels from their maximum castered position. The design was then changed to include cams to provide the required static stability and centering force. A detailed description of the gear is provided in appendix I, page 9.

GOODYEAR CONTRACT

The Goodyear Aircraft Corp. was awarded a contract to determine the practicability of using kingpins mounted within the wheel hubs for airplanes in which external kingpins could not readily be used. The contract called for preliminary investigation on a rig which could be towed and subsequent construction and tests of an undercarriage on a Piper J-3 airplane. The Piper Aircraft Corp. loaned a plane for the initial tests and the Government supplied a Piper L-4 for the final installation.

The towing rig first designed by Goodyear used inclined kingpins to secure the desired caster length. Two tests revealed that the static instability was such that the propeller thrust would be insufficient to straighten the wheels from their maximum castered position. Then the rig was modified to include cams to secure static stability and centering force and the results of the tests were so encouraging that further tests of temporary gears were suspended and wheels incorporating kingpins and cams all within the wheel hubs were constructed and tested on a Piper J-3.

RESULTS

1. The Fairchild PT-19 was landed and taken off by three different pilots in a gusty cross wind with gusts up to 50 miles per hour. The Piper has been taken off and landed by a number of pilots at different times with cross winds of 35 miles per hour. In all cases, the pilots reported that no difficulty was encountered and that no special technique was required.

2. The Goodyear gear is now being offered as alternate equipment on new airplanes and as replacement equipment by the Stinson Division of Consolidated Vultee Corp. and the Cessna Aircraft Corp. Other personal airplane manufacturers are currently considering similar action.

3. Of the approximately 200 pilots who have flown either the Fairchild or the Piper, none has given an adverse report on either landing or take-off characteristics.

4. Some, but far less than the majority, of the pilots who have flown the Piper have been moderately critical of its taxiing characteristics.

5. Only minor mechanical failures have been encountered on the Fairchild and none on the Piper.

6. Total increase in weight was 28 pounds on the Fairchild and 12 pounds on the Piper.

7. The Goodyear Aircraft Corp. has reported that during their extended testing, they observed that the tire wear was noticeably less with the castered wheels than with conventional noncastered wheels.

8. The Piper wheels caster very freely due to low friction and a low degree of static stability. As a result, the airplane taxied in a yawed attitude under the slightest provocation and was yawed to its maximum 25 degrees limit by medium cross winds and medium accelerations in turns. When yawed to the full extent, the minimum radius of turn against the yaw was quite large when using only the steerable tailwheel due to its limited stroke. However, sharp turns around either wheel could be readily accomplished by use of differential braking. This low degree of stability also permitted the wheels to toe in and hamper movement when the airplane was pulled backward; although, this tendency could be eliminated by raising the tail high enough to provide a negative caster length. The Goodyear company later provided a notched cam to restrain the wheels from toeing in when the airplane is pulled backward which has eliminated this difficulty.

9. The Fairchild gear had a pronounced tendency to hold whatever position it initially had due to friction in the kingpins. It therefore had a tendency to taxi just like any conventional airplane once the wheels were straightened. However, the wheels could be thrown over to full caster by a rapid turn; and, thereafter, the airplane could be taxied in the resulting yawed attitude without the wheels straightening. Out on the field, this performance was not objectionable and had some advantages. However, when close to spectators or other airplanes, the high degree of propeller thrust required to return the wheels to neutral from fully castered position was objectionable. Changes in the cams and reduction of friction would eliminate the objection. The combination of high friction and high static stability prevented the wheels from toeing in when the airplane was pulled backward.

10. Most pilots were favorably impressed by the improved vision from the cockpit when the airplanes taxied in a yawed attitude. This improved vision made zig-zagging unnecessary during taxiing.

11. There appeared to be a complete absence of any tendency for the upwind wing to rise in either airplane under any conditions of operation.

12. Both airplanes were tried with and without steerable tailwheels. The majority of the pilots making the tests preferred the operation with the combination of brakes and steerable tailwheel.

13. Shimmy was encountered with both airplanes when they were operated without shimmy dampers.

PUBLIC ACCEPTANCE

Comments on the performance of these airplanes from a few of those who have flown them or witnessed demonstrations have been as follows:

G. R. Price, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.: "Our own experience with the first wheel on the Piper J-3 has convinced us of the tremendous effect this type of landing wheel installation will have on the future of commercial as well as private aviation."

B. Allison Gillies, prominent private pilot and test pilot: "With the gear there is no special skill required for cross-wind landings and it will, therefore, add real utility to an airplane for the inexperienced pilot and it will save many repair bills."

Oliver L. Parks, president, Aircraft Sales and Service: "I was tremendously impressed with the demonstration—so much so that I have written both Northrop and Boeing suggesting that they take immediate steps to adopt it."

Roger Wolfe Kahn, prominent private pilot and test pilot: "It is undoubtedly one of the most important developments in the advancement of aviation."

Robert M. Love, president, All American Aviation, Inc.: "Landings were intentionally crabbed up to 20 degrees. Remarkable."

John W. Myers, vice president, Northrop Aircraft, Inc.: "Light wind, but attempted to simulate cross wind by skidding, etc. Results excellent. Castered gear on Cub actually helps taxiing."

J. B. Hartranft, general manager, Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association: "I thoroughly enjoyed the demonstration which resulted in making me a convert, and we shall do everything possible to assist the CAA in the further development of this project."

Crocker Snow, director of aeronautics for Massachusetts: "It has long been my opinion that this development is of primary importance to the future of personal flying, at least in this part of the world, and Friday afternoon's experience merely served to confirm this opinion."

T. H. Jordan, Wisconsin Aeronautics Commission: "Excellent. Wings level, no rudder required, excellent control, no swinging; castered gear should be placed on the market as soon as possible."

M. K. Hefty, Hefty Flying Service: "Perfect. Ideal for student training and small two-way fields."

Rex D. Penlong, chairman, San Francisco, A. O. P. A.: "It is my belief that you have shown us the most outstanding single safety development in the history of the airplane."

Rex Hardy, Jr., assistant to the vice president, Northrop Aircraft, Inc.: "The airplane was flown for approximately 4 hours by 10 separate pilots who carried with them approximately 20 rear-seat passengers. All agreed that the principle of the castering landing gear could and should be applied to every airplane in the private flying class, and that it would be very valuable to many types not included in this class. The pilots, in particular, who approached the airplane with traditional reservations were united in their approval."

P. G. Robinson, proprietor, Robbies Wheel Service: "I am thoroughly impressed with the advantages this type gear offers, and believe that it is the greatest development in aviation since the end of the war."

DISCUSSION

The results obtained with the Fairchild and the Piper will be discussed only as they apply to personal type airplanes, leaving to later reports on the larger airplanes the discussion of the application to commercial flying.

First, it should be noted that the objective of this development program was to determine whether it would be practicable to construct airplanes for which it would be unnecessary to provide all-way fields. It was not intended that the Government should develop cross-wind landing gear designs for the industry.

The results obtained are considered ample proof that airplanes in this category can be so modified that cross-wind landings and take-offs can be made as easily, as safely, and with no more skill than into the wind landings and take-offs.

The limited funds available for this project did not permit carrying on the development work which would be required to refine the design to secure maximum performance and to reduce cost. It should be possible to design cross-wind modifications for most of the airplanes now in service which could be sold at a price attractive to the airplane owners.

The general principle, i. e. castered main wheels with castering restraint, can be applied in many ways and the best way for one airplane could very well be entirely unsuited to another. The basic idea is very old, is not patentable, and the field is wide open for the development of other designs. This development should be carried on by the industry.

The major importance of the cross-wind landing gear is in its effect upon airport design and construction. A study of airport costs has indicated that substantial savings could be accomplished; the amount varying with the class of airport and terrain conditions.

The number of suitable sites for airports would be tremendously increased if only one runway were required and this in addition to the cost reduction would have a considerable effect on securing more accessible airports. More airports and more accessible airports have long been known to be essential in making personal flying more pleasant and more useful.

Another important advantage of the cross-wind landing gear is in the reduction in pilot-training time which has been freely predicted by those familiar with both pilot training and with the performance of the cross-wind undercarriage. This reduction can be realized only if the student intends to limit his flying to airplanes not sensitive to drift landings and drift landings may occur without cross winds due to improper use of the airplane controls. However, some reduction might be realized by initial training with a cross-wind undercarriage. This is indicated by the results of a rather extended pilot-training research program which showed that total training time for flying a three-control airplane with conventional undercarriage could be shortened by starting the training in a two-control airplane with a tricycle undercarriage.

The third advantage would be in a reduction in accidents. Close to 50 percent of all accidents in nonscheduled flying are landing accidents and it is estimated that well over 10 percent of these accidents would be eliminated with the adoption of the cross-wind landing gear. Forced landing accidents, which account for another 15 percent of the total, might be still more reduced by the greater latitude made possible in the choice of landing fields by eliminating consideration of cross winds. The improvement in safety with the cross-wind landing gear could be further increased by moving the main wheels further forward, which would be permissible with the great reduction in ground-looping tendency accomplished with castered wheels.

Some simplification of traffic control might result from the use of a single runway and, in locating airports close to communities, the traffic pattern would be made such that flying over the community would be entirely unnecessary either for landing or for take-off.

POINT 4 OF THE PRESIDENT'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in his inaugural address, President Truman gave voice to what has been referred to as a new administration policy whereby aid in the form of American technical knowledge and the opportunity to utilize primarily private scientific skills would be extended to the underdeveloped areas of the earth on a basis of mutual assistance wherever fair conditions for their employment could be enjoyed. This has been referred to as point 4 in the President's message and has attracted much attention. In reality such a policy is novel only in that it gives broader scope to that spirit of cooperative help which took form with the implementation of the Marshall plan.

On January 26 the Secretary of State placed point 4 of the President's address in its setting as a part of American foreign policy. In doing so, he pointed out that there was a great impediment to development in many countries where many people fail to understand the importance of being fair to private investors and he made it clear that proper conditions which would invite the flow of private capital should be created in the less developed areas of the world. Certainly if private investment is to be discouraged, the principal sufferers are the people of relatively undeveloped countries.

In this respect, I am advised, the just and fair treatment of foreign investments in certain quarters in Latin America has for many years been a subject of grave concern. The United States has made many efforts to aid the Latin-American countries and for many years has been careful to refrain from interfering in the protection of its interests, although they were widely recognized as being legitimate.

In this connection, I am told, it is striking to note that last April the Bogotá Conference in approving chapter IV, which deals with the protection of private investments and the creation of conditions which would be favorable to the investment of foreign capital in Latin America, did so by the slim margin of one vote. And this vote came only after many of the Latin-American states had so weakened the measure as to render it well-nigh ineffectual from the point of view of inducing the flow of private capital, safeguarding the investor, and then raising living standards in these countries.

While, for the most part, the Latin-American countries have not directly participated in the European recovery program, they have, according to reports made to me, frequently made overtures to the United States for loans on a government-to-government basis, and in many instances such financial assistance has not been forthcoming because, according to the normal standards of sound banking, the risk could not be underwritten.

The general character of the language in which the administration's plan was proposed has, according to advices I have received, been a cause of great expectations on the part of Latin America that there would soon be new programs of increased financial aid. Even though the Secretary of State, in his clarifying statement, has stressed the importance of creating conditions for safeguarding the foreign investor, Latin Americans have, so it appears, continued to give a very liberal interpretation to point 4.

But it is to be noted that at the very same time that these expectations flourish, the recent actions of certain of the Latin-American countries with respect to just and equal treatment, nondiscrimination, and the fostering of private capital, might well, it seems to me, disqualify them from any consideration at all under a plan such as the President proposed in his first message.

For example, it is reported that the Argentine Government's current unjustified attacks upon foreign interests in the Argentine runs counter to all normal concepts of international comity.

Certainly the foreign investor, according to all reports, is denied the comfort that his capital will be protected in Colombia where the compulsory arbitration of issues relative to American oil interests, the division of profits, and the expropriation of American-owned utilities are matters of common knowledge.

Another outstanding instance lies in the case of Guatemala, word of which has recently reached me. Here, a new code, supposedly written for the benefit of everyday citizens, has been devised and is interpreted so as actually to discriminate solely against the most extensively invested American enterprise in that country. This large American enterprise in Guatemala has also been denied lawful access to the courts, so I am informed, and is confronted with serious economic break-downs through actions which, I am informed, can be directly traced to Communist influences.

The many fine and responsible people in Latin America should, it seems to me, realize that insofar as point 4 is concerned, actions speak louder than words. Unfortunately, Latin America is often considered as a whole by people in the United States and the overt acts of a few can disqualify those who actually do deserve assistance.

These conditions are well known and the State Department is sparing no effort to point out to the responsible officials in Latin America the jeopardy in which they place themselves by certain of their policies. But since point 4 is now open for all the world to examine and the aid which it proposes is actually being anticipated, it is appropriate that we speak out beyond diplomatic channels in order that our neighbors in Latin America may be cognizant of that spirit of mutual partnership, cooperation, and responsibility which the good-neighbor policy implies.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD following my remarks the full text of the statement of the Secretary of State concerning point 4, which was made on January 26, 1949.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERR in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRANSCRIPTION OF EXTEMPORANEOUS REMARKS BY SECRETARY OF STATE DEAN ACHESON, CONCERNING POINT 4 OF THE PRESIDENT'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS, AT HIS PRESS CONFERENCE, JANUARY 26, 1949

First of all, I hope that you all understand the setting of point 4 in the President's inaugural address. It was one of four major courses of action which the President said would be carried out by his administration over the next 4 years, for the purpose of achieving the great objective which he talked about mainly in that address. That objective was to make clear in our own country and to all the world the purpose of American life and the purpose of the American system. That purpose is to enable the individual to attain the freedom and dignity, the fullness of life which should be the purpose of all government and of all life on this earth except insofar as it may be a preparation for some other life.

The President went on to point out that the other theory—of the place of the individual in society—was not a modern theory, was not a radical or a new view, but was reactionary in the extreme. It is a view which goes back to the period before the Renaissance. It is a view which is founded on the basic idea that status is the governing factor in life; that every person is born into the world in a position and that that person becomes a mere cog in a machine. That is a basically reactionary attitude and philosophy. It is not, as I say, modern. It is an attempt to crawl back into the cocoon of history. The American view of life is one which flows directly from the Renaissance and is one which says that the worth and dignity and freedom of the individual are the objectives of government.

Then the President went on to point out courses of action which we were going to take over the next 4 years to try to bring about that purpose of life, not only in this country, but in any other country which wished our help and association in that effort. To me the essential thing about it is that it is the use of material means to a nonmaterial end. It is not that we believe that other people need or wish things for their own purpose merely to have these material objects. It is not that material objects in and of themselves make a better or fuller life, but they are the means by which people can obtain freedom, not only freedom from the pressure of those other human beings who would restrict their freedom, but help in the ancient struggle of man to earn his living and get his bread from the soil. That is the purpose; that is the objective of this program.

Now, the President was not announcing a project to be completed within a few weeks or months. He was announcing in this, as in the other three respects, a long program for his administration. It was a program on which much has been done in the past and on which more can be done in the future. The President pointed out that the United States has no monopoly of skills or techniques. Other countries have vast reservoirs of skill. In almost every country there is some nucleus of skill, some group of people whose technical abilities can be expanded with help from the outside. With all of those people, the Pesident stated, we wish to work. He particularly stated that we wished to work through the United Nations and all those affiliated organizations which are associated with it. He pointed out that in so far as his program is successful and in so far as peoples in less developed areas acquire skills, they may also create the conditions under which capital may flow into those countries. He did not say this was to be governmental capital and indeed, if the proper conditions are created, the reservoirs of private capital are very great indeed. He pointed out that these must be two-way operations. There is abroad in the world an idea that there is a magic in investment. There is an idea that if every country can only have a steel mill, then all is well. There is a failure to understand that it is a long and difficult process to develop the skills which are necessary to operate many of these plants. There is sometimes failure to understand that plants should be located where the natural resources exist and not on purely nationalistic bases. There is also in many places a failure to understand that unless the conditions are created by which investors may fairly put their money into that country, then there is a great impediment to development. It is no solution to say, "Well, the private investors won't do it. Therefore, governments must." So he pointed out that it must be a two-way street.

Now, as I say, much has been done in the past to try to make technological skill and advice available from the United States and from other countries, through the United Nations and through many of its organizations. All of those efforts can be brought together and intensified. The President pointed out that we are willing and anxious to work with every country that wishes to really enter into a cooperative system with the rest of the world to this end and with every country that wishes to help other countries to develop.

Now, that is the broad background of the inaugural address. I have talked at some length about this because it seems to me important that it be put in its setting of American foreign policy.

INVITATION TO ATTEND DEMONSTRATION OF TACTICAL AIRCRAFT AT ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Air Force, the Honorable Stuart Symington, desires to extend to the Members of the Senate an invitation to attend a display and demonstration of tactical aircraft which has been scheduled to be held on February 15, 1949, at the Andrews Air Force Base.

The presentation will show the progress made by the Air Force in the field of combat aviation since the beginning of World War II.

Transportation for those Members of the Senate who may wish to attend will be on hand at the Senate Office Building at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The presentation will be concluded at 4:45, at which time return transportation will be available.

It will be appreciated if those Members of the Senate who wish to attend will be kind enough to advise the Senate Armed Services Committee to that effect and if they will please arrange to meet with the members of that committee in the committee room, 212 Senate Office Building, at 2 p. m., February 15.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN STORM-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, during the Eightieth Congress, bills were introduced to provide aid for Greece and Turkey in the total sum of $625,000,000. As I remember, the bills were passed almost unanimously. I was one of the few Senators who voted against them. At that time I stated my reasons. I said, among other things, that nearly one-third of our population was underclothed and undernourished; our teachers were not getting enough money; there was a need of Federal aid to education, for public health, and so on.

Today, I have been informed by Mr. Seward, of the Federal Works Agency, that all through the Middle West not only have people died as a result of the cold and the blizzards, but literally millions upon millions of dollars' worth of sheep and cattle are dead. In the State of Nevada, according to the senior Senator from Nevada, roughly, one-third of all livestock have perished.

I am introducing a bill providing for an appropriation of $150,000,000. It is not an ordinary disaster loan. In fact, it is not a loan at all. Last night, over the radio, Eric Johnston said we ought to guarantee loans made by Americans in foreign countries. It seems to me if we are going into the business, as we have done during the past few years, of practically guaranteeing some of the loans, we should be willing to make good the losses of some of our own people here in America. Certainly it is not the fault of the stockman, farmer, or rancher when the blizzards suddenly come upon him and he is wiped out. I may say that telephonic inquiry develops the fact that the blizzards are today worse than ever.

The bill I am introducing provides that these losses shall be paid in full by the Government, so that a man, for example, who through the years saved his money and finally gathered together a herd of cattle or sheep, will not suddenly become bankrupt because of an act of God such as that which has occurred within the past few days.

I have discussed the bill with other Senators. I ask unanimous consent out of order to introduce the bill. If other Senators want to join me in sponsoring it, I shall be glad to have them do so; or if some other Senator wants to sponsor it, I shall be very glad to join with him.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 963) to provide for determination and payment of losses sustained by individuals as a result of recent storms in the Western and Middle Western States, introduced by Mr. LANGER, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ISRAEL AN ACTUALITY

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, although the headlines and the news stories from day to day have been alternately hopeful and pessimistic on the outcome of negotiations in the Near East over Israel, the fact remains that Israel is now an actuality. It exists; it functions; it will endure.

I am indebted to Mr. Seymour Staiman, secretary of the Williamsport-Sunbury district of the Zionist Organization of America, for a very kind letter in which, on behalf of his organization, he expresses the thanks of his group for what he terms "a quite satisfactory ending" in the Israel saga, and adds:

The United States policy on Israel has, of course, been perhaps the major factor in effecting this satisfactory ending.

I think men of good will everywhere will readily concede that the forthright position of President Truman on this issue has been one of great courage and great humanity, and I am glad to have this expression from a Pennsylvania leader in the Zionist cause in grateful acknowledgment of the United States position in behalf of decency in the Near East and justice for a great cause.

As Mr. Staiman expressed it further, "This is a great moment in history for those of the Jewish faith." In my reply to his gracious letter, however, I emphasized that it is not only those of Jewish faith who consider the successful emergence of this new nation "as a great moment in history."

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Staiman's letter be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLIAMSPORT-SUNBURY DISTRICT,
ZIONIST ORGANIZATION OF AMERICA,
Williamsport, Pa., January 22, 1949.

Senator FRANCIS J. MYERS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MYERS: As the situation in Israel seems to be heading for a quite satisfactory ending, we find time to thank those who helped make this possible.

The United States policy on Israel, has, of course, been perhaps the major factor in effecting this satisfactory ending. And we wish to express our appreciation to you for your excellent efforts on our behalf. We know full well that when the support of others was no more than double-talk, your support was in action.

This is a great moment in history for those of the Jewish faith. We wish to thank you from the bottom of our hearts for helping to make it possible.

Very sincerely yours,
SEYMOUR STAIMAN,
Secretary, Williamsport-Sunbury District Zionist Organization of America.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the acting majority leader to what time the Senator proposes to have the Senate adjourn or recess?

Mr. MYERS. To Thursday.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the acting majority leader state what legislation he expects to have brought up at that time?

Mr. MYERS. Exactly what the situation will be I do not know. I do not believe there will be anything on the calendar. The cotton acreage report may be brought up.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that all the acting majority leader feels might come up for consideration on Thursday?

Mr. MYERS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the acting majority leader for the information.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Frank C. Bingham, of Alaska, to be United States attorney for division No. 2, District of Alaska;

Harry O. Arend, of Alaska, to be United States attorney for division No. 4, District of Alaska;

George L. Grobe, of New York, to be United States attorney for the western district of New York;

Alfred J. Plowden, Jr., of South Carolina, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina; and Kehoe C. Shannon, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the western district of Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the Executive Calendar.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John Monroe Johnson, of South Carolina, to be reappointed as an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for the term expiring December 31, 1955.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether the report on this nomination was unanimous?

Mr. MYERS. I understand it was a unanimous report.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, as in legislative session, that the Senate adjourn until next Thursday at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 17, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Shepherd of our souls, give us brave and stout hearts, conscious of Thy wise direction. We are aware that trials and difficulties may await us ere the day is over, yet we would not bemoan our duty.

Grant that we may meet the challenge of any just appeal without prejudice or the spirit of retaliation. O keep us open-minded, and let us feel the tides of emotion and broad understanding, that will defeat the hazards of disunity and failure. We pray in the name of Him who spake as the Son of Man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 10, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on February 7, 1949, the President approved and signed a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 136. Joint resolution making a further appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 22. Concurrent resolution suspending legislative budget until May 1, 1949.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 135. An act to authorize the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight-saving time in the District.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 128) entitled "An act to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be used in computing cotton acreage allotments for any subsequent year," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. LUCAS, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. YOUNG to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHESNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two separate instances, in one to include an article on the Calumet plan for Chicago and in the other a speech he delivered on February 12 at the Thaddeus Kosciusko Monument in Washington, D. C.

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three instances, in the first to include an article from the Sheboygan Press, in the second a statement from the American Federation of Labor, and in the third a speech by Bernard Baruch.

GEN. THADDEUS KOSCIUSKO

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I join with my distinguished colleague from Georgia [Mr. LANHAM] and concur in his eloquent remarks with reference to one of America's greatest Presidents, Abraham Lincoln. I direct the attention of the House also to the fact that Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko was born on the same day. It is particularly important that with the desperate and tragic events occurring in Hungary with reference to the persecution of the great Cardinal Mindszenty that America recognize behind this iron curtain the brave people of Poland and that they should receive our tribute again as they have paid tribute to us. Certainly in those years when America needed help brave Poland came forward with a brave man, Thaddeus Kosciusko.

The service of these two great men to their God and to their country is far beyond my poor power to add or to detract. We honor two outstanding champions of freedom from two different countries and from two different generations. As Americans we join with each other in honoring the memory of the Great Liberator, Abraham Lincoln, and as Americans we join again in honoring the memory of a great patriot, Thaddeus Kosciusko.

Today, however, there is deep and special significance when we honor the name of Kosciusko, for as the symbol of freedom and liberty, he appeals to the hearts of men all over the world where there remains a love of justice, freedom, and liberty.

And particularly is this so because in his homeland, once again under the heels of the invader, the oppressor, and the tyrant, the cause of liberty, deep-grained and everlasting, remains.

To the cause of American independence Kosciusko contributed three things, scientific knowledge, most desirable traits of human character, and an unalloyed and unwavering enthusiasm for the cause of liberty. Kosciusko was the first foreign soldier of distinction to heed the call of freedom and cross the stormy sea. He came not because he sought fortune, but simply because he loved freedom.

Kosciusko was an American in spirit through and through. He did not mind beginning at the bottom. Tradition says that when he presented himself to Gen. George Washington, the future President of the United States inquired, "And what can you do?" "Try me; I am willing to do anything," was Kosciusko's reply This is merely a tradition, but well does it speak the truth of the zeal, the enthusiasm, and the courage of a leader of liberty among leaders of that cause since the dawn of history. Today, in this year of our Lord, I stand in the Halls of Congress and pay my tribute. It is interesting to observe that on January 20, 1818, in this same Hall of Congress, William Henry Harrison, then a Representative in Congress from Ohio, later to be President of the United States, when he heard of the death of Kosciusko, introduced a resolution just as I do today, asking for a public expression of respect "for the memory of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, formerly an officer in the service of the United States and the uniform and distinguished friend of liberty and the rights of man." At that time, Congressman Harrison had this to say in support of his resolution:

He was remarked throughout his service for all the qualities which adorn the human character. He was idolized by the soldiers for his bravery, and beloved and respected by the officers for the goodness of his heart and the great qualities of his mind.

Such was the man, sir, for whose memory I ask from an American Congress a slight tribute of respect. Not, sir, to perpetuate his name—but our gratitude. His fame will last as long as liberty remains upon the earth; as long as a votary offers incense upon her altar, the name of Kosciusko will be invoked. And if, by the common consent of the world, a temple shall be erected to those who have rendered the most service to mankind, if the statue of our great countryman shall occupy the place of the most worthy, that of Kosciusko will be found by his side and the wreath of laurel will be entwined with a palm of virtue to adorn his brow.

It is, indeed, then fitting and proper that today in walking down the great Pennsylvania Avenue in the Capital City of Washington, opposite the White House, the official residence of the President of the United States, in the beautiful Lafayette Park, there stands the magnificent monument of Kosciusko, a soldier, a scholar, and a gentleman, faithful to one aim—liberty and human happiness. In his aid to the struggling new Nation in America, Kosciusko did not announce himself by any assumed title or name, although that was fashionable. He did not ask for any rank, did not demand any pay. He went from task to task doing this work quietly and efficiently. Being a military engineer, he had no chance for a brilliant personal distinction; his business was to make it possible for the commanding general to win victory and prevent defeat. Washington called him a gentleman of science and merit.

Kosciusko served with the armies, both in the North and the South through the entire war, and served with distinction. It was said that his deeds naturalized him as an American, and they also associated him with that band of chivalrous foreigners De Kalb, Steuben, Lafayette, and the others who left the Old World to uphold the cause of liberty in the New. It is to be regretted, indeed, that today Poland cannot be represented in international affairs by men who have a right to speak for the Polish people. No, today it is another tragedy for—oh, so tragic Poland—that her mouthpieces before the nations are mere passive agents of the atheistic, communistic Kremlin.

And during the days of Kosciusko the Poles saved others. They could not save their national independence and the country after the desperate resistance of Kosciusko and the other patriots, and the nation was partitioned between Russia, Austria, and Prussia in the latter part of the nineteenth century. But the Poles never stopped fighting for their liberty. And their fight was always animated by those ideals of human liberty once again exhibited in the peoples of the western Christian democracies in their declared modern crusade against the dictatorship behind the iron curtain.

It is not easy for us today to look behind the infamous iron curtain and find the true thoughts and feelings of the brave Polish people. But we know Polish history and it speaks eloquently, loudly, and long. And we hear the eternal truth in the words of the famous Polish patriot, Mochnazki:

When the foreigner's government is gentle the Poles rise up because they can; when it is severe they rise up because they must. Nothing will accommodate them to the ruin of their Fatherland, and moderation no more than cruelty.

The questions are not: Shall Poland's eastern border be shifted westward? Shall she lose her eastern territories or losing them acquire western territories? The question is, Shall Poland exist?

And this answer is "Yes, 10,000 times; 10,000 times yes," for the hopes and dreams of a free and independent Poland no tyrant can ever crush.

And shining as a beautiful star leading the way to their certainty of liberty is the deep and lasting and abiding faith of their fathers beloved by the Poles. Christianity is the companion of liberty in all its conflicts, the cradle of its infancy, the divine source of its fame.

Liberty cannot be established without a proper sense of morality. And morality cannot exist without a great faith. And this the Poles have had since their conversion and in abundance, and to a degree that is a powerful example to the peoples and nations of the world of their own faith and of all others. And this, the evil men of communism will never understand. They forget the teachings of history. They forget the deep love in the Poles of religious liberty as well as political freedom. They forget that religious liberty is made up of the best sense of what is right and the highest conviction of loyalty and duty. Armed with these, the Poles have looked the sternest despotism in the face.

Mr. Speaker, nestled among the beautiful hills and the rolling country in Pennsylvania is the County of Luzerne, the district which it is my high honor to represent in this Congress. And there resides over 100,000 Americans, staunch, faithful, and true, and in their veins flows the proud blood of ancient Poland. But they have won their spurs, they have won their right to the proud name of American, and the best proof in the world of this is to look at the casualty lists of the two past great world wars and there inscribed in letters of blood are the names of Poland. There is a close tie both in blood and faith between the Polish and American people—each has given the other so much national character.

Historically, the two countries have trod much the same path in their search for statehood and national existence. And historically, too, they have sprung to one another's aid when disaster threatened.

The course of democracy in Poland has staggered under almost insuperable odds. Yet the flame of freedom has never died. It will never die. Through the dark, endless years of oppression, when the prospect of a free Poland seemed but the fragile dream of zealots, the one inextinguishable idea has persisted. It persists today.

And today the whole world is plunged in a bitter struggle to maintain those same principles of human decency for which Poland has traditionally searched. The whole world of the millions of people who despise tyranny and who fought nazism now find themselves faced with communism and the kindred doctrine that shall as well be crushed. Old enmities, suspicion and prejudice must now be thrust aside to form one overwhelming, united front.

But, Mr. Speaker, just as Kosciusko and other Polish patriots had concern for America, we should have some concern for Poland's welfare today. A great Christian people like the Poles will never accept the pagan political and social philosophy of the Soviet. There can be no place in Europe or in the world for one people who try to force upon another ideologies in which they have no faith.

As a nation dedicated to freedom, recognizing the blessing of liberty, as we do, the United States of America must continue to exhibit the gravest concern in the welfare and the future of Poland. The great weight of the United States of America must be thrown behind the fight of all true Poles for a truly free Poland.

Two hundred years has failed to dim the luster of Kosciusko's glory achieved in the cause of our freedom. Kosciusko's name will live forever, symbolic of the struggle of man against the forces of oppression.

The United States of America is the leading nation in the world today. There is only one thing for a leader to do and that is to lead. The spirit of Kosciusko will never rest in peace until there is restored to her proper place at the council table of the nations of the world a free and independent and sovereign state, the Republic of Poland. In paying tribute to this hero, Thaddeus Kosciusko, I pay tribute to the brave and gallant Poles who have always shed their blood on the battlefields of liberty all over the world, who have fought for the freedom of almost every foreign nation. The spirit of Poland is the spirit of Kosciusko. It is an unconquerable spirit that will never die.

Mr. Speaker, I sing to the memory of Thaddeus Kosciusko, the immortal Polish song, Jeszcze Polska Nie Zginela.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY AND BROTHERHOOD WEEK

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, St. Valentine's Day and Brotherhood Week should be an appropriate time for the things that I want to say. I have heard many speeches about deceased Members of Congress; however, I notice that no one gets up and mentions the fact when one of our Members is seriously ill and is confined to a hospital. I sincerely believe that any Member who knows that one of our colleagues is ill should either notify us here on the floor or perhaps we could hand the names in so that it could be listed on the last page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have belonged to organizations that have tried this scheme of sending get-well cards to members and I assure you it does the patient a great deal of good to know that his colleagues are thinking of him and hope that he will soon be well.

At the present time, our ailing colleagues must feel that their colleagues are hovering over them like vultures hoping that the illness is nothing trivial so that some one of us can edge up a place on some particular committee.

I know that we do not want to give this impression.

While I am on my feet, I would like to remind you that today is PERCY PRIEST'S wedding anniversary. He is a gentleman that the Sixth District of Tennessee can well be proud of and I want to compliment Mrs. Priest on her excellent taste in choosing a husband.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include certain editorials.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask uanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Mickey Marcus Memorial Address."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. LYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the abuse of regulation W and also to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two other instances and include certain statements and excerpts.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM REMINGTON

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the reversal of the decision of the Loyalty Board, holding that William Remington, a top-flight employee in the Department of Commerce, was not a safe security risk, and the Department's hurried reinstatement of him in a $10,300 job, with above

$5,000 back pay, should be a matter of grave concern to the public, and, therefore, of concern to every Member of this body.

On Friday last I said that if Congress passed up this matter without doing something about it, it would evidence Members' unfitness to be trusted as guardians of the public safety, and that statement I now reiterate.

The hearings conducted by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in July 1948, established, beyond the slightest possibility of reasonable doubt, the fact that William Remington, who at the time was chairman of a board in the Department of Commerce screening vital exports to Europe, and particularly to Russia, was a Communist and had formerly, when on the War Production Board, performed as an agent and spy for Russia. The evidence taken on this particular subject is contained in parts 1 and 2 of the hearings of the Senate committee and is available to Members of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I shall address the House at length on this subject later on.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRIEST asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by Mr. Paul A. Strachan, and a copy of a bill he introduced.

Mr. ERYSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper excerpt.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by Pope Pius and others with respect to the Cardinal Mindszenty trial.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, even though a Democrat, I have, on more than one occasion, had the honor of being elected president of the Abraham Lincoln Club in my home city of Long Beach, Los Angeles County, Calif.; and the last occasion on which I received this high honor was very shortly after I was defeated for return from the Eighteenth Congressional District to the Eightieth Congress. Perhaps my many friends in my home city, regardless of political affiliation, realizing that, ever since I was a lad, the life of Abraham Lincoln has been the most inspiring life to me in the course of our American history.

Last Saturday, February 12, having been appropriately observed as the one hundred and fortieth birthday of this great citizen of the ages, and the President of the United States reportedly standing for about 10 minutes with bared head while his wreath was being placed at the Lincoln Memorial, I just wish to now call the attention of the Members of this Eighty-first Congress in the history of the United States to the fact that Abraham Lincoln was elected as a Whig to the Thirtieth Congress, March 4, 1847, to March 3, 1849. He first came to Washington to serve, arriving December 2, 1847, for the session of that Congress opening on December 6.

While in Congress, he lived in a boarding house, commonly known as Mrs. Sprigg's boarding house, right here on Capitol Hill where the Library of Congress is now located; and other Congressmen living at the same place were John Blanchard; John Dickey, of Pennsylvania; P. W. Tompkins, of Mississippi; Giddings, of Ohio; and Embree, of Indiana. One of his colleagues in the House was John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts; another was Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee. The United States Senators from Illinois at this time were Sidney Breeze, of Carlyle, and Stephen A. Douglas, of Quincy.

The principal issues of the day were, of course, the war with Mexico; the extension of slavery and the Wilmot proviso; westward migration—which, of course, was increased greatly by the discovery of gold in California; internal improvements by the Federal Government; and our relations with the American Indian.

Lincoln was regularly appointed to the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads and also to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. Because I think the general impression is that Lincoln was more or less inactive on the floor of the House while here, I asked our very able and cooperative Reference Service of the Library of Congress to furnish me with a memorandum showing the incidents wherein Abraham Lincoln took part in any manner on the floor of the Congress while a Member. I knew this information would be new information to many people and possibly to some Members who have not had time to read in detail of his congressional activities. This information is as follows:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Speaker, I know that we, as Members of the present Eighty-first Congress, cannot sit between these walls on any occasion without realizing that Abraham Lincoln also worked here. This fact must, of necessity, renew our determination to make it literally true that we assume the great task remaining before us and that the honored dead of our wars for democracy shall know that we dedicate an increased devotion to the cause for which they gave their lives and that, in like manner, we at this birthday season, do again highly resolve that they shall not have died in vain and that we, as Members of the same Congress of the same great Nation which Abraham Lincoln served as a Member of Congress, shall daily dedicate our lives to the proposition that, because of our unselfish service to our Nation, that Nation shall have a new birth of freedom and that we shall make it truer than ever that Government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that one of the outstanding agencies of the Government, and the one Department that has been noted for the administration of its affairs and for its efficiency throughout its organization is about to bog down—I refer to the United States Post Office Department. Mr. Speaker, the population of our country and of most of our cities and towns has increased tremendously, and with the building of good roads and rural electrification, our rural areas have also progressed and have required and now demand extended mail delivery, and besides the services of the Post Office Department have been so multiplied and expanded that, with the recent appropriations sufficient funds have not been made available to the Post Office Department to furnish the personnel and service to meet the needs of the citizens of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, of great importance also is the fact that for many years no appropriations have been made for construction of post-office buildings and Federal court buildings, many of the post offices being housed in shacks which are a disgrace to our Nation, and limited repairs, if any, have been made to provide the necessary space for the handling of the greatly increased volume of all classes of mail, particularly air mail and parcel post, parcel-post mail alone being more than enough to overtax all available room, making it necessary to use basements and any and all rooms in the buildings which should be used for other necessary purposes.

Mr. Speaker, in my district—and I understand the same condition exists in practically nearly all other parts of the United States—many of the present post-office buildings are outmoded, antiquated, and inadequate to handle the mails, and in many instances, as a result, the patrons of the offices are forced to stand in line and wait an interminable amount of time for mail and stamps and other services of the Post Office Department, and while during the war, of course, the citizens of the country were not complaining about these inconveniences and conditions, since the end of the war demands have been made and are now being made upon nearly every member of the Congress for relief.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, with the funds which have been recently appropriated to the Post Office Department, the Department has been unable to provide the necessary personnel and help, not only in the post offices but also on city and rural routes, and I am told that this has been responsible for unnecessary and unreasonable delay in the dispatch of the mails, and which never existed before in the history of the Post Office Department.

Mr. Speaker, I am taking the liberty to call this matter to the attention of the President and administration and the Congress, and especially to the attention of the committees of the House and Senate who are concerned with and have jurisdiction over the authorizations and appropriations in the hope that they will take steps to correct this most unsatisfactory and unpardonable situation, and I trust that they will take such action as they determine best to provide relief to the Post Office Department in order that this fine Department may continue to maintain its service and reputation as it has so well done in the past.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENNINGS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include editorials in each.

Mr. BURDICK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short letter.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. LOVRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JENNINGS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

WHY ARE MILK PRICES NOT SUPPORTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE LAW?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the administration is not following the law in regard to the agricultural support program. This is particularly evident so far as milk for manufactured dairy products is concerned. While the New Deal and Fair Deal branch of political agricultural support may be sending out letters attempting to blame the lack of support on the Eightieth Congress, and also saying that there are no funds available for supporting dairy prices, the fact is that the law today provides for 90-percent parity support price for milk and its products.

It appears easier and perhaps more desirable for certain groups to try and blame the Eightieth Congress, than to admit they misled the dairymen of our country into believing President Truman's campaign promises.

It is also a fact that the administration has the power, authority, and the funds to support the price of milk in accordance with the provisions of the law. The cunning, cute, and evasive approach of this administration will not stand the light of day. The President killed the 90-percent parity support price himself—all of the false propaganda notwithstanding.

The cheap politics behind this lack of announced support for milk is beyond doubt a move to let the price of milk become so low that the dairymen will come to Washington on bended knees to ask for relief from the administration. And when it is granted, the administration will then tell the dairymen just how they saved them. This one is too crude and apparent for the administration to get away with. All the dairymen ask, is a support price equal to that provided by law.

This should be a country governed by laws, and not by men, especially evasive politicians. The dairymen of the United States have already been deprived of millions of dollars because of the failure of the Fair Deal to carry out the provisions of the price-support law.

THE AIKEN BILL

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am including in my remarks a copy of a resolution passed by the Winnebago County, Ill., Farm Bureau, whereby they have gone on record in support of the Agricultural Act of 1948, known as the Aiken bill, which provides flexible price supports of 60 to 90 percent of parity.

The Winnebago County Farm Bureau is one of the three largest in the State of Illinois. It pleased me immensely to see the agricultural leaders of the Nation supporting the Republican farm bill, passed by the Eightieth Republican Congress.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE TWENTY-NINTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WINNEBAGO COUNTY FARM BUREAU

I

Whereas farmers want to help develop economic programs which facilitate the best use of land and human resources; and

Whereas farmers want these programs to be in the best interest of public welfare; and

Whereas farmers recognize that too high price supports in any farm program would produce unwieldy crop surpluses with disastrous results such as fixed prices and rigid control and farmer regimentation: Be it hereby

Resolved, That our country farm bureau go on record in support of the Agricultural Act of 1948 known as the Aiken bill which provides flexible price supports of 60 to 90 percent of parity.

XII

Because the welfare of the Nation depends upon the prosperity of all segments of our economy, no segment of our economy has the right to make demands for itself at the expense of the general public. Neither agriculture, labor, nor industry can solve their own problems without giving due considerations to the problems of others, so we urge that agriculture, industry, and labor make a sincere effort to promote harmonious relationships and cooperate for the benefit of all, and in helping to bring about better relationships between the three groups and especially between labor and industry, our Representative in the National Congress, as well as management and labor leaders give careful study and considerations to pending labor-management legislation in order to avoid hasty judgment and actions in the passage of labor-management legislation which might prove harmful to the best interests of our country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., Republican leader of the House of Representatives, at a Lincoln Day dinner at Lochhaven, Pa., on Saturday evening, February 12, 1949.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a New York Times editorial on housing.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

THE JOHNSONVILLE STEAM PLANT

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the appropriation of funds for the construction of the Johnsonville steam plant should not be made. This proposition has been before Congress on several occasions, and I have always voted against it. I shall expect to vote against it when it comes before the House again. Because of the uncertainty as to the progress of legislation at this time it is uncertain just when the matter will come up for final vote, but I want to be on record as opposed to the project when it does come. But to be doubly sure, I am making this statement and having it inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I am opposed to this project for two very substantial reasons. First, the Government has no right under the Constitution to engage in the power business. It has no right to construct dams for power purposes. Its power in this respect is limited to flood control and navigation purposes. The whole Tennessee Valley project was constructed in violation of the spirit of the Constitution. It was well known that this great project was primarily and principally a power project and not a flood-control or navigation project. Now they come along with the proposition to build a steam plant to produce power, and this plant will be operated by coal and not by water power. It will be directly in opposition to private industry, which is at this time doing a good job in supplying power to the people.

I hope that we will be able to defeat this proposition when it comes up for consideration as we have done on several previous occasions.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House of 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include certain newspaper articles.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD regarding the persecution of the Bulgarian clergymen and also to include an editorial.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. LYNCH (at the request of Mr. DEANE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address.

Mr. ZABLOCKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a copy of a speech and an editorial and a resolution.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington (at the request of Mr. HOLIFIELD) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper article, and that my remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HOLIFIELD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMUNISTS IN FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have heard all of these talks by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] criticising the Committee on Un-American Activities. I propose to answer at least a portion of them today.

In the first place, I join the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] with reference to William W. Remington. He ought not to be on the Federal pay roll. If Congress is going to sit idly by and see those men of questionable loyalty returned to the Federal pay roll, then it is time the American people took things into their own hands and changed the Congress.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] gets up here and repeats what some alleged scientists have said about Dr. Edward U. Condon. Many people think that Dr. Condon is one of the most dangerous men on the Federal pay roll today, and that he is in a dangerous position, so far as our atomic security is concerned.

I here and now call upon the new Committee on Un-American Activities to have Dr. Condon come before it, let him make his statement, cross-examine him, and bring out into the open the facts as to the danger that Dr. Condon represents to our atomic security.

When they do that, and publish the letter the FBI wrote about him, then the American people will understand the situation. Remember the safety of our country comes first.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROONEY asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education and Labor may be allowed to sit this week during the time when the House may not be in session and during the time when general debate is under way in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

There was no objection.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement that it is impossible to bring out the minimum wage bill within the next week or 10 days. The Committee on Education and Labor has reported out H. R. 858, which deals with the supposed strike of the stevedores, coming on March 1. The bill reported out is the same as H. R. 858, with the exception that we added the words "as applied in the longshoreman, stevedoring, and building and construction industries."

The reason the construction industry is in the bill is because the trades are now bargaining for wages for next spring. So that we may avoid any strikes, this bill has been reported practically unanimously from the committee on last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Private Calendar may be dispensed with this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday this week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION (H. DOC. NO. 74)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk and, together with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the second report of the Economic Cooperation Administration created by the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, Public Law 472 of the Eightieth Congress, approved April 3, 1948.

The report covers activities under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 (title I of Public Law 472) and the China Aid Act of 1948 (title IV of Public Law 472). There is also included a summary of the status of the United States foreign relief program (Public Law 84) and the United States foreign aid program (Public Law 389).

This report is for the quarter ended September 30, 1948.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 11, 1949.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TRANSMITTING TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 75)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the twenty-seventh report to Congress on lend-lease operations.

This report contains a report on lend-lease fiscal operations prepared by the Treasury Department and submitted to the Secretary of State in accordance with Executive Order 9726. The period covered is from March 11, 1941, through March 31, 1948.

All deliveries under the various pipeline agreements to lend-lease recipient governments have been concluded. The consummation of these agreements constituted one of the first measures of the United States which contributed to post-war economic recovery in countries suffering from wartime disruption and devastation.

An agreement, commonly referred to as a "settlement of settlements," was signed with the United Kingdom on July 12, 1948, and appears in this report as appendix II. This agreement disposes of wartime financial claims and related matters not completely disposed of by the previous agreements with the United Kingdom published in the twenty-second report.

A final lend-lease settlement agreement signed with Yugoslavia on July 19, 1948, appears as appendix III.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 14, 1949.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES AND THE CONDON CASE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. If these objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the comments of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Mississippi on the so-called Condon case. As a new member of the Committee on Un-American Activities perhaps I should not say too much; but I do want to make my position clear. In accepting an assignment to the committee, as far as I personally am concerned, I shall feel that members of the executive branch of the service should not have their names used in a manner which casts reflection upon them without giving them an opportunity to be heard. My understanding is that the chairman of the committee has been quoted in the press as saying that he intends to see that Dr. Condon is given an opportunity to appear before the committee. Certainly such a move as that in the committee will have my support.

I know nothing about Dr. Condon, personally; I have no prejudged convictions about him one way or the other; but I do think any man is entitled to be heard in his own defense if he is accused or his loyalty publicly questioned. At the same time, I wish to say that I think such situations as this would be largely avoided and, when they arise, would be more speedily cleared up if the executive agencies were free to give the committee full information from their files. The President's directive of August 5, 1948, effectively puts an iron curtain between the committee and information which is generally important and frequently essential if justice is to be done.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 111), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 96, providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2402) to extend the office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2402) to extend the office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules letting me present this bill which has for its purpose the continuation of the War Assets Administration for about 4 months. The life of the present administration expires on the 28th of February 1949. We are seeking to have it extended until June 30, 1949. I think those of us who were in the war and saw the tremendous amount of matériel and other things that are still in existence, and should, if possible, be made available for peacetime construction and peacetime promotion of some kind will realize that this additional time is necessary for the Board to act. I believe we may say this is the legislative opportunity for us to in a way carry out the Biblical admonishment of beating our swords into plowshares and our spears into pruning hooks, and to try to get this matériel, as far as possible, into peacetime production.

I am sure the House will realize this is a worthwhile project. The time on this rule has been divided between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] and myself.

I now yield to my distinguished colleague, the Congressman at Large from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] such time as he may desire. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I add my sentiments to those of my colleagues here and millions of people the world over regarding the unscrupulous, malicious and dastardly crime that was perpetrated on a prince of the Catholic Church and six of his associates by the Hungarian People's Court. The Russians criticized us for meddling in this matter. Well, if that is meddling, then we should add to its meaning for all time to come a practice of resentment and defense against indignities and assaults committed on people everywhere in the world, upon all religions and upon freedom itself.

That unfair trial was not directed entirely to a religious group. It was a direct attempt by a pagan dictatorship to break the very souls of free thinking men and women.

Let us be proud that we are Americans knowing that we not alone have the strength and courage to discern an injustice, but that we have the fortitude to express ourselves freely. We are the greatest democracy in the world today and we can be sure that we shall always maintain that status. It is in the annals of history that every emperor, king, or dictator who attempted to crush his subjects, or conquer the world, was himself crushed. If Cardinal Mindszenty does not win in his appeal, or if his brave spirit is extinguished by torture in the vile prison where his Communist captors have him confined, let it be a warning to the Red dictators that they are only preparing the way for their own downfall.

Josef Cardinal Mindszenty's conviction by a Hungarian court and sentence to imprisonment for life is an affront to liberty-loving people everywhere and an assault upon Christianity, and in truth upon all religion. This was persecution not prosecution. This was the most savage attack of civil power against the dignity of a man of God since the dictator Napolcon arrested and kidnaped Pope Pius VII 140 years ago. The conscience of mankind is aroused; and in the end whether Cardinal Mindszenty dies in the medieval prison where he is imprisoned, whether he is executed or released in response to the demands of outraged citizens and officials of democratic nations, he will be remembered with reverence and his persecutors condemned and forgotten. People who are religious and who love freedom will not forget.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I desire.

Mr. Speaker, first I want to compliment the new member of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Ohio, for the clear way in which he explained the rule now before us. Inasmuch as this comes with a unanimous report of the Committee on Expenditures there is no disposition on the part of any one on this side to oppose the rule, although I understand that members of the Committee on Expenditures will fully explain the bill when we go into committee in order that all will fully understand.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2402) to extend the Office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2402, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 2402 comes before the Congress on a time urgency basis. The supplemental Independent Offices Appropriation bill of 1949 which was passed June 9, 1948, by the Eightieth Congress, contained language which terminated the War Assets Administration and the Office of War Assets Administrator as of February 28, 1949.

Time has proven that this action was premature and ill-advised. The legislative language was placed in the appropriation bill against the advice of every member of the Rizley Subcommittee on Surplus Property Disposal, of which I was the ranking Democratic member. The members of the subcommittee (both Republicans and Democrats) had studied the problem of surplus disposal for 18 months. We were unanimously agreed that a year's extension was needed to liquidate the $4,555,000,000 of surplus property which then remained.

The appropriation committee ignored our recommendation and arbitrarily set an 8-month time limit for termination.

Today's urgency therefore demonstrates again the fallacy of ignoring a legislative committee's recommendation based on long study and justified conclusions, and substituting therefor arbitrary legislative provisions in an appropriation bill.

Now what is the present problem?

The War Assets Administration's authority to function expires February 28 in 10 more legislative days, according to Public Law 862.

The War Assets Administration still has to dispose of approximately $2,300,000,000 worth of real and personal property.

Approximately $2,000,000,000 is the value of real property involved; $300,000,000 is the value of personal property.

The War Assets Administration has, at this time, a smoothly functioning organization with which to continue liquidating this property in the most economical and efficient manner. Under the present Administrator, Mr. Jess Larson, the efficiency of the War Assets Administration has constantly improved. The personnel has been drastically reduced as the property load has diminished. I will refer in a few minutes to some charts which Mr. Larson used before the Appropriations Committee a few days ago, to further illustrate the true record and status of the War Assets Administration.

For the moment let us consider the alternative of allowing the War Assets Administration to expire on February 28.

First. The Government would still have the custody of $2,300,000,000 worth of property, yet to be disposed of.

Second. At the present time there is no central property disposal agency with the experience, personnel, and budget allowance to assume these duties.

Third. Under Public Law 862 heretofore alluded to—the supplemental independent offices appropriation bill of the Eightieth Congress—additional legislative language directed that property remaining in the hands of War Assets Administration on February 28, 1949, should be divided among four separate Government agencies:

(a) Real property to RFC.

(b) Ordinary personal propert, to the Bureau of Federal Supply.

(c) Aircraft component parts—acquisition value, $504,000,000—to the Department of the Air Force.

(d) Administrative property, records, and accounts to the Treasury Department.

During the hearings on H. R. 2402 representatives from these Departments appeared before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments or filed statements and letters protesting any transfer of these properties and duties at this time on the grounds that—

(a) No appropriation is carried in their 1949 fiscal budget to assume these duties.

(b) They do not have the personnel or background of experience to do the job.

(c) The interruption of the present disposal procedure would cost the taxpayers many extra millions of dollars.

Realizing the necessity for continued operation of the War Assets Administration, and by request of the President, an appropriation of $15,000,000 has been included in the present deficiency appropriation bill, which is under consideration by the Appropriations Committee. I understand Judge KERR's subcommittee has approved a slightly reduced appropriation for this purpose, but we are faced with a practical situation. The present appropriations bill also includes several controversial items over which debate will cause delay in final passage until after February 28.

We therefore face the necessity of immediate legislative authorization for this agency.

H. R. 2402 extends the life of the War Assets Administration from February 28 to June 30. The pending supplemental appropriation bill will provide the necessary funds for operational expenses until June 30, or until the functions of the War Assets Administration are absorbed by a permanent property disposal agency, which I understand has been recommended by the Hoover Commission.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will the gentleman advise as to any information he may have as to the amount of money it will be necessary to appropriate for this agency?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. If the gentleman had been listening carefully to my remarks he would have found that I gave the House the following language——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I was listening, may I say to the gentleman, to every single word he said. Perhaps I did not get it.

Mr. HOLIFIELD—

An appropriation of $15,000,000 has been included in the present deficiency appropriation bill.

I later stated that I understand the requested $15,000,000 has been reduced slightly by Judge KERR's subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What does that slightly mean?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I have no official figures, but I understand that it has been reduced $2,500,000, and is now $12,500,000. The gentleman will have to consult the Committee on Appropriations to get verification of that. I only received the information over the phone.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman can readily understand, then, why we do not have the figures, if he does not know himself.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I do know myself.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. How much is it?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I think my previous statement is adequate.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. In the gentleman's further statement this morning will he have the total amount of war surplus property that we had on hand at the end of the war, when it was turned over to the War Assets Administration? Does the gentleman know how much that was?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I believe the charts which I intend to explain will give that information.

Mr. STEFAN. They will show how much they had and what the receipts have been up to now?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. It is my intention now to explain that.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman will also tell the Committee, will he not, that the War Assets Administration has nothing to do with the surplus in foreign countries over which the foreign liquidation has been operating? That is not included in the gentleman's figures?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. No, not unless it has been declared surplus and brought home. Some surplus property has been brought home over the past 3 years.

Mr. STEFAN. Approximately $8,000,000,000 of surplus was in the countries of Europe, from which we collected approximately $1,000,000,000. There is now left over there, I understand, around $100,000,000 worth. None of that has anything to do with the War Assets Administration, for which we are legislating at this time? Is that correct?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right. That is in the hands of the Foreign Liquidation Commission and has nothing to do with the War Assets Administration.

Mr. STEFAN. But you have in your figures the total amount that we originally had, the cost and the approximate receipts to date?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I intend to give that information to the House at the present time.

The chart which is presented to the House at this time shows that in May 1945 on VE-day there was a total of $25,000,000,000 of surplus property which would have to be disposed of. This figure of $25,000,000,000 includes the amount that was then on hand and such amounts as have been declared up until December 31, 1948. During that period of time the War Assets Administration has disposed of $14,600,000,000 by sales. It has by scrapping, donations, and transfers to other governmental agencies disposed of $9,700,000,000. It has disposed in the form of leases of $800,000,000. It has realized from this the total figure of $4,140,000,000. Its operating costs have been $95,000,000. It has therefore given to the Government a net return of $3,190,000,000. This sales realization compared to the $14,600,000,000 figure, 28.4 percent of the acquisition cost, if compared to the total amount—and I call attention to the fact here that $9,700,000,000 has been disposed of without income to the Government, but with great benefit to other divisions of government such as States, cities, hospitals, schools, and so forth—would amount to about 17.2-percent recovery. That is, if it is compared to the total amount.

The operating cost shows for the total amount of service which the War Assets Administration has rendered, that it amounts to 6.5 percent of the realized return.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. You say that in 1945 we had $25,000,000,000 worth of surplus property, of which we disposed of $14,000,000,000 worth? That is, you gave away $9,000,000,000?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is approximately correct.

Mr. STEFAN. Does that $14,000,000,000 include the $9,000,000,000?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. No.

Mr. STEFAN. Then what did you really collect?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. You add the two together to get the $25,000,000,000, which represents the acquisition cost to the Government of all declared surplus.

Mr. STEFAN. What did you really collect in cash from the $25,000,000,000?

How much did you collect in cash and turn over to the Treasury from the original $25,000,000,000?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Four billion one hundred and forty million dollars.

Mr. STEFAN. That was in cash out of the $25,000,000,000?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. And those figures show that approximately one-quarter of the net return has been used in administrative expenses, is that right?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The relation would be 6.5 percent operating cost to 28.4 percent realization.

Mr. KEATING. That means that out of every dollar collected, approximately 25 cents has been used up for administrative expenses, is that correct?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is true.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman have any chart showing the people who have received this property; how it has been distributed among individuals, municipalities, and so on? The reason I ask that is that I tried for many, many constituents to get some of this property and they simply got the run-around. They would be sent from one place to the other to get it, and when they got there it would be gone. I have not been able to get any of it for any of my constituents. I would be interested to know who has gotten this property and where it has gone.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The property has been widely distributed among individuals, among States, schools, hospitals, and so forth. I believe you will find a partial breakdown in the last report of the War Assets Administration to the Congress.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman have a chart showing the break-down?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I do not have a chart showing the break-down between the different agencies which have received this property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] has again expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

I might point out that the $9,700,000,000 also includes withdrawals by the armed services of many hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property which was originally declared surplus, but which has since been reclaimed by them, in view of pressing needs which they had in the postwar era. At the present time a great deal of the aircraft component parts are being requested to be used in the so-called Berlin air lift in Germany.

Mr. KEATING. Do veterans now have, under existing law, any preference in procuring this surplus material?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Yes. There are certain veterans' preferences in real property, but I might point out that the amount of personal property that is left is quite small. It will amount to approximately $37,500,000 as of March 1. The aircraft component parts will total about $504,000,000. I will check that figure and supply the correct one if it is not right.

The veterans have certain rights for such real property as remains. There is not a great deal of it remaining.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand that if we grant this extension of time we may have assurance that the War Assets Administration will be wound up and that they will not be coming in here asking for a further extension of time?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Here we have a break-down of the work which can be done by this agency in the next 4 months, which is the period of time provided in H. R. 2402. There is still $2,299,000,000 worth of property to be disposed of. According to their present schedule, on the real property they expect to dispose of $468,000,000 worth. There will be left on June 30, $1,269,000,000 worth of real property. Included in that is $800,000,000 long-term leases on aluminum plants and other large facilities. Such leases run from 5 to 25 years.

With reference to aircraft component parts, out of a total of $504,000,000, $210,000,000 is expected to be sold by June 30, and that will leave a balance of $294,000,000.

In all other agencies combined there will be $689,000,000 sold and $1,609,000,000 worth of property left. So they will not be completely finished by June 30.

In the meantime, it is my understanding that the Hoover Commission report, has requested that the Congress set up a central surplus property disposal agency. At that time this residue of real and personal property would be turned over to the central property disposal agency, if the Congress sets up such an agency.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to ask the gentleman about the disposal activity shown on his chart. In my district there is a big airport that was turned back to the city of Stockton which was utilized by the Army Air Force. I understand that at the time they turned it over they reserved the right to take it back in the event of a national emergency. The city has it on a nominal lease. Is that included in "Leases," or "Donations"?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is included in "Transfers without reimbursement."

Mr. JOHNSON. That also includes all those barracks and things for colleges?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has it been a policy in turning over airports that the right is reserved to demand the return of the airport in the event of an emergency?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. There is a saving clause in all of the leases or transfers, I understand, which is placed in the contracts at the request of the military, where such request is deemed necessary in order to repossess this property in case of war.

Mr. JOHNSON. And the sales are outright sales for cash, are they not?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right. Maybe I should qualify that; in some cases time payments have been arranged.

Mr. JOHNSON. I mean that ultimately the purchaser pays the Government cash.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Yes; that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HARDY. I notice on the chart $9,700,000,000 given away. That was entirely in keeping with legislation passed by this Congress; is not that correct?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Yes; it was.

Mr. HARDY. That includes transfers to other Federal agencies as well as in some cases special acts passed by Congress authorizing the transfer to municipalities or States.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right; it refers to all forms of transfer or donation without reimbursement; and it also refers to the scrapping of many things that had no commercial value.

Mr. HARDY. But that was done in accordance with legislation passed by Congress; and, therefore, any comparison of cash returns must be made between the 4.14 recovered and the 14 that was actually sold.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. From a standpoint of direct return on the amount of cash realized, not from the operational costs; because I have been told that War Assets' cost on handling the $9,700,000,000 worth of property scrapped or transferred without reimbursement was just as great proportionately as on the $14,600,000,000 which they sold.

Mr. HARDY. That is just the point I wanted to bring out. Now may I take the matter of administrative costs which was applied against the cash receipts, actually.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I applied it both ways, I may say to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARDY. I know the gentleman does; but the proper way to apply it would be really to take only that portion and relate it to the cash value of the merchandise disposed of.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield, but my time is running out fast; I have used 25 of the 30 minutes allotted to my side.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just a question to clear this up. You sold four billion one hundred and forty millions of gross sales, income; and there is nine hundred and fifty millions expense on that gross sales income; is that right?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Fourteen billion six hundred million dollars is the gross total of cash sales.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Four billion one hundred and forty millions received out of fourteen billion six hundred millions of sales.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. War Assets paid out $950,000,000 to sell $4,140,000,000.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Fourteen billion six hundred millions was the total sales figure at Government acquisition cost; $4,140,000,000 was the net receipt figure.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will yield, that is just the point I was trying to make a while ago.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman did not get it very clear. In other words, as far as expense is concerned, the $950,000,000 covered the administration of $9,700,000,000; is that right?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Oh, no; that is wrong, the $950,000,000 is the complete operating cost for the whole $25,100,000,000, which was either sold, scrapped, or transferred without reimbursement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I wanted to clear up.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, in the minute remaining I wish to point out that on June 30, 1947, the War Assets Administration had 41,900 employees. They have been reduced until last June 1948, when we considered the supplemental independent offices' appropriation bill, they had 17,100. At the present time—February 14, 1949—there are 5,000 employees, and this number will be reduced to 2,100 employees by June 30, 1949.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to hear the gentleman from California mention that it is contemplated that some new method for disposing of surplus property which we have on hand will probably be recommended by the Hoover Commission. I certainly hope that we can at long last find some means to put the disposal of this property into the hands of an organization that will administer it without getting into the confusion, the red-tape, the impossible situations that the War Assets Administration have gotten into and I take this time to show you how wound up the War Assets Administration can get with itself.

You have had your attention called to the disposal of some of this property to municipalities, States, schools and so forth. I happen to have a vocational school up in my district in Appleton, Wis., which tried to get a multilith machine, a duplicating machine in other words. They went to the Bureau of Community Facilities who attempted to be very helpful to them in trying to find one of these multilith machines.

Back in the early part of 1948 they had assigned to them by the War Assets Administration what they thought was a machine that would serve the purpose. This was sent out to the school, but in unpacking it they found it had so deteriorated by reason of improper storage it was impossible to use the machine. The company that originally produced the machine said that they could in no way repair the machine. The company stated that it was so bad it had to be junked. So, after a lot more red-tape there came through an order to junk it.

They thought maybe they could find another one some place. The War Assets Administration apparently did find one and so certified it to the Bureau of Community Facilities; but when the time came for delivery it could not be found.

Then finally they said, "Well, now, we have found something for you," and they shipped a box. Supposedly it was a multilith machine and that is what the order called for, but when the school opened it up they found it was a ditto machine, which is anything but a multilith machine. The school has no use for a ditto machine. Now, somebody can use a ditto machine, but this school cannot. The excuse of the War Assets Administration for that situation was that when it was originally declared surplus it was marked as a multilith machine and when they shipped the box up to the school they did not find out what it contained.

In my office we call this case the comedy of errors. We have spent a good deal of time within the last 6 months trying to straighten it out. The Bureau of Community Facilities has been trying to solve this problem, and no doubt other agencies of War Assets have spent a great deal of time to try to straighten out this little multilith-machine transfer which should not have been too complicated in the first instance.

Here is a letter which I received on February 8 from Mr. Carl Bertram, director of the Appleton Vocational School, and I will read a part of it:

> February 2, I received a telephone call from Mr. Crain, of the Bureau of Community Facilities in Chicago, who stated that he had received a call from their office in Washington, D. C., and that there were two offset duplicating machines, either of which this school might have. These two machines were items 52 and 53 on the declaration made to the Bureau of Community Facilities. One was a Davidson, model 221, offset printing press and the other a model 2066 multilith. Both machines are in good operating condition.
> Mr. Crain said that I should go to Minneapolis at once to determine which machine would best serve our needs. Accordingly, I had a representative of this institution make a special trip to Fort Snelling for the purpose of examining the two items. He visited the Veterans' Administration center where the machines were located on Monday, February 7. I received a call from him, and he stated that neither machine was at the center. The story that was given him was that the duplicator had been disposed of to the Michigan School of Mines at Houghton prior to November 1, 1948, and the multilith, model 2066, which would normally sell for at least $6,000, was not disposed of by December 1, 1948. Since no one made any effort to claim the multilith for anyone wanting it, the instructions were to junk it by December 1. In spite of the fact that this machine had a minimum fair value of $2,500 as stated in their own declaration, they informed our representative that it had been sold for junk.

Well, now, that is what happened in just one small case in this program for surplus disposal. Think of the time and effort that has been consumed not only by men on the pay roll of the War Assets Administration, but in all the other agencies, such as the Bureau of Community Facilities, and by the little communities and schools who are trying to get this material. I certainly hope that the Hoover Commission does come in with a recommendation to provide a reasonable method for the disposal of the property that is remaining today.

I am going to vote for this extension, sure, because we do not have any alternative. But, if there was an alternative, I certainly believe that I would take the alternative. rather than the continuation of the present set-up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER].

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of this committee I intend to vote for this legislation. I do not intend to take much time of the Members of this House. I was interested in noting that the number of employees by June 30 will have been decreased to 2,100. I am hopeful, with 2,100 employees rather than the thousands that they formerly had that, we might be able to make more headway in disposing of the rest of the surplus materials that we have and get the job finished. If it is necessary, perhaps, to give more attention to veterans' preference; if it is necessary to make it easier for veterans to buy this material, I would be for it, because I think that the quicker we get it disposed of the less money it is going to cost us. I note that it is going to cost us $12,500,000 for the next 4 months to dispose of this surplus material. I am quite sure that we are not going to be finished with the job at that time; I am sure that we will not.

But, I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that those who have the responsibility of disposing of this material will not, as is so often done, delay the disposal in order to perpetuate themselves in jobs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Expenditures has had this matter before it several times. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union undoubtedly knows as much and probably more about war assets and legislation connected with the congressional effort to dispose of the war assets than any Member of the House. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], who is the chairman of the committee, advises me that we had surplus property back in 1933, property which had been accumulated by the various agencies of the Government, and we had legislation looking toward its disposal at that time. That was before I had the privilege of being here. He also advises me that the committee reported out legislation to dispose of war assets in 1944.

Practically every Member of the House who has ever had any dealing with the War Assets Administration can tell a story similar to that so accurately told by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES]. I notice a gentleman in front here nodding his head. I recall very, very distinctly that I was never able to get from War Assets anything for any veteran; no, never. I tried to get tools for dentists, dental chairs, trucks for veteran farmers; oh, I do not know what all—yes, one time a cabin cruiser for a doctor who was a veteran. I do not know what he wanted of it, but he wanted it. I had it up with the War Administrator for months and was finally advised by someone in the department to just forget it, because "everyone in the Navy has a cabin cruiser, and they use them until they are not worth repairing, so you tell your friend and constituent to forget it." So I did. That was one of my experiences.

My first experience with this kind of legislation arose on a bill that was introduced by the committee. There were members of the committee at that time who wanted to place the property in the hands of some selling agency and get rid of it. Then there was another group of witnesses who came before the committee, and they wanted to junk it, sink it in the sea, because, they said, the experience with the First World War assets had shown it would cost more to administer the selling of the property than we ever got out of it.

We will have to take this extension, because there is nothing else we can do. But what bothers me is this. In the legislation which became law on June 30, 1948, the very first provision that has to do with surplus-property disposal reads this way:

> Effective February 28, 1949, the office of War Assets Administrator is abolished and the War Assets Administration shall cease to exist as an agency of the Government.

We put a definite time, a limitation on it. The War Assets agency knew very well that it was the desire of Congress that it should wind up its affairs in February 1949. Did they do it? No; they did not. Now they say June 30, 1949. I recall the other day, when this bill was before the committee, I asked one of the members of the committee, I think it was the majority leader of the House, about this terminal date. One of the members of the committee had asked, "Is June 30, 1949, the date of termination, going to finish it then?"

Well, the majority leader, as I recall it, said he thought it might be, but it was my suggestion that perhaps June 30, 1949, was just a way station on a long, long road, a sort of a whistle stop that they were going to put in there on a road without an end.

I do not know how the Congress can end some of these unnecessary expenses. The Eightieth Congress certainly caught heck all up and down the country during the last campaign because it did not do this, that, or the other thing. But in June of last year, we told the War Assets Administration to wind up its business and end this expense. They did not do it. Now we give them another lease of life, because we are forced into it. I have an amendment which proposes to strike out June 30, 1948, and insert January 1, 1950, and add a provision that they should on that date go out of existence.

Then I looked at the old law, and I said, "Well, we told them that last year, so what is the use of telling them again?"

I shall vote for the extension. There is nothing else that we can do. But I wonder if the majority, come June 30, is going to say to this Department down there, in view of this great economic program that the President submitted to us "You fellows are through." I ask you now. I see the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] wants to give us an answer.

I yield to the gentleman from California, a member of the committee.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I have already stated that the total job of disposal will not be done by June 30. I said that on the floor on June 9, 1948, during the debate on the floor, to set the time limit at February 28, that it was a totally unrealistic approach to the solution of the problem, and did not give to the War Assets Administration enough time to do the tremendous job that they have to do and which the gentleman, if he had been present when Mr. Larson testified, would remember to follow.

Mr. Larson testified that the $25,000,000,000 disposal program was a greater program than the four or five greatest corporations in America rolled into one. They had to do it with inexperienced help and had to do it under restrictive legislation which Congress put upon their disposal problem, the restrictions of priority and procedure, which an ordinary merchandiser in the sale of merchandise would not have to put up with. Therefore, it has delayed the program.

We will always have in Government a surplus property disposal problem.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then I gather from what you say the Congress is to blame because we wrote all these restrictions in?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I will say that I helped to write those restrictions in. I do not place the blame on the Congress because I believe that we were putting those restrictions in from the standpoint of protecting the priority rights of veterans, municipalities, States and other political subdivisions.

But owing to the fact that we did put them in, it made it a more onerous duty of the War Assets Administration to perform their functions in the disposal of this property, because they had certain advertising, periods of time, certain exercises of the priorities, and so forth, which prohibited them from making an outright sale such as a commercial establishment would be able to do.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then to boil it all down, when do you think, or when have you been assured, that the War Assets Administration will be through forever?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I believe that during this session of Congress there will be a central agency, probably the Treasury Department, or some other agency, which will take over the duty of surplus property disposal.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You mean that somebody else is going to take on this job?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I mean to say that I believe one of the reorganization plans of the President will consolidate the problem of surplus property disposal, which is a part of every bureau of Government, into one central agency, and there we will be able to scrutinize it more closely.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. When do you think we will get rid of the personal property that is properly war assets? Let us forget the real estate for a moment.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I think most of the personal property will be disposed of within the following year. I am speaking now of war surplus property.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Why not change this date, then, to January 1 and make it a year? Have you any idea we are ever going to wind up the functions of the War Assets Administration, whether it is administered under the War Assets or some other agency?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has again expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The gentleman has seen the chart showing the reduction from around $25,000,000,000 down to $2,000,000,000 in the 3 years in which the War Assets Administration has been functioning?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, at the same rate they ought to be through, then, within a year?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is my prediction.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has made reference to two kinds of property; first, to personal property, and then to real property. On the whole, I agree with what the gentleman from Michigan has said. However, I do want to make this observation: The condition of the country today, as far as world affairs is concerned, is such that it seems to me we would be doing the country disservice if we required the War Assets Administration to immediately dispose of all of this property that is in its custody. For instance, I have in mind an extrusion plant. Some probably do not know what that is, but it is a big aluminum plant. It cost the Government $13,000,000. It has been declared surplus. They are going to use these new types of airplane that are just now coming to the market. If we dispose of this plant it will be necessary for someone to buy it, to use it, or to convert it into something else. It will be converted. Now if worst comes to the worst, and we should have another war, we would have eighteen or twenty million dollars more and a year or two of extra time required to furnish the very thing we now have. I advocate and urge careful consideration and slow final disposition of real estate and plants and equipment that will be essential and that will be required if we should get into war within the next 6 months or year.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman. That is all very well. My purpose was to call attention to the fact that it is extremely difficult for Congress to do anything about expense, which some of us and some of our constituents seem to think is unnecessary. My folks say, "Why don't you cut out some of these things?" We just heard within the last week about this duplication and unnecessary expense in the departments. Here we are with another one. I am doubtful whether the gentleman's estimate of a year is going to see the end of this.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan and also the gentleman from California this question: If an agency of Government declares any of its property surplus, does that property automatically go to the War Assets Administration?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. May I answer that question?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. At the present time there has been no declaration since 1948 to the War Assets Administration. They were not allowed to receive surplus disposals from any other agency. As a result, in my opinion, we have lost millions of dollars because some of the agencies were not given an opportunity to function on as broad a basis as the War Assets Administration, and they were scrapping material which could have been sold.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Agencies of Government are continually declaring items surplus, are they not?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. To what agency do those goods go for disposal?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Some of the agencies dispose of them themselves. If I am in error, the gentleman from California will correct me.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The Treasury Department can dispose, under certain circumstances, of the material, but military agencies in many instances are restricted. They scrap material which could be sold, but they have to scrap it because of certain provisions in the law.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. And in some instances they scrap it because the administrative cost of trying to dispose of it is greater than the stuff is worth. The Congress attempts to end some of the agencies but they refuse to quit—that is the fault of the Administration—the executive branch—not the fault of the Congress—but we get the blame.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY].

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the hearings on this question. It is astonishing that so much of our war material is being sold as junk; it is a very serious thing. It happened that my colleague from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG], and I served together in Italy during the last war. Orders came over there for a tremendous amount of aluminum to be sold as scrap. It turned out, however, to be a source of great income for certain persons in Italy. This material was sold in bulk and not by weight. They made a great deal of money out of what we should have had an opportunity to sell ourselves.

Another thing that interests me is the fact that no matter what you try to do, war, from beginning to end, is waste, a waste of human life, a waste of the matériel of a country, and a waste of the natural resources of a country. To me, this bill is merely an effort on the part of our Government to try to salvage as much as possible and to get it back from war purposes into peace purposes.

Another thing in regard to this bill that I also find of great interest is the fact that if we do have a reorganization plan, and I hope we shall have, the Treasury or some other branch of Government will take over the disposition of this material, then we shall have at the disposal of whatever department takes over this work a trained personnel, part of which could be absorbed by the said department and thereby I believe expedite a work that is very necessary after any great conflict.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio yields back 3 minutes.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph under the heading "Surplus Property Disposal" in the Supplemental Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1949, is amended by striking out "February 28, 1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1949."

SEC. 2. The item "Salaries and expenses" under the heading "Salaries and Expenses, War Assets Administration, Special Fund" in the Supplemental Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1949, is amended by striking out "February 28, 1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1949."

The CHAIRMAN. There being no amendments, the Committee automatically rises under the rule.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2402) to extend the Office of the War Assets Administrator and the War Assets Administration from February 28, 1949, until June 30, 1949, pursuant to House Resolution 96, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMBERS OF THE THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL COMMISSION

THE FREEDOM TRAIN

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 95 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 84) to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments which may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of the time on the rule to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the bill which will be before the committee on adoption of this rule is one that I introduced. Its purpose is to assure continuance of the Freedom Train, as provided in the bill, up to July 4, 1951, which will be the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

We know the great results that have flown from the operation of the Freedom Train and its journey throughout the country. Roughly speaking, it visited between 550 and 600 cities and communities. The throngs of people who have gone to see the historical contents of that train have been tremendous.

Already there are close to 600 requests from communities in the United States where the train did not pass through for the visitation of the train if this bill should pass and become law. It is estimated that for the next 2 years it will cost about $2,500,000; $1,500,000 for the first year, and $1,000,000 for the second year. It seems to me that in these days when liberty is being challenged it would be an excellent investment for our Government to assure the continuance of this program through governmental appropriation, and bringing to the people and to the children, to the young men and the young ladies of the different parts of the country, these historic documents to intensify in their minds the meaning of liberty.

Down through the ages comes the cry of great statesmen and of countless millions of people that "Where law ceases, tyranny starts." The meaning of that is that where a government of law ceases to exist, tyranny begins, and where there does not exist a government of law, there must exist a government of men. Liberty, in the case of a benevolent dictator, exists in part only through tolerance and sufferance, or in the case of a vicious dictator, by the modern totalitarian or police state, where liberty is completely suppressed and destroyed. We do not want to live under such conditions.

I want to express my appreciation to our friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for introducing the resolution with reference to Cardinal Mindszenty and Archbishop Stepinac, and to congratulate every Member of the House of Representatives for the unanimous passage of this resolution last week. If the Evangelical ministers who have since been arrested had been arrested then, they would have been included, and should be, in the resolution. I think I speak the sentiments of all my colleagues when I say that while they are not specifically included, we intend that they should be. I would welcome a resolution being introduced covering them, and I would do everything I could to bring it out so that this branch of the Congress would place itself on record emphatically in relation to the arrest and future imprisonment, as the newspapers say, of the 15 ministers of the Evangelical faith in Bulgaria, and do it as strongly as we did in the case of the two churchmen of the creed of which I am a communicant that the House acted upon so decisively last week.

The world, in my opinion, is faced with its most serious challenge in the known history of man. Our way of life is being challenged. We Americans, as Members of the Congress, might disagree on this or that bill; we might have our views with reference to a particular piece of legislation or a portion of a particular piece of legislation, but we all agree in the fundamentals that our Government stands for. We all agree in those fundamentals that make up our way of life, and we all recognize that the fundamentals we believe in come from God Himself, and that when any force undertakes to challenge any organized religion, the members of which believe in God, whether Catholic, Protestant, or Jew, it should be resisted by all means at our command.

I was very proud the other day of the strong statement made by Secretary of State Acheson in condemnation of the tactics of the Hungarian Communist Government in the trial and prosecution of Cardinal Mindszenty. That applied to everyone. While directly applicable to the cardinal, the statement made by Secretary Acheson applied to all others past, present, and in the future, who may be the subject of persecution simply because they believe in God.

I was also very proud of the strong statement made by President Truman condemning the Hungarian Communist Government.

The only offense any of these spiritual men, Catholic, Protestant, or Jew, who have suffered, might be charged with is that they believe in the word of God and are opposed to communism or opposed in any way to the modern totalitarian state. The modern totalitarian state is one that would destroy the dignity of the individual. It is where the individual becomes a cog in the wheel of the institution known as the state, and where the state is supreme and ruthless in compelling obedience on the part of the individual.

We have it behind the iron curtain. One day it is a Catholic priest or a bishop or a cardinal who is persecuted, the next day it is ministers of the Lutheran faith. As a matter of fact, one of the great bishops of the Lutheran faith has also been subjected to persecution in Bulgaria. Now it is the Evangelical faith.

The whole purpose is to try to break down the very backbone of our civilization, without which our civilization could not exist, people who believe in one God and who believe in living up to His law.

We have heard a lot of talk recently about Marshal Tito in Yugoslavia having a break with the Soviet Union. Of course we must view that with considerable suspicion. The sincerity of that must be very carefully inquired into in view of the suspicion, which is justifiable. If Marshal Tito is sincere and there is a break between him and his government and Stalin and the government of the Soviet Union, Marshal Tito could give some very strong evidence to the people of the world of that sincerity by releasing Archbishop Stepinac from jail and letting him go back to his people. He could also evidence it by refusing to allow the Communist guerrillas of Greece to receive aid and assistance from any sources within Yugoslavia.

Those are two actions on the part of Tito that would be very strongly indicative of sincerity on his part when he undertakes to say to the world that there is a break between him and his government and Stalin and the government of the Soviet Union.

A year and a half ago I spoke on the floor of this body—and I do not think I am an alarmist; I try to view things rationally—and I said then and repeat now that the Soviet Union is challenging our way of life; that the ideology known as communism is simply used by the Soviet Union as a nation to deceive people and through it to take over country after country and bring them within the orbit of the Soviet Union; and that the Soviet Union is the most reactionary form of government that could exist. Anything is reactionary that suppresses or destroys the proper exercise of the dignity of the individual.

The Soviet Union is imperialistically inclined. I said that a year and a half ago. Its imperialism takes the form of an ideology to dominate the world. Ultimately every one of their actions is aimed at the United States of America. I said then, and I say now, that world conditions could easily be improved if the representatives of the Soviet Union entered into the council of the nations of the world with a mind of understanding. But as long as they refuse to approach the solution of international questions with an understanding mind, then this constant pressure on their part is going to continue. Where it will lead, one does not have to look very far into the future to determine. There is a point beyond which we cannot permit the pressure to go.

May I say to the Soviet Union that they had better not misunderstand or underestimate the people who are free in the world today. They had better not underestimate the people of America, because where liberty and law cease tyranny begins. That was translated in terms of our American history by Patrick Henry when he said, "Give me liberty or give me death."

The American people can only stand so much, and if the Soviet Union thinks that they can proceed upon the theory that we are afraid of them, they are likely to wake up some morning realizing that they have misunderstood the mind and temper of the people of America, and the mind and temper of the people of free nations of the world which still exist.

We find in the arrest of the cardinal and the arrest of the archbishop and the arrest of the 15 ministers that they are charged with a conspiracy to overthrow their own government, and that they are accused of being agents of the United States.

Every one of these cases starts out with the charge that they are acting for the United States or for the United States and Great Britain. Then, through cruelty and through actions that human beings physically cannot resist, they obtain confessions. Then they go through their trial, which is a sham affair, for propaganda purposes, not only behind the iron curtain but throughout the rest of the world.

While I am talking about propaganda, I am wondering when the distinguished judge in New York, Judge Medina, is going to stop the Communists and their attorneys in New York from using his court for propaganda purposes throughout the world, and behind the iron curtain as well, and instead of putting our whole constitutional system of government on trial, make those attorneys get down to the legal question of whether or not the grand jury was properly selected in accordance with the law of the United States—and not in accordance with the law of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, I speak thusly because all religions are attacked. Our way of life is attacked. The people of America have been tolerant, but we cannot afford to see country after country, with their enemies from within backed and supported by the Soviet Union, against their will being taken out of the orbit of western civilization, which means so much to us, so much to them, and so much to the entire world. There is a time when we must act, and act affirmatively. Russia must, in order to bring about peace, make its contribution and must approach the solution of these problems with understanding not only in Europe but in China as well. We cannot let China become subject to Communist government.

By the way, in my opinion a coalition government of China is nothing but a Communist government, and I hope that the Nationalist Government will not capitulate in China. I hope China will not become subject to domination and become another satellite nation of the Soviet Union.

This is a great question, the world question, the question of the ages. Its solution in the main rests with the United States of America. We of this generation appreciate that for which our forefathers fought. The liberty for which they fought is being threatened today.

Mr. Speaker, the remarks that I have made now will be most appropriate in relation to the joint resolution which will presently be before the House, providing for the extension of the operation of the Freedom Train for the next 2 years.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], has made a very important statement. He has emphasized the very great importance of driving out of our lives those prejudices that make difficult people of the Christian faith and of high purposes joining together and making common cause in resisting the threat of communism that hangs over the world.

Mr. Speaker, there are very few of the Catholic faith who live in my district and therefore no political complexion can attach to the statement that I am about to make. The Christian world and all people who love liberty owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Catholic Church. It is the church that has been taking the brunt of the attack that has come from the east. The head of that church, the Pope of Rome, has for a long while and is now making a tremendous contribution to the endeavor to keep this sick and troubled world in balance, and as one who loves the Government under which we live and who loves liberty, I salute him.

Mr. Speaker, there has developed in certain circles, and I might be specific to the extent of saying Government circles, the habit of defending, and in many instances glorifying, people in the Government service who have been charged with disloyalty. I give you the examples of William Remington and Alger Hiss. The records made by committees of Congress investigating those cases establish beyond the possibility of doubt the fact that both were Communists and both, while holding high positions in departments of the Government, performed as agents of Russia.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill which this rule makes in order is to cultivate the love of country and the freedoms that we enjoy. It runs completely counter, however, to what has been the fashion in certain circles as regards the treatment of the Reds who are in and out of Government, all carrying on in the common purpose of undermining and ultimately destroying our whole system of free enterprise, and delivering our country and our people into the keeping of Soviet Russia.

I hope there will not be a single vote against the resolution; and I trust that as a result of the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, there may be forthcoming many Members hitherto completely silent on the question as to whether or not liberty is in danger who will defend the ideals which the gentleman has discussed and join in the determination that liberty shall not perish from the face of this earth.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as me may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to use the time that has been allotted to me to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] one or two questions.

Am I right in understanding the gentleman to state that approximately 500 cities were visited by the Freedom Train during the time it was in operation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe I said 500, but the correct number is 325 cities. I understand that about 3,500,000 people visited the train.

Mr. FORD. And about 650 communities have requested that the train visit them?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am informed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY], chairman of the committee, that the number is 581.

Mr. FORD. Is the gentleman at all familiar with, and if so, will he tell us, how the Freedom Train was financed in the past?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The Freedom Train was financed by the American Heritage Foundation, a nonprofit foundation composed of businessmen, industrialists, labor unions, and so forth; the Government had nothing to do with financing the train or with its operation. It has operated for 16 months under the sponsorship of this foundation.

Mr. FORD. That was my understanding. My point is this, and it is rather simple: For the last 16 months the Freedom Train has been traveling all over the country. It so happened that I was connected with the committee in my community that went out and raised $7,500 to bring the train to our city. The money was raised for a most worthwhile purpose. I wholeheartedly subscribe to the program. But the Government did not come to our assistance or the assistance of the other 325 communities which over the past 16 months have shouldered the burden of financing the Freedom Train. Today some 650 additional communities want visits by the Freedom Train. My point is that if these communities want the train they should be willing to raise the necessary money among themselves to bring the train to their citizens.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure the gentleman realizes the difficulty involved as well as he does the importance of having the train visit those parts of the country and those communities it did not visit during the past 16 or 17 months. I think the answer is that the evidence showed it would be very difficult to bring that about because most of the communities that would be visited are the smaller communities of the country, whereas the Freedom Train during the last 16 months or so was visiting the larger communities, among them the great metropolitan centers. I assure the gentleman I respect his viewpoint.

I think the train should visit those parts of the United States that have not been visited before and that it should only revisit those as to which there is some particularly compelling reason why that should be done. I believe further that this train should go into every section of the country that was not visited before. In practical operation, the evidence impressed me it would be very difficult to raise the funds necessary to pay the expense of the train, particularly from communities it will visit, because they are not the large metropolitan centers or substantial-sized cities that the train has visited during the past 16 or 17 months.

Mr. FORD. I am not minimizing the difficulty of raising the money because I am quite familiar with voluntary fund campaigns of this sort. It was a hard job for those who raised the money in the 325 communities and it would be a difficult job for the 650 communities. However, under no circumstances do I wish to have the gentleman or myself interpreted as stating that the communities that now want the train are not patriotic enough to go out and raise the money themselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think that is involved. My friend from Tennessee has another observation which I think is very pertinent.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The American Heritage Foundation is not willing to sponsor the train any longer. The train has been put in what we might call cold storage in the railroad yards at Wilmington. We are unable to find another private sponsor and if the Government does not sponsor the train its journey will not be resumed.

Mr. FORD. Have you thought that perhaps the Government might underwrite the portion that the American Heritage Foundation underwrote before and still get community participation by the 650 communities that now want the train to come to them so that the cost can be equalized?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. If the Government sponsors this train it should not charge any city anything for the exhibition of that train in the city. It should be free to the people of every community.

Mr. FORD. That is not the way it was in the last 16 months. The people in the 325 communities paid a share of the cost so that the train could visit them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I see the logic of the gentleman's argument. On the other hand, I think there is logic in passing this bill. The mere fact that during the last 16 months 325 or more cities and communities contributed toward the expense of this train is valid indication of the interest of the people in the train and I do not think they would object where there is no sponsor to be obtained and where the sponsor of the last 16 months does not desire to continue for the Government continuing it where there is such a demand and where so many fine results would flow to the communities which the train will visit, being the beneficiaries of the visitation of the train at Government expense.

I appreciate the thought expressed by the gentleman. It is a very fine one and under no condition would I take any position except that the gentleman is very discerning in addressing that thought to the attention of the Members; but the fact is we could not get the Government to do this 16 or 17 months ago. The history of this matter is that some individuals, prominent Americans, conceived the idea and approached the Attorney General. The American Heritage Foundation sponsored it. As a result of the experience of the past 16 months we know the great benefits that flowed therefrom. The question is whether or not it is a desirable project to extend for the next 2 years so that it may go into other communities in the United States not previously visited. I think it is and under those circumstances none of the cities and communities visited in the past 16 months would feel very much concerned because they made certain contributions whereas during the next 2 years certain other cities and communities will not make any contribution. I make that statement in light of all the facts.

Mr. FORD. Just one word. I think it is highly desirable that the train go on in the future, but I think it is unfortunate that the proposed procedure is to be followed, because I know that in the communities where the train has been within the last 16 months, the mere fact that the citizens of those communities had to go out and individually raise funds to bring that train to their cities made them appreciate what a wonderful opportunity they had. Their contributions made them realize there was a real importance to those documents that were being brought to their communities for the education of their children, their fellow citizens and themselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot challenge what the gentleman says except to draw the line of differentiation. If this bill does not pass, the Freedom Train will not continue. This is the only way by which it will. I agree that if private sponsors could have continued it, and were willing and felt that they could, that it might be more desirable, and this question would not arise. But, in the exercise of their judgments—and I cannot question their judgment—they feel that they cannot continue it. Now we are faced with the proposition whether to discontinue it, and that is what will happen unless it is provided for in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL].

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, of course, will pass, and we shall authorize the continuance of the Freedom Train with the hope that it will be beneficial to the Nation. It is quite evident that it will continue, even though it was started for 2 years, because it is appreciated by the people, and it coincides with the thought of the American people, and particularly the Congress, that once something is started, we always continue it.

I was interested in the very fine moral philosophy threading through the speech of the Majority Leader. I think his words were forceful and well directed toward the danger of the destruction of freedom, not only in this country but in the entire world. We, in America, who have been taught to love freedom and know what flows from it, want to always extend a bulwark if we can, against the danger of communism encompassing our Nation, and the destruction of the freedom and happiness of our people. If we can spend two or three million dollars to encourage freedom in this country, the Congress cannot do a better job than to extend the Freedom Train.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to the fact that notwithstanding we have gone through a great war, notwithstanding the good intent of the principles of the "four freedoms", notwithstanding that the war cost $400,000,000,000 and the loss of a great many lives, the world has probably less freedom today than before we fought the recent war for more freedom.

Just within the past few months it appears that 400,000,000 people will come behind the iron curtain in a country with which we have always had the finest relations, China. When that goes, countless millions more will go. So it behooves the Members of this Congress, the President of the United States, and liberty-loving people of this country to be very serious in our effort to help to hold and secure the foundations of freedom in this country.

I think a spiritual resurgence throughout the length and breadth of this country, starting in the home, which is the most important element of government in our country, and going on up through the churches, is one of the finest things that could happen.

I was interested in the reference to the persecution of the religious leaders in Europe. We all condemn such atrocities.

The point I want to emphasize, and I think it is important, is that if we are finally to fight off Russian communism and the communization of the world it will be because we as Members of Congress, in cooperation with the President, conduct the fiscal affairs of this country in such a manner that we shall remain strong financially.

About 160 years ago there was written into the Constitution the power of the Congress of the United States to finance this country through the levying of taxes. With a debt of $252,000,000,000 hanging over the people today there should weigh more heavily on the minds of every Member of Congress that great responsibility, that mandate, if you please, that was written into the Constitution at Philadelphia; that is, to keep this country in a sound financial condition. To do this we shall have to stop waste, extravagance, cut the cost of Government, and constantly reduce the Federal debt.

I do not know what good the Freedom Train will do, but I do know that the Congress of the United States in passing upon legislation day after day has the opportunity to make the greatest contribution we can make to defeat communism's finally encompassing this country. It lies in the Halls of Congress and with the Chief Executive to render the greatest service to promulgate and perpetuate freedom in this country. If we do that we must fight against the constant approach of socialism, which is only the vestibule, which is only the first long step toward totalitarianism and communism in this country. That is something the Members of this Congress might well turn their attention to. It is more important than the Freedom Train.

Freedom in this country is invaluable to us and invaluable to our prosperity. I am for anything that can sell freedom to the people. I am in hopes that this Congress will so conduct itself in this session and in the next session that we may preserve with all of the strength and virility of the past, the financial solvency of this Government, because in the last analysis that is what we will have to rely upon in order to maintain and perpetuate our freedom, and fight off communism.

May I close by saying, let us give a little more genuine attention to the uprooting of the Communists and the containment of the influence of the Communists in this our own country.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that the resolution which we are now considering will be passed unanimously. In speaking in behalf of the resolution I want to follow a little further along the path which my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], followed in his inquiries to the distinguished Majority Leader. It so happened that during the travels of the Freedom Train, one of the so-called smaller communities of the Nation, which was in my district, desired to have the train go through that section. I had a particularly strong feeling along that line, not only because the particular city was within my district, but because from that city came the second Congressional Medal of Honor man in this war. I speak of Lieutenant Bianchi. We, out in Minnesota, are as deeply patriotic as people in Massachusetts, Tennessee, Texas, or any other part of the country. Although I think the name "Freedom Train" was an attractive slogan, I feel that it might just as well have been called "The American Train," because that train had as its purpose to call the attention of the people of our great country to the important documents and important events which mean so much to the freedom of the people of America. But whatever the title or name may be, let that train be assigned fairly in going from State to State in calling the attention of all the people of our country to that which the other speakers have so eloquently spoken of, namely the American principles that mean so much to us today and which may be so easily lost tomorrow, if we are not reminded that: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

So, in the operation and administration of the so-called Freedom Train, I hope, as I am sure the attempt has been in the past, and that efforts will be made to see that not only does the Freedom Train go to the large metropolitan centers, but that it will go out to some of the smaller communities where people will drive 50, 100 and 150 miles to see the train because they, too, deeply love the principles of freedom.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the only thing before the House at the moment is the rule which would make it possible to call up and consider House Joint Resolution 84, a bill to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States. If this rule prevails, and I am sure it will prevail, then the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service will present the merits of the resolution. There will be adequate debate and I am sure that the legislative committee is prepared to answer all questions.

I favor not only the passage of the rule, but also the resolution. All those who have thus far spoken seem to be of like mind, and most of the debate has been on matter extraneous to House Joint Resolution 84. There have been no discordant tones in the debate, and I concur in the sentiments expressed by each speaker beginning with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. Surely the tour of the Freedom Train throughout the last few months has quickened patriotism, impressed our people as to just what the American way of life stands for, and on the whole has been a source of inspiration to all of our people.

The district which I have the honor to represent in Congress is composed of four counties in the southeast corner of Michigan, and the Freedom Train visited the three largest cities in the district. It was my privilege to attend meetings in two of those cities incident to the visit of the train. There was no political partisanship. We were all Americans believing in, and ready to fight for, a common cause. The preservation of our Constitution and the guaranty of freedom under our system of government were spectacularized to the end that the Freedom Train left in its wake a reconsecration on the part of the people to those principles for which our forbears had sacrificed, fought, and even died.

Mr. Speaker, I was permitted to participate in two of these celebrations in my district, and I would repeat here Freedom's Pledge, which was presumably used at every city where the Freedom Train stopped, were it not for the fact that the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE] has a copy of the pledge and will include it in the part of his remarks which are to follow.

The committee report accompanying this resolution is most informative and is a concise statement of what the resolution does. It reads as follows:

Under the terms of this resolution the Freedom Train will be continued for a period of approximately 2 years under the sponsorship of the Federal Government. For the past 16 months ending January 22, 1949, the Freedom Train has traveled throughout the United States under the sponsorship of the American Heritage Foundation. The American Heritage Foundation raised privately, through contributions from individuals and business associations, as well as quotas assessed against cities where the Freedom Train was exhibited, funds to cover the operation of the train.

During the 16 months the train operated more than 3,500,000 people visited the train and approximately 45,000,000 persons participated in a week of rededication which preceded the visit of the train to the various cities.

The program of the Freedom Train consisted of three parts. First, there was a continuous campaign of public education utilizing all means of mass communication to persuade the people of the country that "freedom is everybody's job." Second, there was the week of rededication immediately preceding the arrival of the train in each city. And finally, there was the visit of the Freedom Train itself. During the 16 months the train operated it visited 350 cities. It is understood that more than 500 additional communities have requested that they be visited by the Freedom Train.

There is no longer the prospect of a private sponsor or the private financing of the Freedom Train. Under the terms of the resolution the Archivist of the United States would be authorized to operate the Freedom Train. A commission would be established consisting of the following: The President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, the Attorney General of the United States, the Librarian of Congress, the Archivist of the United States, the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Post Office and Civil Service, and five members to be appointed by the President.

The Archivist, in carrying out the provisions of the resolution, would be required to formulate specific plans covering the program authorized by the resolution, which would include, among other things, plans for the acquisition, operation, exhibition, and disposition of the train.

In the view of the committee, consideration should be given, in the scheduling of the Freedom Train during the period in which it is to be operated under the sponsorship of the Federal Government, to arranging its itinerary so that it will visit, insofar as possible, cities where people have not had an opportunity to see the Freedom Train. The schedule should also reflect a wide distribution throughout the country, visiting the respective congressional districts.

(Mr. MICHENER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include some excerpts from the committee report.)

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE].

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, the reference just now made by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] to the pledge of the Freedom Train probably makes it appropriate that I call to the attention of you, my distinguished colleagues in the House, that on the reverse side of my card as Representative in Congress from the Eighteenth Congressional District is printed the pledge of the Freedom Train, as follows:

I am an American, a free American,
Free to speak—without fear—
Free to worship God in my own way,
Free to stand for what I think right,
Free to oppose what I believe wrong,
Free to choose those who govern my country;
This heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold
For myself and all Americans.

And in many letters which leave my congressional office to go back to my congressional district this printed pledge has been and is daily sent, for it fairly accurately and truly portrays the freedoms which I feel we, as Congressmen must increasingly and more emphatically be willing to fight, and, if need be, die for.

Not yet in this worthy debate has anyone mentioned one of the main reasons, in my judgment, why we should this date vote aye on this bill. It is simply this: That the fact is that the last 16 months' trip of the Freedom Train over the railroad tracks of our Nation has given concrete evidence that the children and youth of our Nation are literally hungry and eager for more knowledge of their heritage and for the background of the beginning and the course of our Nation. I am informed that the great majority of those who visited the Freedom Train in the different cities are children or those of teen-age or of the ages of youth. In other words, gentlemen, the most important segment of our Nation, when it comes to talking in terms of the future strength of our Nation as relates to the freedom of our Nation, is the segment which has most largely attended upon the historical exhibits in the train. One reason for this, of course, is that the schools of the Nation have encouraged the school children to visit the Freedom Train. Likewise, it is because the parenthood of the Nation have seen to it that their children have visited these inspiring and informative exhibits. This is as it should be.

Yet in many places, thousands upon thousands of children and young people and adults could not get access to see these original documents and parchments. This is as it should not be. Every person in America who wishes to see these original documents of our forthright and inspiring history should have an opportunity so to do.

But these people cannot come to Washington—it is too costly and they live too many miles away. These documents have not been injured on the 16-months' journey and the fact that they are looking at the originals instead of copies or replicas is a great inspiration. Let us repeat and extend the opportunity to more millions of the children and youth of America as well as the adults to personally see these original documents.

May I remark that during the war, when I was here as a Member of the Seventy-ninth Congress from the great Eighteenth Congressional District of California, I frequently went across the street to the Congressional Library and there stood in the presence of some of these original documents. It was a great inspiration to stand there quietly for a few minutes and to recollect my reading of the lives and purposes of these great men who participated in the creation of these parchments and in the history leading up to them and following their signatures.

As knowledge is said to always give power, so it must be true that personal observation of these original documents will give to the children and youth of the Nation, as well as the adults, a sense of personally belonging to the Nation. It will give them a sort of feel of what their ancestors did and were trying to do. It will logically result in a thrill of patriotism and resulting devotion to the high purposes for which our Nation was created under God. Our predecessors and forefathers are to be congratulated upon having preserved these documents. But one of the reasons they deserve our congratulations is that they preserved them for posterity; and that part of that posterity is here now in the present generation of the children and youth and adulthood of America.

As only an infinitesimal portion of that population can come to Washington to see these historical documents, we must therefore again send these originals out to the people. This is as it should be. Let us do it cordially and promptly and fully. I congratulate our distinguished majority leader on authoring this bill for this appropriation for the Freedom Train. It is just like JOHN MCCORMACK, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, to be thinking of anything and everything which will strengthen the American way of life and which will perpetuate our freedoms and which will help destroy either communism or any other form of totalitarianism which would destroy the freedoms for which our forefathers, who helped write these documents, fought and died.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCSWEENEY].

Mr. MCSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe that when every Member of Congress takes upon himself or herself the responsibility of representing the respective districts or States of our country, among those responsibilities is the expenditure of the tax money which is raised by the citizens of our country. One man may feel that his idea of expenditure is better than mine. My idea may differ from that of many Members in the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] will feel one way about an appropriation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will feel another way about an appropriation. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who is not only very well informed on, but very much interested in, rural electrification, will feel another way about an appropriation. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CARL VINSON, the distinguished leader who is doing so much to provide protection for our country, may feel another way about an appropriation. But I may say I have never voted any of my taxpayers' money with a clearer conscience than I will vote for the extension of the use of the Freedom Train to carry these great documents which represent the fundamental things of our country out to the different sections of America.

I feel this train is, in reality, almost a mechanized Paul Revere, carrying into every Middlesex village and farm the things we want the people of our community to see.

I have been a history teacher much of my life, and I always hoped that every graduating class from the high schools of America could come to Washington and there see the great fountainhead of our democracy and the fountainheads of our freedom.

This bill which has been patriotically introduced by our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] makes it possible for us to carry into all sections of our country these actual fountainheads of the things that we in America so love. Were we sending out replicas or copies, I would be opposed to it. I was much impressed by the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] a few days ago said he wanted to retain, even if only the shell, the old White House, because of our traditional association with it. I feel when I go to Mount Vernon and lean against one of the lintels on the doors that probably George Washington himself might have leaned there. When I walk upon those floors I realize they are the actual floors upon which the father of our country may have strode in past generations.

So today we are not sending out copies but we are sending out the originals of these great documents, that fire the imagination not only of our own people but of the people of the world.

When the New England poet Emerson said:

By the rude arch that spanned the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
There once the embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.

I am frank to say that that shot could not have reverberated very long unless we had given meaning to that shot. So the great American, Thomas Jefferson, did not fire a shot, but he fired the imagination of the people by giving them the cause for firing that shot, in the Declaration of Independence which gave the cause for our revolution, and gave those patriotic men the reason for going out and dying for that cause of freedom.

We are not carrying a replica or copy of that great instrument around through the country. We are carrying the very instrument itself, so every child who goes up to that document and looks at it can realize that he is actually feasting his eyes on the very parchment itself, where the hand of Benjamin Franklin and the hand of the other distinguished signers of the Declaration of Independence may have rested—not a parchment like it, but the actual parchment itself. The men who signed their names there knew not what might grow out of their signing these new expressions of human rights, yet they were not deterred and did not falter. I like to know that the original Declaration of Independence is being carried into every Middlesex and village of our great domain, to every municipality, proclaiming to the world that we Americans still stand by it. I like to think that that great document will be carried now to every Middlesex and village by this Freedom Train which this proposed legislation of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] will accomplish; and I hope that every Member of this House will vote this money for the continuation of this great patriotic Freedom Train as gladly as I do.

May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that one thing that worried me was the fact that these great documents going out as they do to the various parts of our country and passing rather quickly from one atmospheric condition to another, might in some way be jeopardized; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY] in his very splendid presentation before the committee, assured us that examination and investigation showed that these priceless documents after this first trip of the Freedom Train are as in good condition as they were before they started; so we have nothing to fear by their being subjected to different atmospheric conditions.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCSWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I quite agree with the gentleman in his statement that it is a most excellent thing for us to send out to the children and the people of this country some of these priceless old documents that have meant so much to this country of ours, a great deal more than a lot of things we are sending out to the people of the country today, because the people who lived in the days when the Declaration of Independence was written and signed, and the other great documents we are supposed to be living under, were men who asked Divine guidance and tried to do the things that would be for the best interest of their country; and they did a wonderful job. While I do not like to spend any $2,500,000 that is not necessary, yet when it is realized what patriotism and beliefs these documents can instill in the children of future generations it is probably the wisest way in which the money could be spent.

Mr. MCSWEENEY. I remember that back in the days of my earliest service in this House a question we frequently heard raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was: "Where is the money coming from?" which is probably not a bad question.

May I answer my colleague from Pennsylvania who spoke about having each community participate in the cost, by saying that in my State, in the thriving, patriotic city of Canton, the largest city in my district, I saw a reverential group standing there waiting for hours for their turn to enter this Freedom Train. There were the rich and the poor man, people from all walks of life, the man of foreign extraction and his family, waiting patiently to see the instruments which made their freedom possible. I feel that those people of Canton who had to contribute something to bring the train to their city would be very happy to have their Government do something to make it possible for smaller communities less fortunately situated to enjoy the benefits of the train and its inspiration through governmental participation. I am inclined to think that is what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] had in mind when he spoke of the difficulty of some of the smaller communities in raising the money necessary to bring the train to their district.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What testimony was there before the committee as to the continuation of this train after 1951?

Mr. McSWEENEY. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY] spoke about that. I believe there is no desire to extend the time of operation beyond that necessary to meet certain requirements. I believe some 580 cities have made a request for the train.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Children will continue to be born, to grow up and become older and older; and I think this demand will run on indefinitely down through the years. I want to raise this question: Is it to be the policy of this Government to run this train ad infinitum; or is this to be cut off in 1951? And was this $3,000,000 item included in the President's budget? If not, why is this proposition here? Somebody has got to pay for it; in this case the taxpayers pay for it. What information can the gentleman give us on that?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I am not a member of the committee that had the bill under consideration. I would like for some member of the committee to answer the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of California. The Archivist of the United States came before us asking that this train be continued, but he pointed out that it would be impractical to continue it beyond the approximate period set up in this bill because of the value of the documents and the danger that would come to them by the continuous operation of this train.

Under the circumstances, I do not think there will be any further effort made for that reason. There is the matter of the security of the documents and also the fact that about 25 percent of these documents are not the property of the United States Government. They are privately owned but lent for this occasion. I think that in itself would preclude extension of this matter.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman states that all of the documents abroad are original documents?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I understand they are all original documents, especially those for which we have reverence, like the Emancipation Proclamation, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Ordinance of 1787, and so forth.

Mr. GROSS. I think the gentleman will find they are not all original documents.

Mr. McSWEENEY. The ones I have mentioned are original documents.

Mr. GROSS. I understood the gentleman to say they were all original documents.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I think practically all of them are original documents.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will somebody on that side tell us whether that statement is true?

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is that correct; are they all original?

Mr. MILLER of California. I think practically all of them are original documents.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then, as I understand it, on this train which will travel all over the country, you are taking the original Declaration of Independence, the original draft of the Constitution, and other documents of that nature?

Mr. MILLER of California. That is correct.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I feel that the effectiveness of this train would be gone if copies only were sent out. That is the thing which is very impressive. A question was asked before as to whether it should be continued indefinitely. I do not think so. We have certain contracts with the Pullman Company for use of the train. I think a time like this, right after the war, when we are trying to reinspire our people with patriotic fervor, is the most important time to have the train go out, but I do not think it need to be continued further.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is a source of constant pride to us who are natives of Pennsylvania that those of America who were fortunate enough to visit this train saw the great historical and imperishable documents that existed originally in the city of Philadelphia, then the Capital of the United States of America. It is also a source of gratification to us that our great statesman, Benjamin Franklin, was a signer of both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. It is true that Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, was the only signer of the four great documents of America. I refer to the Articles of Confederation, the Declaration of 1774, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution of the United States. But it is to our great fortune and distinct honor that the First Continental Congress met in the city of Philadelphia, and the Second Congress met there also, and from these came first the Declaration of 1774 and the Declaration of Independence, in which every American today is joint heir of their great privileges. Eleven years later, in that same city and in that same hall, there was given to the world the greatest document that ever fell from the hands of man, so characterized by Gladstone, the Constitution of the United States of America, which has guaranteed to us and to every person who has come to these shores the right of imperishable liberty. Then it is also to our great honor that on the field of Gettysburg Abraham Lincoln gave to the world that immortal statement of the rights and freedoms of human mind and human liberty, and therefore we are rich indeed in our heritage. Consequently we are only too glad that those documents have been moved here to our Capital, where all who visit here may view them. It is a matter of record that many people did not get to see them while the Freedom Train was here, but, by the same token, the great railway systems of America, by doing a magnificent job in safely transporting these documents throughout the length and breadth of our great domain, made it possible for millions of people to have an opportunity to see them, which otherwise they would not have had. I think we can allay the fears of those who fear that this will run on interminably, and that the price will be too high if we continue it for some time. Every boy and girl in America who sees these vital documents will be inspired to have greater faith in this country, to believe in its traditions, to be proud of its heritage, to hold up to the world and defend our freedoms that we so richly enjoy. Let us have no fear on the pecuniary side. We are giving to the world at this critical time, a world broken, shattered, distracted, the greatest exemplification of our national unity, of our history, of our determination that this world will survive, that America shall be the land of the free, and here God will bless us all if we carry on in the true spirit and the highest traditions of our forefathers. God bless America.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 84) providing for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 84, with Mr. PRICE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution, introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], providing for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, was reported unanimously for passage by your Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service. It is the purpose of this resolution to provide for the continuance of the Freedom Train under Government sponsorship for a period of approximately 2 years.

The Freedom Train consists of an engine and seven cars. I might say that the engine was donated by the American Locomotive Co. The use of three of these cars for display purposes, and one baggage car, were given free to the American Heritage Foundation, the sponsors of the Freedom Train, by the Pennsylvania and the Santa Fe railroads. The three Pullman cars which house the personnel accompanying the train were leased to the American Foundation at a rental of $25 for each car per day by the Pullman Co. Three of these cars are specially constructed for the security of the priceless documents transported in them.

In all, there are 127 documents, about 25 percent of which are owned by private individuals and about 75 percent of which belong to the Government. These documents concern our American heritage of freedom, and include such priceless documents as the Constitution of the United States, the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, and President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address.

During the past 16 months the train traveled nearly 40,000 miles and visited 325 cities under the sponsorship of the American Heritage Foundation; 3,500,000 people visited the train and saw these immortal, priceless documents which it contains. More than 45,000,000 people participated in the week of rededication to our American principles, which was a program carried on just prior to the arrival of the Freedom Train in the respective communities.

The Freedom Train and its program came to an end on January 22, 1949, and it will be discontinued permanently unless it is continued under the sponsorship of the Federal Government.

The American Heritage Foundation, which arranged for the financing of the Freedom Train by private contributions, the sale of publications and pamphlets, and quotas raised by the cities which the train visited, has determined that it can no longer continue to operate the train as it has in the past.

You may be interested in a brief statement with respect to the operation of the train under the American Heritage Foundation. The foundation was composed of leaders in business, education, and labor. The foundation made all the necessary arrangements with respect to the financing, scheduling, and setting up of the train. It acquired documents on loan from the Government, principally from the Archives and the Congressional Library, and from private collections. It arranged for the special construction of the train, which placed primary emphasis on the security of these priceless documents.

The program for the Freedom Train consisted of three parts. First, there was a continuous campaign of public education utilizing all means of mass communication to persuade people that freedom is everybody's job. Secondly, immediately preceding the visit of the train to a community there was a week of rededication, wherein special public programs were carried out. And third, there was the actual visit of the Freedom Train itself. The Archivist of the United States stated in his testimony before our committee that he proposed to operate the train in much the same manner as the American Heritage Foundation and within the policy laid down by the Freedom Train Commission as provided for in the resolution.

You will note that our committee has made seven amendments to the resolution. While I will be glad to discuss in detail any one of them, in general these amendments provide for a clearer delineation of the respective authority and responsibility of the Freedom Train Commission and the Archivist. Under the resolution, as amended, the train will be operated by the Archivist of the United States. The Archivist will be required to formulate plans for its acquisition, operation, and exhibition. These plans must be presented to the Freedom Train Commission and must be approved by the Commission before the Archivist can put them in operation.

The Freedom Train Commission is composed of the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives; the chairmen of the Senate and House Post Office and Civil Service Committees, the Attorney General of the United States, the Librarian of Congress, the Archivist of the United States, and five members to be appointed by the President.

It is estimated that the cost of operating the train for the next 2 years will be about $2,500,000. However, this amount will naturally depend upon a justification of the expenditures through regular legislative channels. The bill was amended so as to provide that not more than $3,000,000 could be expended in the acquisition and operation of the train.

I might state here now concerning the acquisition of the train that the Government will not buy the train. It expects to get an engine donated by the Army. It has the assurance that the Pennsylvania and Santa Fe railroads will continue to let the Government use the four cars containing these exhibits and the baggage and fire-fighting equipment free of charge. The only expense in connection with the use of the train will be the rental from the Pullman Co. of the 3 Pullman cars for which the American Heritage Foundation had to pay $25 a day each. The many requests that have been received for the exhibition of the train in cities where people have not yet had an opportunity to see it, and the spontaneous and enthusiastic response given the train during the 16 months' tour, when it was exhibited, amply justifies the passage of this resolution.

I might say that the train started its journey at Philadelphia and ended its journey in the same city. When the train visited Philadelphia at the close of its journey, there were more people to see the train then than there were when the train began its journey. The train was here in Washington during the inaugural ceremonies. Five hundred and eighty-one cities have already requested a visit of the Freedom Train.

The Freedom Train under the American Heritage Foundation visited principally large metropolitan cities. It visited few cities of less than 40,000 population. It is the purpose of the Archivist to have the Freedom Train in the next 2 years visit the smaller communities, and the smaller towns and cities of the United States. It is also the plan of the Archivist to have the Freedom Train during the next 2 years visit every one of the 435 congressional districts. The train stands as a symbol of our American way of life, our American traditions, our heritage, our liberty, and our individual freedom. It teaches a valuable lesson in citizenship training and citizenship responsibilities and is a great patriotic contribution. I am so eager for the school children and all other young Americans in the cities where the train has not yet visited to have the opportunity and privilege to visit the train and to see the precious and immortal documents contained in the exhibition on the train.

I trust there will be no opposition to this resolution, as I feel it is most worthy and deserving.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, first, I would like to pay tribute to the distinguished chairman of our committee, Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee, who, I believe, has presented this matter in a most able manner. There is little that I can add which would be of assistance in explanation of this legislation. There are a few things, however, I would like to point out.

Together with other Members of the Committee and House, we hope that a great deal of good may be accomplished by the Freedom Train. Something has been said about the need of this train going to the hinterlands. I am in accord with that view. I want this train to go out where people do not have as much opportunity perhaps of viewing these very valuable documents. But I am inclined to believe that the lessons we get from these documents and the things we expect our people to learn by reason of them could well be emphasized in some of the large places.

I think it is fair to call attention to the fact that this legislation is going to cost an additional $3,000,000. I trust that the hope of the sponsors of this legislation may be realized and that the use of the train may be worth even more than the expenditure involved. I agree, too, it is impossible to measure in monetary terms what may be accomplished by reason of this legislation if complete use is made of it.

I believe, as the sponsors do, that the train should be exhibited in smaller places where people do not have access to opportunities of this kind, and I hope the tour of the train may be distributed so it will go to all parts of the country. I do, however, want to remind you on this occasion that the need of the teachings to come out of the use of this train is just as important, or more important, in the larger centers than in what have been described as the hinterlands today. I would remind you that you will find the spirit of freedom, liberty, and genuine patriotism running pretty high in the so-called hinterlands as compared with that in some of our congested areas. This statement is not made by way of criticism but to suggest that it is entitled to your sober consideration. That is pretty important right now.

Sponsors of the legislation have directed attention to the need or the value of the Freedom Train being visited by the younger people of our country. I think that is extremely important. I do not believe we realize quite so much as we should the responsibility we are passing on to the coming generation. Those of us in the present generation cannot point with too much pride with regard to what has beeen done in recent years in the protection of what is known as the American way of life. It seems to me we do not quite appreciate as much as we should the fact that when our country is in trouble we depend upon the younger people to get us out. They are the ones who fight the battles and make the sacrifice. They are the ones who come forward in the time of emergency. I trust that the use of the Freedom Train may accomplish the purpose that the sponsors of this legislation believe it will do. There never has been a time when the people of our country needed the rebaptism in the meaning of liberty and freedom than right now.

Again I call attention to the sponsors of the legislation to see that the documents so valuable and so precious may be carefully guarded and protected and safely returned to their proper places when the journey of the Freedom Train has been completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] has expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no diversity of opinion about the proposition that everything that the Congress can do to familiarize our people with the principles laid down in the Constitution should be done.

We have been told during the last 2 or 3 years, or perhaps longer, about the Communists who were infiltrating into labor unions, into the schools, into the churches, and into the Federal Government itself right here in Washington. Something should be done to counteract the things that the Communists are teaching, to not only our young folks but our older people.

Every time I return to my district I learn that the people at home—and I say this with apologies to my colleagues—seem to have clearer, sounder ideas about patriotism, about the way the Congress should direct the affairs of the Nation than do we here in Congress.

It has always seemed to me that there was a sort of muddled or muddied thinking here in Washington. Before I came here I had heard a great deal about the beautiful Potomac. Well, in Michigan we have clear water running over gravelly bottoms in the streams, and all sorts of bass, trout, and game fish. I notice the gentleman from the northern peninsula has risen to his feet.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. POTTER. Just where did the gentleman catch his bass?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, that is a long story. If the gentleman from Kansas will give me a little more time I will tell it. First, from the age of, say, 4 on until 16 or 18 in the St. Joe River of Michigan, not in the northern peninsula.

Mr. POTTER. But where did the gentleman catch his good bass?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then later in the Kalamazoo before the industrial plants polluted the waters so you can almost walk on them and never can see down through any more. Then later on up in the gentleman's territory—rather, in the northern part of southern Michigan—trout, you know—my grandson John says, "So long," spreading his hands and keeps watching until I tell him where to stop—wonderful country; and still later up in the northern peninsula, in the district so ably represented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENNETT] and of course in the Fox, the Sucker, the Hurricane, and other streams in the district of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER].

But we are not talking about fishing, not clear water, in lakes or streams; but about this Potomac. When I got a look at it I would not think of washing my feet in it, to say nothing of taking a bath. And over the years the thinking, the thinking that you pick up, the idea and the plans that you pick up here in Washington, they are a mess; they are a mess. Muddled thinking—muddied thinking.

I am all for the Freedom Train, anything that will teach patriotism—most of the people know enough in theory about our Government—is all right. But how would it be if instead of spending our efforts and this $3,000,000 to teach our constituents, the poor folks back home who, apparently some of us think do not know anything about this business of freedom and constitutional government, how would it be if we were to run a train—well, you could not run it through the well of the House, bring it in on the Republican side and run it out over there on the Democratic side minus—something maybe of constitutional government—you could not do that exactly; even though we need these lessons on patriotism, this inspiration to follow the old Constitution far more than do our people at home but how would it be if we would put on an amendment to this bill requiring every Member of the House and the other body to go over and read the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, the Constitution, and then sit down on the porch if he wished in a rocking chair with a pipe and think about what he has read; do a little sober, conscientious thinking about the old Constitution and whether we are not drifting into socialism, and just how far we are today on that road. I wonder if that would help?

How about right here in the Congress, right here from the well of the House, a little adherence to the rules laid down in the Constitution?

All right; when I think about the Constitution and the principles of the Constitution I cannot help thinking sometimes about what we are doing here in Congress; how from day to day, week after week, we, first in one way and then in another, surrender our duties, our congressional duties, to the Executive, to the bureaucrats, to rules and regulations promulgated by them.

If I remember correctly the Constitution states that the legislative power is vested in the Congress, the House and the Senate; yet the other day—there were only nine votes against the proposition; I was away doing some other work; if I had been here I would have voted against it, too, and that would have made ten—yet the other day, notwithstanding that provision of the Constitution that Congress shall legislate for the people, what did we do? We transferred that constitutional legislative power and duty to the President and said that anything he might send down in the way of a plan affecting the executive departments would be all right unless we vetoed it.

These home folks you are thinking so much about and are so afraid they will not know about patriotism and constitutional processes, all of those folks out in the sticks, if I may so refer to the localities in which they live, know that under the Constitution a proposition can only become the law of the land if it receives a majority vote of each House of the Congress. Yet we changed all that and provided anything the President wants done, if it has to do with the executive departments, will become the law of the land unless each House of the Congress vetoes it. So the kids out in the country read the Constitution, but they will say, "Yes, that is all right, but that is not the way they do it nowadays down in Washington. Our Congress has provided that we do it this way. The President suggests and it is the law unless the Congress vetoes."

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. A moment ago a question was raised as to whether the original documents were aboard the Freedom Train. I am informed that the original Bill of Rights was aboard the train but neither the Constitution of the United States nor the Declaration of Independence were aboard the train.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The original drafts of the Constitution and Declaration of Independence are on the train.

Mr. GROSS. Oh, no.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. With the interlineations made in the script.

Mr. GROSS. Oh, no; not the original documents.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The original drafts of the documents.

Mr. GROSS. No. I just talked to the Archivist about that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think this is the answer as to the differentiation between the drafts and the original documents. The original drafts are on the train but the original documents are not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, just how much of the people's power entrusted to us have we given away? You will recall that the Congress under the Supreme Court decision and the Constitution has the authority to inquire through committees and obtain information which is necessary to enable it to legislate. There is no question about that provision. Yet in the last session of Congress, when a legislative committee sought information from an adviser to the President of the United States, the committee was twice denied this testimony. A letter came up from the adviser saying that on order of the President he would have to refuse to appear or testify.

The power denied by the President to the Congress he delegates to 14 departments of the Government.

Has that any significance in your mind? I thought of it when I read Executive Order 133 put out on February 8; I began to wonder just how far our power was being taken away from us and just how much of our power the Executive was assuming and delegating to the executive departments and agencies.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10033—ANOTHER STEP ON THE ROAD TO DICTATORSHIP

As though we were not moving fast enough toward socialism through the centralization of power and its application by the Federal Government to States and local authorities, a step which will hasten that trend is Executive Order 10033 issued by the President on February 8, 1949.

Notwithstanding statutory provisions giving to congressional committees the power to subpena witnesses to obtain information which would enable them to perform their constitutional duty to legislate wisely for the benefit of the people and the Nation, the President twice within the past year directed one of his advisers, John R. Steelman, to refuse to appear before a congressional committee. That committee was seeking to ascertain whether Mr. Truman was throwing his weight behind a labor union which had called a strike in 40 cafeterias serving Government employees. The union's officers had refused to sign the anti-Communist affidavits required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Philip Murray, president of the CIO, frequently at the President's elbow on legislative matters, also refused to appear before a committee which sought to ask him whether he, as president of the CIO, approved of goon squad raids in connection with strikes and picket lines maintained by CIO locals advised by international CIO officials.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10033

Apparently, it is a horse of a different color when the President or some of his political advisers seek to pry into the business secrets and production methods of American farmers, businessmen, and industrialists.

The latest drive toward dictatorial power grows out of Executive Order 10033 issued February 8, 1949, by Mr. Truman. Briefly, that order recites that whereas the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations of which the United States is a member have need for statistical information which can be supplied by the Government of the United States, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is given authority to determine, in concurrence with the Secretary of State, what information shall be given to official requests received by the United States Government from these other organizations. When that has been determined by the Director, then, to collect that information, authority is given to 14 departments of the Government to—and note this—by subpena or otherwise, require any person to appear and furnish such information.

Now, get that: The power given by the Constitution and by Federal law to congressional committees has been challenged by the President. But the President claims the right by Executive order to require any citizen anywhere to appear before any or all of 14 Government departments or agencies, turn himself and his business secrets wrongside out, and disclose any and all information which those agencies or any one of them may request.

That order, if followed through, turns inside out every production and business agency in the United States and makes available to the United Nations and any intergovernmental organization of which this country is a member the secrets and methods of every individual engaged in any occupation, profession, or business. That information, once in the hands of the United Nations or other intergovernmental organization, will inevitably get into the hands of competitors of our economic system.

Individuals and organizations in other lands in competition with our citizens, partnerships, and corporations, without any return will reap rewards of our initiative, reasearch, and experiments.

Our citizens will be required to give the people of other lands the benefit of everything we have; in return they give us nothing except competition. Through propaganda and rubber-stamp legislation over the past 10 years, the administration has been giving away dollars and materials until there has been created here at home the groundwork for a depression. Now, by Executive order, the President proposes to turn loose upon the citizen a horde of investigators and questioners who will strip us of whatever advantage we may now hold in production because of our efficiency and progressiveness.

We sow, they harvest.

The order is as follows:

TITLE 3—THE PRESIDENT

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10033

Regulations governing the providing of statistical information to intergovernmental organizations

Whereas the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations of which the United States is a member have need for statistical information which can be supplied by the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the burden imposed on this Government in connection with providing such information to such organizations should be the minimum compatible with adequacy of information; and

Whereas a systematic procedure for furnishing such information will conserve effort and improve the quality and comparability of the data furnished:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, including section 8 of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act (59 Stat. 515; 22 U. S. C. 286f), and as President of the United States, it is hereby ordered as follows:

SECTION 1. Except as provided in section 2 hereof, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, hereinafter referred to as the Director, (a) shall determine, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, what statistical information shall be provided in response to official requests received by the United States Government from any intergovernmental organization of which this country is a member, and (b) shall determine which Federal executive agency or agencies shall prepare the statistical information thus to be provided. The statistical information so prepared shall be transmitted to the requesting intergovernmental organization through established channels by the Secretary of State or by any Federal executive agency now or hereafter authorized by the Secretary of State to transmit such information.

SEC. 2. (a) The National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, hereinafter referred to as the National Advisory Council, shall determine, after consultation with the Director, what information is essential in order that the United States Government may comply with official requests for information received from the International Monetary Fund or the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

(b) The Director shall determine which Federal executive agency or agencies shall collect or make available information found essential under section 2 (a) hereof.

(c) In the collection of information pursuant to a determination made by the Director under section 2 (b) hereof in response to a request under article VIII, section 5, of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund, the authority conferred on the President by section 8 of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act to require any person to furnish such information, by subpena or otherwise, may be exercised by each of the following-named agencies:

Department of Agriculture.
Department of Commerce.
Department of the Interior.
Department of Labor.
Department of the Treasury.
Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.
Federal Communications Commission.
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.
Federal Power Commission.
Federal Trade Commission.
Interstate Commerce Commission.
Securities and Exchange Commission.
United States Maritime Commission.
United States Tariff Commission.

(d) The information collected or made available under section 2 of this order shall be submitted to the National Advisory Council for review and for presentation to the said Fund or Bank.

(e) As used in this order, the word "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, or association.

SEC. 3. The Director's determination of any matter under section 1 or section 2 (b) of this order shall be made after consulting appropriate Federal executive agencies and giving due consideration to any responsibility now exercised by any of them in relation to an intergovernmental organization.

SEC. 4. This order shall not be construed to authorize the Director or the National Advisory Council to provide, or to require any Federal executive agency to provide, to an intergovernmental organization (a) information during any period of time when the agency having primary responsibility for security of the specified information declares that it must be withheld from the intergovernmental organization in the interest of military security, or (b) information which any Federal executive agency is required by law to maintain on a confidential basis.

SEC. 5. The Director and the National Advisory Council are authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out their respective responsibilities under this order.

SEC. 6. To the extent that this order conflicts with any previous Executive order, the provisions of this order shall control.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1949.

[F. R. Doc. 49-1027; Filed, Feb. 8, 1949; 10:49 a. m.]

Mr. Chairman, our people at home, in my humble judgment, are more familiar with the principles laid down in the Constitution and adhere more closely to constitutional methods and procedure than does the Congress—the Congress all too often amazes the people who would be reached by the Freedom Train by its disregard of simple, clear constitutional provisions.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THORNBERRY].

A DEMONSTRATION OF FAITH

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a great demonstration of the faith we have in the tradition and history of our country that we are anxious to send through this land a Freedom Train bearing the precious documents which have done so much to make our heritage a glorious one.

It is our hope that this cavalcade of our history will cause men and women and boys and girls everywhere to pause and give thanks for the foresight of our ancestors and that it will inspire them to match this foresight, today, with action and deeds.

BEWARE OF INDIFFERENCE

We so often say that our country is at the crossroads of history. We lay the blame for this period of unrest to the attack of outside interests. We spend a great deal of time voicing our fears that other governments are planning to destroy our country. And yet, I think it can be safely said, that the greatest danger our country would ever have to endure would not be from outside forces of any kind, but from the indifference of our own people.

FOR ALL THE PEOPLE

Present plans for extending the tour of the Freedom Train for two more years call for stops where the train has not yet visited—in the smaller towns and villages of our country. I am glad that the history-laden train would go to these smaller communities, because I think the people of these communities have time and again demonstrated their willingness to be first when there is fighting to be done—to be first when there are taxes to be paid—to be first when there is work to be done for the general welfare of their country. So often it is upon these people that we depend for inspiration and resourcefulness as we grope for the answers to the perplexing problems facing us. It is only right, then, that the Freedom Train should go to the people in these communities.

MEANINGFUL DEMOCRACY

We can perform no greater service for the youth of our land than to make the most of every opportunity available for them to see democracy in action—to see it so that they will grow up understanding and practicing it. As the boys and girls of our land grow into adult citizens they can carry with them the inspiration of having seen an original draft of our Constitution—as well as having studied about it—of having read the original Declaration of Independence manuscript in Thomas Jefferson's handwriting—as well as having memorized it.

THOUGHTS OF OUR TIMES

Many of the documents of the Freedom Train seem to have been written for our own day. When we think of the oppressed people of other lands we like to repeat the words of the first 10 amendments to our Constitution. We feel secure in our own Bill of Rights.

It gives us a reassuring feeling to read the famous letter written by Robert E. Lee when at a time of confusion and turmoil he wrote his answer to the board of trustees who had offered him the presidency of Williams College. He said he felt "the duty of every citizen in the present condition of the country is to do all in his power to aid in the restoration of peace and harmony."

These are but several of the documents that will be on view to the boys and girls of our country when they visit the Freedom Train.

FOR TOMORROW'S CITIZENS TODAY

Perhaps through the inspiration of a visit to the Freedom Train somewhere, somehow, a boy will be imbued with the will to work toward advancing the cause of peace or the rights of mankind. Or, perhaps, a girl will be led into the schoolhouse of tomorrow to impart to the youngsters of her day an enthusiasm and zeal for patriotism greater than has ever before been known.

The Freedom Train leaves a great trail of food for thought behind as it winds its way across the country. It reminds us that we each have the responsibility of being alert, active citizens—not only for ourselves as we face the problems of living today but for our children who will some day be shouldering these same responsibilities.

In less than a score words, Ralph Waldo Emerson gave my thoughts on this subject when he said:

> For what avail the plough or sail,
> Or land or life, if freedom fail?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT].

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, within a period of 3 minutes I do not have ample time to make a reasonable statement in opposition to the passage of this bill. Of course, it is not popular to stand here and make a speech against a bill that affords so many Members of Congress the opportunity to make patriotic speeches.

Soon after World War I, the only Communist college ever to exist in the United States was established near Mena, in Polk County, Ark., which school was known as the Commonwealth College. It became my pleasant duty during the year of either 1941 or 1942, while serving as prosecuting attorney of the Ninth Judicial District of Arkansas, of which Polk County was a part, to close the college and remove the Communists from that section of our country. We in western Arkansas knew in those early days the Communists whose names have now become so well known throughout the Nation. Even though a few of the national magazines did lend a helping hand, we were unable to, at that time, convince the people just what the Communists were doing and hoped to do in this country. Our story meant but little and few cared to listen until here of late. Being informed as I was, even during the period of time that we were fighting on the side of communism during World War II, I well knew that we could be in no better position than maybe on the side of the lesser of two evils—and, even though I dared not say so, I doubted that we were placing our assistance on the side of the lesser of the two evils.

The Commonwealth College existed in Arkansas for a good many years, and yet the teachings and preachings of that institution, supported by the Communists, did not change the beliefs of the neighbors of that college. The only Communists ever at or near the site of Commonwealth College were the teachers and students of that institution. Since the termination of that Communist school, we have no followers of the communistic belief within that area. I contribute this fact to the proven theory that to actually know communism makes stronger followers of democracy.

This bill is requesting an expenditure of $3,000,000 to further the teachings of democracy in a land of democracy—as though it were necessary to teach democracy in order to encourage the people of the United States to believe in democracy. Were such a bill advocated for the teaching of communism in Russia, we would argue that it had become necessary for the Communists to sell their wares and attempt to propagandize their own people to follow their teachings. It has never been necessary in America to teach democracy because actions speak louder than words and we are sold upon our system of freedom.

Were this requested expenditure to enlighten our people of communism in order that all of us might better appreciate democracy, then I would favor the immediate passage of this legislation. However, this bill purports to do nothing other than to teach the people that which they already know—there not being a school child in this democracy who has not been versed in every document that the Freedom Train carries. The sponsors of this proposed expenditure are advocating same upon the anti-Communist theory, which for the aforementioned reasons, in my opinion, is not sound.

I would hesitate to protest the spending of this enormous amount of money for the continuation of the Freedom Train travels if the project were being advanced for educational purposes which are not mentioned. In answer to such proposal, I might state that as per past experience of the Freedom Train travels, only the boys and girls in the larger cities of the United States of America would receive any benefit from the extended travels. The boys and girls from the forks of the creek and within the hill countries of my State and your State, who are entitled to equal opportunities with the boys and girls from the larger cities of the East and elsewhere for preparation to compete in the battle of life in this great world of competition, will not benefit from a continuation of the Freedom Train travels.

Heretofore, the travels of the Freedom Train have been financed by the interested individual citizens. My people are already sold upon democracy and do not need any Freedom Train to convince them that communism is not sound. It seems to me that New York and other places within that section along the seaboard, where Communists are running at large, most need the services of the Freedom Train, and should be willing to bear the expenses for the continuation of its travels in order to sell their people upon democracy.

This Congress considers $3,000,000 a mere drop in the bucket in face of the billions of dollars that we are now indebted. Perhaps we can stand this expenditure, which is a drop in the bucket compared with the over-all indebtedness. I am certainly at a loss to know how we are to ever reduce our indebtedness by continuously authorizing every proposed mode of spending additional moneys. Even though I am a new Member of Congress and unknown to most of you, I have no doubt that before this session of Congress has ended that you will know that I am not a reactionary in any sense of the word—but, honestly, gentlemen, the manner in which we nonchalantly authorize expenditures would stagger the most devout liberal.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. I am sorry that we cannot make the operation of the freedom train continuous, but for reasons that were stated a few minutes ago that is going to be impossible. I wish it were possible to send this train throughout the length and breadth of this country on a continuous mission, that all children in all generations could see the precious documents that it contains.

In my own experience I hark back to the period shortly after I finished my education, when in 1915 the city of Philadelphia generously lent to the Panama Pacific International Exposition the Liberty Bell. I remember the people who traveled from all over the West to San Francisco to see that historic symbol. It is the one thing that stands out in that great exposition, as far as I am concerned. I have had the opportunity of seeing that Liberty Bell many times since yet I still stand in awe and reverence in its presence.

Perhaps we who live here in Washington become calloused to the value of the documents that go forth throughout the country on the freedom train. To cite an old adage, "Familiarity breeds contempt." We do not appreciate what seeing these original drafts or original documents mean to the people of the United States. I join with my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] in trying to impress this upon you.

Mr. Chairman, one of the primary purposes of this joint resolution is to augment the citizenship training of our school children. The public, private, and parochial schools through the country already are giving increasing attention to this important program. But as the New York Times reported some time ago after a Nation-wide survey, many persons of school and college age are woefully ignorant regarding many basic facts about American history as well as the rights and obligations of citizenship.

The tour of the Freedom Train to the 48 States and the District of Columbia has done much to stimulate an appreciation of our American heritage. Here are some first-hand reports from various sections of the country that show that the Freedom Train and its patriotic and educational program has more than temporary benefits. I would like to quote part of a letter dated January 19 from Mr. Roscoe Clark, of the Eli Lilly & Co., who served as chairman for the Freedom Train committee during the train's exhibition in Indianapolis last summer. I quote:

> You will be interested to know that there are still echoes of the Freedom Train in Indianapolis. The school system has issued a 28-page booklet on the subject as a manual for the teaching profession of this county, numbering some 2,300 teachers.

In Denver, Colo., the city department of education inaugurated a special study program devoted to our American heritage. This program in Denver started as early as the opening of the school year in September 1947, even though the Freedom Train was not scheduled to reach that city until almost 6 months later.

In San Francisco, as a result of the Freedom Train visit and school program, a group of patriotic local citizens created a permanent Freedom Train scholarship fund. This fund will award college scholarships to winners of essay contests among San Francisco school children dealing with the subject of good citizenship.

In New York City the impact of the Freedom Train program was particularly effective. Unfortunately, because of the limited time in which the train could be exhibited in New York City, only a small fraction of the city's school children could view the priceless documents aboard the train. I might add that this has been true of all the larger cities so far visited by the train. Nevertheless, officials of the New York school system made every effort to bring home through mass meetings, class-room discussions, and special assemblies a better appreciation of our political system and the priceless liberties we enjoy as Americans in a world beset with totalitarian philosophies.

Another demonstration of the dramatic acceptance of the Freedom Train took place in Virginia. When the train came to Danville, school authorities from communities 100 miles distant chartered a special train to bring 2,000 youngsters to the Freedom Train. For the great majority of these boys and girls it was the first time they had ever ridden on a railroad train.

I would like to quote from another letter. This was written last October by the superintendent of schools of Bristol, Tenn., Mr. Clement M. Eyler. Mr. Eyler says, and I quote:

> Bristol, Tenn., had a genuine rededication week for the Freedom Train. It is my confirmed opinion that this experience in the lives of the children of our public schools was for the best interest of our form of government and that it will carry over with our children as long as they live.

These are just a few of the many typical letters that have come from educators from all over the United States during the past year. In nearly every city where the Freedom Train has stopped on a school day the story has been the same. There have been school pilgrimages with special trains and busses. Many of these children traveled as much as 200 miles to see this historic exhibit.

Throughout every Rededication Week that was staged in the cities along the tour, special stress has been placed on the school children. The freedom pledge has been taken in virtually every schoolroom. In Philadelphia, New York, and Boston the pledge was directed by loud-speaker to every class. School contests on the heritage theme have been held in scores of communities. Prizes have been awarded by newspapers, radio stations, veterans' groups, and other civic organizations.

Most parent-teacher associations have sponsored local school programs on the heritage theme. The Freedom Train study guide prepared with the help of the National Education Association is now being used by hundreds of school systems in classes in English, social studies, and American history.

Truly, Mr. Chairman, the tour of the Freedom Train and its important message has been an overwhelming influence in stirring the patriotism of millions of American people. But the job is only beginning. The limitations of time and resources that have been at the disposal of the American Heritage Foundation have prevented the spread of this program into hundreds of cities and towns. When the tour started at Philadelphia late in September 1947 it was planned to visit only 300 cities. This finally was increased to 324. In most places the Freedom Train stopped only for 1 day. This meant that only a small part of the school children and the adult population of these communities had the opportunity to go aboard. Hundreds of cities were necessarily bypassed, particularly the towns of 25,000 population or less. I believe that this tour and the patriotic and better citizenship program should be extended so that all these cities and towns that were not included in the train itinerary will have the same opportunity to rededicate themselves to our American heritage.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, this bill interests me. I grew up in the backwoods. I attended a one-room schoolhouse, and had one teacher. I recall what happened to me when I first saw some of these documents that have been referred to. It is something that gives a backwoods boy or girl a great thrill. But we here in the United States have a tax problem, a budget problem, a debt problem. I have great respect for taxpayers and bond buyers. As you have heard many times we have a budget before us amounting to $42,000,000,000. The President is asking for $4,000,000,000 in additional taxes, and $2,500,000,000 in social-security taxes. That brings the deal up to about $48,500,000,000. That is something to think about. I raised the question a while ago as to whether or not this $3,000,000 was in the budget which was submitted. I do not assume that it was. Here is another expense to put on the taxpayers and the bond buyers of this country. It reminds me of something that a great American said within the last few hours. He is a great educator and a great soldier who has been called back to Washington this very week to help the administration get out of some of its difficulties. I refer to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower. In speaking at a symposium on freedom at the First Annual Columbia College Forum on Democracy just the other night, he had this to say. I am quoting from the press report:

> Eisenhower on leave from his post as president of the university did not refer to his newly assigned duties as presiding officer of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Instead he said, "It is the dictatorship born of a surrender of our own responsibilities and therefore a surrender of our own thought, and of our own ideas and our own right to exercise our vote indicating the policies of this country."

He quoted Lincoln, in which Lincoln said:

> I have been given a job to do for the United States; that job I will do.

Then the general spoke, and he said:

> In sum, these results will come from a constant drift toward centralized Government; There will be a swarming of bureaucrats over the land. Ownership of property will gradually drift into that Central Government, and finally you have to have a dictatorship as the only means of operating such a huge and great organization.
> I believe that it is things such as that that we must watch today if we are going to be true to the standards that Lincoln gave to all of us.

Those words are from General Eisenhower, who was called down here at this very moment. He fears that type of dictatorship. He fears the acquisition of ownership and management by the Government. He fears that we will remove the freedoms of our people.

I would like to see this Congress furnish the necessary leadership to our people to have education put into the hearts and minds of our children by State and local finances, and State and local control, to teach those children how American enterprise operates, so that they will know from what source taxes come, with which to finance a Government such as we have in the United States.

To me, that is more essential at this particular moment, than it is to send this train throughout the country.

I think General Eisenhower had something like that in mind when he made his reference the other day to this proposition. If the general did not mean something like that, just why did he make this particular observation at this moment, only a few hours before he comes back to Washington? Why does he fear that private enterprise may pass away in the United States? Why did he issue a warning of that kind? I say, why did General Eisenhower issue that warning at this time? I think the general has got something there.

The President stood here in this House a short time ago and pointed out that of the $46,000,000,000 used in 1948 by our industries in expanding their plants 65 percent of it came from internal funds of the corporations; and you will find that during the last 9 years private individuals in this country have reduced their holdings in private enterprise by $3,000,000,000. That is private individuals, private enterprise stepping out of the picture. If the freedom of our people is preserved it will come from our people having confidence in our own institutions that are operated and taxed to support this Government. That is what will protect the freedom of our people.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Are we not justified in assuming that the reason Eisenhower issued that statement was because he saw the danger of socialism?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is exactly why he issued that statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. All right. You can go out and teach the children about how this country attained its present position, but when the kids go home and find dad, who is in business, hampered at every turn by executive regulations, where do you get?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, the child will say, "You are not following the original principles set up in these documents which they showed me at the train."

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, what can dad do to change it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has again expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCKLEY].

Mr. BUCKLEY of Illinois. This is a time of very serious thinking. The children of our land are in need of this type of education.

Last night I read in a paper here in Washington that four or five boys had gone to a show and had seen some kind of a western picture, and they went out from that show and robbed a store. It was a great embarrassment to their parents; and today, of course, they are trying to fix it up.

This train is a form of high-class education. The train will visit every place in the country that requests it, so far as that is physically possible. The children passing through the train and seeing those documents for the first time will get a thrill that will probably never be equaled during the rest of their lives.

I have noticed during the proceedings today that a great deal of time has been spent talking about a bill which has already been passed. When a bill has been passed and all of the arguments have been advanced for it and against it, that is the end of the arguments and of that particular bill. What is passed is passed and is a closed issue; it is not a question of what it is, what it is not, or what it may be. Today we are discussing the Freedom Train. We know it is a worthwhile thing. We have seen from past experience the eagerness and enthusiasm with which it has been accepted all over the land; the people are calling for it to come back into their communities again; and certainly it is a thing we should praise all the days of our life. I, for one, hope the vote for this bill will be unanimous.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time on this side.

The Clerk read, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That, as a means of focusing the attention of the American people on a reexamination of their heritage of freedom, fostering the preservation of their liberties, awakening their loyalty to the American tradition, and contributing to citizenship training, particularly of Americans of school age, the Archivist of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to acquire the Freedom Train, and to operate the said train for a period of 2 years.
>
> SEC. 2. In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution the Archivist is hereby authorized—
> (a) to enter into and carry out such agreements with such person or persons, natural or artificial, as may be necessary for the acquisition of the Freedom Train and its equipment and for its relinquishment after a period of 2 years, and to make such expenditures, without regard to other provisions of law, as may be required to carry out such agreement;

(b) to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as he deems advisable without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; to procure services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (60 Stat. 810), but at rates not to exceed $40 per diem for individuals; to accept services and facilities without compensation; and, with the consent of the head of any Government department or agency, to utilize or employ the services of personnel or facilities of any such department or agency, with or without reimbursement therefor;

(c) to obtain printing and binding without regard to section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919, as amended (40 Stat. 1270);

(d) to purchase or contract for supplies or services (including printing and binding) without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended;

(e) to obtain and pay for comprehensive insurance coverage, as he may deem necessary, of other than Government property used in connection with the Freedom Train;

(f) to acquire by gift, bequest, loan, or otherwise, personal property for the benefit of, or in connection with, the operation of the Freedom Train;

(g) to cooperate with the governments of the several States and their political subdivisions in promoting the exhibition of the Freedom Train;

(h) to pay per diem to personnel required to travel in connection with the operation or inspection of the train as follows: To civilian personnel at the maximum rate applicable under existing laws or regulations; to officer personnel of the armed services in accordance with section 12 of the Pay Readjustment Act of June 16, 1942, and regulations pertinent thereto; and to enlisted personnel of the armed services a military allowance in lieu of rations and quarters as provided in Executive Order Numbered 9871 and regulations pertient thereto;

(i) to pay in cash for any services, supplies, or equipment not exceeding $50 in cost;

(j) to purchase, print, mimeograph, multilith, photostat, or produce or reproduce in any known manner, pamphlets, brochures, facsimiles, or other material pertaining to the Freedom Train for free distribution or for sale, the proceeds of such sales to be deposited in the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury;

(k) to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the operation of the Freedom Train.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Defense is hereby authorized and directed to provide a security detachment for the protection of the Freedom Train.

SEC. 4. A commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the "Freedom Train Commission," to consist of the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, the Attorney General of the United States, the Librarian of Congress, the Archivist of the United States, and five members to be appointed by the President. The members of the said Commission shall serve during the period the Freedom Train is in operation, and for 6 months thereafter. Such members shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission. The Commission shall elect one of its members to serve as Chairman.

SEC. 5. The Commission shall advise on the plans formulated by the Archivist and submitted to it for exhibiting the Freedom Train.

SEC. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as read and open to amendment at any section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Page 2, strike out line 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "said train during the period ending July 5, 1951."

Page 2, strike out lines 5 to 11, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) to enter into and carry out such agreements with such person or persons, natural or artificial, as may be necessary for the acquisition of the Freedom Train and its equipment, for its operation during the period ending July 5, 1951, and for the disposition of such train and equipment within 60 days after such date; and to make such expenditures, without regard to other provisions of law, as may be required to carry out such agreements."

Page 4, line 7, after the number "9871", insert a comma and the following: "as amended."

Page 4, strike out beginning with the word "deposited" in line 15 down to the semicolon in line 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "paid into administered, and expended as a part of the National Archives trust fund."

Page 5, line 4, after "Representatives," insert the following: "the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Post Office and Civil Service."

Page 5, strike out lines 16 to 18, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. The Archivist shall formulate plans to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution, and all such plans shall be subject to the approval of the Commission."

Page 5, line 25, strike out "such sums as may be necessary" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "not to exceed the sum of $3,000,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendments, under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. PRICE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 84, to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 95, had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FORAND asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the text of a bill he introduced.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 99) for printing in the RECORD:

Resolved, That notwithstanding any rule of the House to the contrary, it shall be in order on Tuesday, February 15, 1949, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year 1949, and for other purposes, and all points of order against the bill or any of the provisions contained therein are hereby waived. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANHAM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, we have been commemorating the birthday of one of America's true noblemen, Abraham Lincoln. I am glad that we of the South can join with those of you from the North in paying tribute to this great American. We now see that had he lived many of the unspeakable indignities we had to suffer would not have been our lot.

At one time when some of the more violent men of ill will were urging harsher treatment for the South, Mr. Lincoln replied that he had not suffered at the hands of the South but with the South. Were he alive today I am sure that again he would suffer with the South at the threat of the enactment of force laws that would inevitably bring another tragic era for our beloved Southland.

A few days ago the gentleman from Arkansas, the Honorable BROOKS HAYS, spoke from the well of this House words of such reasonableness and sanity that I wish every one of you would study and heed them. I am not prepared to say that I would agree in every detail with the proposed plan for the settlement of the so-called civil-rights question. But I do commend to you the spirit of good will and understanding that pervades Mr. HAYS' proposals. It is from this approach that a fair and equitable settlement of the issues involved can be evolved.

A few days ago I heard a friend gently chide the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] with the charge that he was "always floating around on a cloud." He admitted that occasionally the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] parked his cloud and came down to earth. In this age of materialism and cynicism I am sure we need more cloud floaters. For "without a vision my people perish." Fortunate are we to have a man in Congress like the gentleman from Arkansas, BROOKS HAYS. His head may be in the clouds where the winds of God's truth can reach him, but his feet are firmly planted upon the ground. His is that rare combination of vision and practicality.

It is in this spirit of good will, of idealism, and at the same time of practical compromise that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] has attacked the problem of race relations that cries out for settlement.

Over the week end I have read several chapters from Lanterns on the Levee, by William Alexander Percy, great southerner and great American. I wish every man in Congress would read chapter XXIII of that book. It was written while Percy stood in the shadow of death, which overtook him a few weeks or months later. Percy was a poet at heart, and maybe a "cloud floater," but he spoke from a deep knowledge of the Negro, in prose that literally sings its way along. I quote a few paragraphs, and suggest that you read the entire chapter at the first opportunity:

The whole atmosphere of America is such as to mislead and endanger the Negro. The sickening adulation paid to Negro athletes and artists, not because of their great abilities, but because they are Negroes; rumors of what the Negro does in Paris, in Moscow, in the northern cities; the promises and bribes of demagogic politicians interested not in his welfare but his vote; the Negro press' hatred of the white man, its demand for social equality, its bitterness, its untrustworthiness—all combine to create about the young southern Negro an atmosphere as dangerous as it is febrile and unwholesome. The work of white sentimentalists is equally perilous. When personal relations with the Negro are too familiar, they are misinterpreted by him. He reasons, plausibly, that if you are willing to dine with him, you are willing and probably anxious to sleep with him. With the genius of the poor for misinterpreting the motives of the rich, added to the Negro's own special genius for suspicion and distrust, it should require little except common sense to deduce what the effects of white sentimentalists may lead to. The noblest of them, such as Mrs. Roosevelt, accomplish their insidious evil quite unsuspectingly and with the highest motives. * * *

I claim only to be one of the vast number of men of good will, who try with indifferent success, to see wisely and act justly. As such, I would say to the Negro: Before demanding to be a white man socially and politically, learn to be a white man morally and intellectually—and to the white man: The black man is our brother, a younger brother, not adult, not disciplined, but tragic, pitiful, and lovable; act as his brother and be patient.

Mr. Percy makes it clear that the southern white man understands the Negro better than the people of other sections who have not had the same long experience with him. And yet it is made equally clear that there is a glass wall so to speak between even the southern white man and the Negro. Patience, good will, and intelligent cooperation with equal educational opportunities for the Negro will break down this wall of racial misunderstanding and prejudice. Force laws, resulting in another tragic era of carpetbagging in the South can only intensify the problem. For example, witness the resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan and violence since the ill-advised political effort to pass the so-called civil-rights program.

The distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] has proposed a sane and calm approach to the vexing problem. I call upon the Members on each side of the aisle to study his proposals, and to approach the problem with the same degree of sanity and reasonableness that characterizes Mr. HAYS' thinking on the subject.

With the Speaker's leave, I include with my remarks an editorial from the Atlanta Constitution commenting on the HAYS' plan, and an article by Gladstone Williams that appeared in the same newspaper:

[From the Atlanta Constitution]

Southerners are planning to introduce in Congress this week their own version of a civil-rights program.

It is being introduced by men of good will and good intent. The plan is to get it before the Congress ahead of any administration bills.

We urge thoughtful southerners to have a look at it. In brief it would do these three things:

1. It would provide for a constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax. Since 41 States, including Georgia, have already abolished it and others are preparing to do so, there is no doubt but that the poll tax will go and that it would do so without any Federal coercion. Since even the most ardent supporters of poll-tax banning agree there is grave doubt as to constitutional authority to do so, an amendment would seem the most sensible plan.

2. Lynching would come under Federal statute. This newspaper has always opposed Federal coercion, and still does. But there can no longer be any doubt but that failure of local peace officers to enforce laws against such violence properly has created so much national anger and opinion that it is not longer possible to avoid some such measure. We are then, from the practical viewpoint, up against the problem of what sort of legislation we will get, not whether we will have it.

The honest southerner must admit that local law-enforcement agencies, because of the peculiarities of our political methods, frequently are powerless to proceed against a prominent family or one politically powerful when such is involved in a lynching case. This is wrong, but it is a fact. The southerners propose to remove a lynching case from the county where it occurs and try it in a county where the local passions and political blocs would not apply.

3. The southerners plan to introduce legislation which would establish in the Department of Labor a board which would have the power to investigate, conciliate, arbitrate, and recommend in cases involving discrimination in employment. This avoids the Federal police feature, and it bypasses the unconstitutional proposal that a man may be told he must hire someone whether that person is acceptable or not. It was exactly this system which worked so well during the recent World War in cases involving thousands of workers from minority groups. There is no reason to think it will not work even better now when the national conscience is so much more aware of the evils and wrongs of discrimination. A standing army could not enforce the provisions of the FEPC as proposed by the more radical makers of civil-rights legislation.

We recommend this plan to thoughtful southerners as reasonable and as being possible of excellent results. At least it is a starter, and it is a positive action. We will be offering something that we are for, and not appearing as merely against something, a role which has brought the South much of its present trouble.

[From the Atlanta Constitution of February 7, 1949]

HAYS' RIGHTS PLAN A TEST OF GOOD FAITH

(By Gladstone Williams)

WASHINGTON.—In an effort to remove civil-rights legislation from the field of bitter controversy, Representative BROOKS HAYS, Democrat, of Arkansas, has come forward with a well-reasoned compromise program that should appeal to moderates on both sides of the question. Without a compromise there is danger of Congress being split wide open on the issue. The Senate Rules Committee is now wrestling with the problem of strengthening cloture rules in order to give President Truman's civil-rights program a fair chance of passage. Southern Senators are determined to wage a last-ditch fight against any change in the rules which would deny them the right to unlimited debate in discussing controversial legislation of the kind.

What may result is a prolonged filibuster against proposed changes in the rules aimed at ending filibusters. That could tie up Senate proceedings indefinitely, blocking other important legislation that may be pending.

Mr. HAYS, a southerner himself, calls for concessions from extremists on both sides of the racial question. If the moderates on both sides will approach the problem in the spirit of compromise, he believes it will be possible to work out a civil-rights program that will be acceptable to all concerned and generally meet the objectives sought by the President.

Four major items are involved in the President's civil-rights program. They are (1) segregation, (2) anti-poll tax, (3) antilynching, and (4) fair-employment-practices legislation. The compromise Representative HAYS proposes calls for this:

First, he would limit Federal segregation policies to movements in interstate transportation—travel.

Second, he would repeal poll-tax requirements for voting by constitutional amendment, rather than by statute.

Third, he would have enacted a modified antilynching law which would leave primary responsibility for dealing with mob violence to the individual States and local communities, with the Federal Government empowered to step in only when the State and local authorities failed to act.

Fourth, he would abandon all proposals for a Federal law for coercion in employment, and instead would set up a counseling service in the Department of Labor to work for nondiscrimination in industry.

As the Arkansas man points out, there seems no need for further legislation to achieve the President's objective of nonsegregation in interstate travel because of the Supreme Court decision invalidating a Virginia statute requiring the segregation of white and Negro passengers in interstate travel. That decision had the effect of sustaining a nonsegregation policy in all interstate travel.

So far as the poll tax goes, Mr. HAYS is entirely willing to have Congress submit the question to the various States in the form of a constitutional amendment. Other southern members have taken a similar stand all along. Only seven States still retain the poll tax now, anyway.

On antilynching measures, he reminds that that is an evil that has practically been extinguished, so that it is no longer the issue it once was. He sees no reason why a compromise should not be reached whereby the Federal Government would step in only after local authorities had failed to do something, and with the penalties and fines now proposed being eliminated.

The HAYS program is certainly worthy of careful consideration by all those who honestly would like to see some effective civil-rights legislation enacted. It opens the way for a meeting of minds among the moderates, though the extremists may be expected to raise their voices in opposition on both sides.

It will probably offer the test of whether the extremists are really interested in seeing a constructive program adopted, or whether they merely prefer to keep the issue alive for its political effect.

THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I hope everybody appreciates the splendid service of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

On January 1, 1949, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation began its sixteenth year of protecting the depositors in banks of this Nation. During this period a great change has taken place in the thinking of those who own the 90,000,000 bank accounts in the United States. Before deposit insurance was established the slightest rumor of trouble in a bank caused panic among its depositors and resulted in runs that inevitably hastened the closing of the bank. Assets had to be sacrificed to meet the unreasoning demands of depositors, and the consequence was that everyone suffered.

How greatly deposit insurance has changed the picture was demonstrated dramatically by two brief news stories during the past week.

On February 1 it was announced that the cashier of the First National Bank, Dyer, Ind., had admitted sizable defalcations. Before Federal deposit insurance this would have been the immediate signal for panic and a run on the bank. What happened under Federal deposit insurance is well described by Robert A. Vanderpoel, financial editor of the Chicago Herald-American:

FDIC ONCE MORE PROVES WORTH TO UNITED STATES ECONOMY—ONE BANK'S TROUBLES TODAY ARE NOT DISTURBING

Despite a defalcation estimated at $200,000 by its cashier, the First National Bank of Dyer, Ind., is operating as usual.

In the old days an episode of this sort would have caused an immediate run on the bank and the chances are that very quickly it would have closed its doors. There would have followed other more moderate runs on nearby banks and the Dyer bank would have gone through the long and costly process of receivership and liquidation.

At best depositors' money would have been tied up for a long period and business in the whole community would have suffered. At worst depositors would have received only a gradual and partial return of their funds over a period of years. Stockholders would have been assessed their 100-percent double liability and a substantial amount of the assets would have been eaten up with the fees of receivers, attorneys, and what not.

At it was, with deposits insured up to $5,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, there was no fear on the part of small customers of suffering any loss. Consequently there was no run, no frantic efforts to liquidate under unfavorable circumstances.

LOANS WILL BE GUARANTEED

Instead, plans were made for all deposits of the bank to be taken over by the Gary National Bank with the Federal Deposit Insurance Cororation guaranteeing loans up to $1,000,000 and agreeing to assume slow-paying loans at the end of a 6-month period.

This episode recalls the manner in which almost every banker in the country opposed Government guaranty of bank deposits prior to the bank crisis of 1933. Today the bankers recognize this insurance as the greatest blessing that has come to their business. They no longer lie awake nights fearful of runs that sometimes started from rumors that had no basis in fact.

Yes; it was business as usual in Dyer, with the Gary National Bank taking over all deposits and sound assets of the First National Bank of Dyer and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation putting in cash to make up the difference between deposits and sound assets. There was no panic, no run, no interruption to banking services, and all depositors of the Dyer bank were protected in full.

A story later in the week gave the other side of the picture. Remember that in the old days assets had to be dumped on falling markets to meet depositor demands. How different it is today. On February 4 Chairman Maple T. Harl, of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, announced that liquidation of the affairs of the Peoples Bank of Donalds, Donalds, S. C., had been completed. So what? you say. This is what: Under the orderly procedures of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which took over when the Donalds bank ran into difficulty in December 1947, assets of the bank were liquidated so efficiently that their proceeds, first, protected all the Donalds depositors completely; second, reimbursed Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation the full amount of its $148,000 advance and all expenses of liquidation; and third, returned to stockholders of the bank cash and miscellaneous assets exceeding the par value of their common stock.

That is the way it works today. If a bank does run into trouble, its depositors go on about their business, secure in the knowledge that their funds are protected by Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. After the Corporation has taken over unsatisfactory assets of the bank in trouble, it liquidates them in an orderly manner, with due regard for credit conditions in the community, and so achieves maximum recovery without strain on business in the neighborhood.

The independence and freedom of action granted to the Corporation by its organic law are the most important factors in the success of deposit insurance. Where aid has been needed by an insured bank, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has not been hampered by budgetary and other fiscal restrictions. As a mutual fund, supported by the banks and sponsored by the Federal Government, it has been able to act promptly in emergencies requiring aid to insured banks and has thus prevented the distress which accompanied earlier bank failures. The flexibility and the efficiency possible under its present organization should certainly be continued if Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is to continue its work as bulwark of our financial stucture.

More than 1,500,000 depositors in the 408 insured banks that Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has helped financially so far know personally how valuable is the work of the organization.

Owners of 90,000,000 bank accounts now sleep soundly at night without fear for the safety of their deposits. No one anywhere should overlook the magnificent contribution the Corporation has made to financial and economic stability by making our banking system secure for depositors.

I feel sure that the people of our country, and especially the Members of Congress, do not want to see this agency consolidated with any other agency of the Government but left entirely independent.

THE UNITED MINE WORKERS WELFARE AND RETIREMENT FUND

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I called at the George Washington University Hospital to see a former client along with several other coal miners from my district who were all suffering from some form of paralysis to the spinal column, arising out of and in the course of their employment.

These men are all wards of the United Mine Workers welfare and retirement fund and are eligible to participate notwithstanding that some of them were injured before the creation of the fund in 1946. They all require treatment by specialists and their bills are being paid from the United Mine Workers welfare fund, which receives 20 cents for each mined ton of coal. The necessary hospitalization and treatment for these miners would have been utterly impossible for them to obtain but for this welfare fund.

LEWIS RECOGNIZED THE NEED

The United Mine Workers were fortunate to have leadership who were looking ahead for their general welfare, as well as the industry, in the establishment of the health, welfare, and retirement fund. The leadership recognized that both social-security payments to retired miners and workmen's compensation rates for accident and injury are inadequate, particularly in view of the increase in the cost of living.

It was realized that the high accident rates—each year between 900 and 1,250 men lose their lives through accidents and some 50,000 more suffer injuries, some of which incapacitate them for long periods of time—result in a high insurance premium for individual miners, which is difficult for the average miner to pay.

That leadership came along with the idea that the high accident and disease rate are economic costs of the mining industry and therefore should be borne by the industry in exactly the same way that machine repairs and replacement are considered part of the cost of operation, and that such cost should not be borne by the miners and their dependents; and on that base the UMWA bituminous welfare and retirement fund was established.

The president of the United Mine Workers, John L. Lewis, saw these facts and faced them. He was brave and steadfast at a time when it was unpopular to face the facts. His action brought about one of the greatest humanitarian events in history with the creation of the welfare and retirement fund for the coal miners.

OTHER BASIC REASONS FOR HEALTH PLAN

The benefits of such a fund are now apparent to the general public. In many instances isolated conditions of the mining communities have resulted in miners and their families being deprived of many of the advantages of modern community life. At the same time the hazardous nature of the industry and the economic insecurity of the one-industry localities have increased the need of miners for health and welfare and retirement benefits.

Then, too, it is recognized that the advancing average age of miners can only be halted by the entrance of a large number of younger workers into the mines. In addition to wages paid, one of the chief incentives for younger workers to enter an industry is adequate health and accident insurance and a retirement plan. Such benefits weigh heavily in an industry such as mining, in which unfavorable factors are well known. Improvement in the mechanization of the mines will increase productive capacity of the industry but cannot eliminate the need for a continuous supply of younger workers into the industry.

SERVICE TO MINERS

In the first 20 months of administration, or up until January 1, 1949, the UMWA welfare and retirement fund reported a total of 260,123 beneficiaries receiving approximately $63,000,000, which sum was disbursed in the form of disability grants, pensions, death benefits, hospital and medical care.

The establishment of this fund has brought about new interest in the study of diseases in the mining industry and will focus public attention upon the need for expanding research. Centralized administration of the fund makes possible the application of improved medical techniques more rapidly to the various mining areas.

The benefits derived from this fund are immeasurable. The future only will reflect them.

FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, for many years I have been keenly interested in some form of crop-insurance protection for farmers. I have seen at first hand the desperate financial plight in which farmers find themselves in years of crop failures. That is why I have followed with considerable personal interest the progress of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, which was created under title 5 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Insurance is protection. It is man's effort to protect himself against the unknown. I am a strong advocate of all types of insurance. Nearly every risk known to man is insurable. For years our farmers have faced fear of the future in the growing of their crops, not knowing at the time of planting whether or not they would produce even enough to cover their investment of hard-earned savings or borrowed money in the crop. Man has no control over the elements. A flood, a drought, a sudden hail, a windstorm, or the many other unavoidable causes known to you may in a few hours or even in a few short minutes destroy the farmer's labor and investment in his crop.

Recently I had occasion to read the report of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation for 1948. This report is very interesting to me, as it shows the Corporation is now making real progress in offering to our farmers a program which insures them against the loss of their investment in the crop and assures them of a means whereby they will be in a position to plant a crop from year to year.

Nineteen hundred and forty-eight was the ninth year of active operation of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. It was the second year since the inception of the crop insurance program that a net profit has resulted from the over-all operations. Of even more significance is the fact that 1948 was the first year in the history of crop insurance that a profit was shown on each commodity insured. The development of the crop insurance program has gone through several very definite stages. For the first 5 years—1939 to 1943—the program was launched on a national basis to insure unavoidable crop losses on wheat for the years 1939, 1940, and 1941, and for both wheat and cotton for the years 1942 and 1943. The program got off to a very bad start and net losses were suffered each year. These losses can be attributed in large part, I believe, to the fact that there was no background experience—no guide whatever—upon which to formulate an insurance program providing protection against all production risks. Up until the time of the enactment of the legislation creating the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, all-risk crop insurance was a virtually uncharted field. True, there had been various attempts—about a dozen I believe—by private insurance companies to write all-risk crop insurance. But each of these attempts was short-lived and ended in bankruptcy. I think we should not underestimate the real problems that confronted the Corporation in establishing actuarial bases and the contractual provisions with the farmer. Considering these problems there is little wonder that losses were incurred until sufficient experience was gained to demonstrate the weaknesses and needed changes in the program.

The second stage of the crop-insurance program began with its reinstatement by the Congress and extended from 1945 to 1947. This legislation provided that wheat, cotton, and flax insurance was to be offered on a Nation-wide basis and also authorized experimental programs for corn and tobacco in a few counties each. A study of the plans adopted would indicate that the first stage of its development enabled the Corporation to establish a better basis for insurance in the second stage.

The third stage in the development of the crop-insurance program began in 1948 with the transition to the limited program which allowed insurance to be offered in only 200 counties for wheat, 56 counties for cotton, 50 counties for corn and flax each, 35 counties for tobacco, and in not to exceed 20 counties for any trial experimental programs which might be instituted.

Additional crops should be covered, I think, especially to include peaches. The county of Spartanburg, in my district, is now the leading fresh-fruit producing county in the world. Records show that the wheat insurance program, which was the oldest of the insurance programs offered and for which there was, therefore, longer experience, began to show considerable improvement. In each of the years 1945, 1946, and 1947 wheat premiums exceeded indemnities. The flax and tobacco programs were also operated successfully. For this 3-year period flax premiums exceeded indemnities by about 3 to 2. The tobacco program showed a profit each year. The corn program showed a slight loss for the 3-year period due principally, I understand, to the unusually poor crop in 1947. Heavy losses on cotton continued, however, for the first 2 years of this 3-year period, and the indemnities on cotton were so large that they offset the favorable experience on the other commodities insured and resulted in a net operating loss on the over-all program. The losses on cotton resulted in amendatory legislation by the Eightieth Congress, which, beginning with the 1948 crop year, limited the scope of crop-insurance operations for all commodities. However, it is interesting to note that in 1947—the last year before reduction in the number of counties in which insurance could be offered—the cotton program operated much more successfully and premiums almost equaled indemnities.

In South Carolina crop insurance for tobacco is authorized in two counties, Horry and Marion; and in three counties for cotton, Greenville, Orangeburg, and Anderson. Since we have 46 counties, it will be observed only one-ninth of the counties may participate in the crop-insurance program under present authority. Only one county in my district, my own county of Greenville, is authorized to participate in the insurance program.

In view of the splendid showing made by the Corporation during the past 2 years, I am very hopeful that this needed insurance protection may be made available soon to every farmer throughout the country.

Time will not permit me to enlarge on the changes which have been adopted by the Corporation within the last 3 years to strengthen the program and to comply with what I believe was the intent of the Congress. However, it is my opinion that the present management of the Corporation is to be highly commended for the progress that has been made. The favorable experience of the crop-insurance program in 1947 and again in 1948 is due principally to the major changes that have been made both in the program and in its administration. In 1948 the Corporation placed greater emphasis on local responsibility for administraton of the program, took steps to eliminate poor insurance risks, improved its loss adjustment work generally, and took other aggressive action in the development of a sound system of all-risk crop-insurance protection.

The experience of the Corporation in recent years indicated that the program is now operating on the basis that a sound crop-insurance program should. It would be expected that premiums would exceed losses in good-crop years and that in poor-crop years, indemnities would exceed premiums. I think that the availability of crop-insurance protection is a very fundamental part of the well-being of American farmers and I feel that the progress which has been made by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation justifies an expansion in the program so that additional farmers will have the opportunity of obtaining this protection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. YATES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. BOYKIN (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. McCARTHY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an open letter addressed to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the magazine Marine Progress for January 1949 entitled "Waterway Improvements."

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the subject The Atomic Bomb and the Panama Canal. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $159.75, but I ask that it be printed, notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

SERVICE CREDIT FOR VETERANS UNDER SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have just introduced a bill to provide for a service credit for veterans for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act.

The present social-security law is in need of revision if our Government is to be fair to the veterans of World War II. The present social-security law provides coverage only for those who were covered by the social-security law at the time they entered military service. Those who were not so covered on the date they entered military service were prevented from coverage for social-security benefits throughout their entire service because they had no opportunity to obtain employment that would entitle them to social-security coverage.

My bill will extend social-security coverage to all persons in the military service through the national emergency, commencing September 16, 1940, and extending 180 days from the date proclaimed by the President as the date of termination of World War II. I hope my bill can be made a part of the revision of our social-security law that the Committee on Ways and Means now has under study.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in Human Events, entitled "Flight of Capital."

WICHITA, KANS., IS THE LOGICAL PLACE FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE UNITED STATES AIR ACADEMY

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to establish a United States Air Academy at Wichita, Kans.

I think it is pretty well known that Wichita, Kans., is the air capital of the West and Middle West of the United States. Since the establishment of an Air Academy has been recommended, Wichita, in my judgment, is the ideal location.

Wichita is the home of three large aircraft factories. It is where large and small war planes were built during the war period. It is the manufacturing center of the famous B-29. Right now airplane factories have large contracts with the Government for the production of airplanes and air equipment.

Not only is Wichita well located, being in the center of the United States, it also is in an area where the terrain is adaptable for training. The climate is right because it has the various temperatures for flight training. It is cold in the winter and warm during the summer, and yet there are few days during the year when planes do not fly in that area.

Wichita is well located with respect to transportation facilities, and is easily accessible from various points of the country.

I believe that when all factors are taken into consideration, Wichita is the proper place for the establishment of the United States Air Academy.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MACK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

OLD-AGE PENSION

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, President Truman is proposing that the benefits paid old-age and survivors' insurance pensioners be increased by 50 percent and that, at the same time, the withholding taxes paid by workers and employers also be increased by 50 percent.

The present pension benefits of old-age and survivors' insurance are inadequate. I favor increasing them by 50 percent. I introduced a bill in January 1948 to accomplish that purpose and I reintroduced that bill on the opening day of this session of Congress. My bill is now known as H. R. 258.

While I favor increasing the pension benefits by 50 percent, I do not favor increasing the withholding taxes at this time by 50 percent. I do not believe there is any need for an immediate increase in these withholding-tax rates.

In the 12 years that old-age and survivors' insurance has been in operation it has collected more than $13,000,000,000 in withholding taxes and in interest on its reserve fund. In those same years old-age and survivors' insurance has paid out less than $2,500,000,000 in pension benefits. In short, of every $6 collected during the past 12 years from the workers in withholding taxes only $1 has been returned to them in benefits. Five dollars out of every six has gone into the reserve fund.

At the present time, this old-age and survivors' insurance reserve fund contains $10,722,000,000. To increase, at this time, the withholding tax rate levied on workers merely would mean that this already huge reserve fund of more than $10,000,000,000 soon would be increased to twenty or forty billion dollars. To increase this reserve to such astronomical proportions will only make easy borrowing easier for the tax spenders and stimulate increased wasteful spending by an already extravagant Government.

The President proposes a 50 percent increase in the old-age and survivors' benefits and a 50-percent increase in withholding taxes. Let us see how this would have worked if applied to the experiences of last year.

If the President's plan for increasing pension benefits by 50 percent had been placed in effect a year ago the total cost of pension benefits last year instead of being $556,000,000, which it was, would have been $834,000,000.

If the President's plan for increasing withholding taxes on workers by 50 percent had been in effect last year the withholding tax collections instead of being $1,683,000,000 last year, which it was, would have been $2,532,000,000. Thus, under the President's proposal, workers last year to obtain a $278,000,000 increase in their pensions would have been required to pay $844,000,000 in additional withholding taxes, or it would have cost them $3 in increased taxes for every dollar they received in increased benefits.

Higher withholding tax rates, of course, in time will be required to support a higher level of pensions but, it is my opinion, that these increased withholding taxes should not be levied until such time as the pay-out for pensions begins to approach the income from the receipts from withholding taxes.

There is neither need nor wisdom in building up a $20,000,000,000 to $40,000,000,000 old-age and survivors' insurance reserve fund.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a short table giving the year by year collections during the last 12 years of old-age and survivors' insurance from withholding taxes and from interest on the reserve fund and also the year by year disbursements of old-age and survivors' insurance for benefit payments and administration expenses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the table is as follows:

Fiscal data on Federal old-age and survivors insurance system

[In millions of dollars]

| Calendar year | Appropriations to fund [1] | Interest | Total income | Benefits paid | Administrative expenses from fund | Added to fund |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1937 | $514 | $2 | $516 | $1 | (2) | $515 |
| 1938 | 343 | 15 | 358 | 10 | (2) | 348 |
| 1939 | 566 | 27 | 593 | 14 | (2) | 577 |
| 1940 | 607 | 43 | 650 | 35 | $26 | 589 |
| 1941 | 789 | 56 | 845 | 88 | 26 | 731 |
| 1942 | 1,012 | 72 | 1,085 | 131 | 28 | 926 |
| 1943 | 1,239 | 88 | 1,328 | 166 | 29 | 1,132 |
| 1944 | 1,316 | 107 | 1,422 | 209 | 29 | 1,184 |
| 1945 | 1,285 | 134 | 1,420 | 274 | 30 | 1,116 |
| 1946 | 1,295 | 152 | 1,447 | 378 | 40 | 1,029 |
| 1947 | 1,558 | 164 | 1,722 | 466 | 46 | 1,210 |
| 1948 | 1,688 | 281 | 1,969 | 556 | 51 | 1,362 |
| 1937–48 | 12,214 | 1,142 | 13,356 | 2,329 | 305 | 10,722 |

[1] Beginning July 1, 1940, appropriations equal taxes collected, except that after 1946 appropriations include relatively small amounts appropriated to meet benefit costs and administrative costs of the special veterans' survivor benefits of sec. 210 (namely, $375,000 in 1947; $700,000 in 1948; and $3,251,000 in 1949). Prior to July 1, 1940, Congress, in accordance with the provisions of the Social Security Act of 1935, annually appropriated funds to the old-age reserve account based on estimates of amounts required to finance the system on an actuarial basis.

[2] Administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration and the Treasury Department under title II of the Social Security Act and under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act were reimbursed out of the fund beginning Jan. 1, 1940.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. POTTER. I wish to commend the gentleman on his fine statement. I know he has been a champion of this type of legislation ever since he has been in Congress. I wonder if the gentleman could enlighten the House as to the average benefit received under old-age and survivors insurance.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Under old-age and survivors insurance the average benefit as of the present time is about $28 a month.

Mr. POTTER. Is it not true that in many States the old-age assistance program carries a grant or a benefit much higher than the average benefit under old-age and survivors insurance?

Mr. MACK of Washington. The average pension under State old-age assistance, for which the pensioners have paid no withholding tax for their pension, at the present time is $42.25, or $14 more than is paid to those who pay in month after month and year after year in withholding taxes for their Federal old-age and survivors insurance benefits.

Mr. POTTER. In many, many cases, if the benefits should be increased for old-age and survivors insurance, it will be just a matter of transferring a recipient from the old-age assistance rolls, where they possibly are now, to the rolls where they receive benefits under the old-age and survivors insurance?

Mr. MACK of Washington. That, of course, could be the case if all people were covered by old-age and survivors insurance, which I believe they should be. In that case, eventually we would cut out the tremendous cost of State old-age assistance.

Mr. POTTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MACK of Washington. I thank the gentleman from Michigan. He is a former administrator of social security in the State of Michigan and is an especially well informed man on social security and pension problems.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that since the inception of this program there has been paid into the old-age and survivors insurance fund something like $13,000,000,000, and that approximately $2,500,000,000 has been paid out in benefits, leaving almost $11,000,000,000 in the reserve fund?

Mr. MACK of Washington. The gentleman is correct. There is now approximately $11,000,000,000 in the reserve fund of the old-age and survivors insurance. Not only that, but this reserve fund has been increasing for the past several years at the rate of more than $100,000,000 a month.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Is it not conceivable, then, that if this program should be expanded to include additional people, say $20,000,000, this reserve fund could be and would be increased to almost astronomical figures without an increase in the withholding tax rate?

Mr. MACK of Washington. The gentleman is certainly correct on that.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I have been receiving letters from some small-business men who have asked about their prospects of coming under the protection of the old-age and survivors insurance. Does the gentleman's bill make any reference to such people?

Mr. MACK of Washington. My bill provides for the inclusion of all self-employed persons and for the inclusion of many other groups. It is my feeling that we ought to bring as many of the people of the country as possible under old-age and survivors insurance, to the end that everyone will pay during the earning years of their youth into a fund which will finance the benefits which they receive in old age.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. The gentleman made some reference to State old-age pensions. Can the gentleman enlighten us with respect to the cost of State old-age pensions?

Mr. MACK of Washington. State old-age pensions, which are paid for by the taxpayers of the Federal and State Governments, without recipients paying anything in withholding taxes last year cost $1,093,000,000. For the current year, which ends next June 30, these State old-age pensions, for which those receiving them had to pay nothing in withholding taxes, will cost the taxpayers $1,324,000,000. These State pensions, for which the pensioners pay nothing in withholding taxes, will, during the coming year, which begins next July 1, cost $1,980,000,000. The costs of State old-age assistance to taxpayers are increasing not slowly but by leaps and bounds.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MACK of Washington. And I thank the gentleman for his fine contribution. I know he is a thorough student of the growing pension problem and wants it solved correctly.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman made the statement that there is $11,500,000,000 in the reserve fund.

Mr. MACK of Washington. I said $10,700,000,000 in the present reserve.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is it in there or is it not in there? Where is the money? Is that actual cash on hand, or is it I O U's?

Mr. MACK of Washington. All the money the Government has borrowed, whether it has borrowed it from the old-age and survivors insurance fund or from the banks, the insurance companies or the savings and loan companies, is in I O U's, which we call bonds. I see nothing wrong with the Government's borrowing from the old-age and survivors insurance fund and replacing it with interest-bearing bonds.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SCUDDER. May I ask the gentleman a question as to the effect of improvements in medical science which have brought about a greater life span for more people. What is going to be the outcome of this program with the life span becoming greater and greater? Has the gentleman any figures showing the difference between the life span of today and the life span of 5 or 10 years ago? I believe that should be taken into consideration in a program of this sort.

Mr. MACK of Washington. I would say to the gentleman from California that the life span of the average American, thanks to our unmatched and unequaled medical science, is increasing very rapidly. In 1910 in this country there were in the United States approximately 3,900,000 people of 65 years of age or over. They represented 4.3 per cent of the then population of the United States. In 1947, according to the Census Bureau estimate, there were 10,600,000 people in this country 65 years of age or over, representing 7.3 percent of the nation's population. The Census Bureau now estimates that by the year 2000 there will be in this country 21,000,000 persons or about 13 percent of the nation's population who will be 65 years of age or over. The great increase in the numbers of our people who are 65 years of age or older increases the need for a more adequate pension system—and a sounder one.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a table of population growth in the United States of the group which is 65 years of age or older.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks including a table showing the growth, thanks to medical science, on that part of our population which is 65 years of age or older I include the following statement supplied me by the Research Library of Congress.

There are 10,591,000 persons 65 years of age and over in the United States according to the latest United States census estimates—April 1947. This figure represents 7.45 percent of the total estimated population of 142,061,000. The rate at which this percentage is changing is shown in the table set forth below:

United States population and number and percentage, age 65 and over

| Year | Total population | Age 65 and over | Percentage 65 and over |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1910 | 91,972,266 | 3,954,807 | 4.3 |
| 1920 | 105,710,620 | 4,968,399 | 4.7 |
| 1930 | 122,775,046 | 6,629,852 | 5.4 |
| 1940 | 131,669,275 | 8,953,510 | 6.8 |
| 1947 | [1] 142,061,000 | [1] 10,591,000 | [3] 7.45 |
| 1950 | [2] 145,460,000 | [2] 11,200,420 | [3] 7.7 |
| 1960 | [2] 153,375,000 | [2] 13,957,125 | [3] 9.1 |
| 1970 | [2] 159,847,000 | [2] 16,304,394 | [3] 10.2 |
| 1980 | [2] 163,877,000 | [2] 19,009,732 | [3] 11.6 |
| 1990 | [2] 164,585,000 | [2] 21,560,635 | [3] 13.1 |
| 2000 | [2] 163,312,000 | [2] 21,557,184 | [3] 13.2 |

This table, I believe, clearly indicates the magnitude of the old-age pension problem which confronts the Nation. We must find a sound and enduring solution of that problem. I believe that old-age and survivors insurance, if benefits are increased adequately and everyone is brought under that system, offers a sound and enduring solution of that problem.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE 1950 BUDGET AND THE NORTHWEST POWER SHORTAGE

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague [Mr. MACK] from the State of Washington. I have studied his bill, and I believe that if we are going to extend the benefits of social security, we might very wisely take a good look at his bill. It is a very good measure and should be fully considered by the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will have before us the first deficiency appropriation bill for 1949. Under the heading National Military Establishment, Corps of Engineers, and under the subheading of Rivers and Harbors, we have the following comment in the report now before the Congress:

Rivers and harbors: The amount of $10,500,000, a reduction of $1,000,000 in the budget estimates, is recommended for the maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works. The budget estimate contemplates an appropriation of $8,000,000 for McNary lock and dam; $1,500,000 for Ice Harbor lock and dam; and $2,000,000 for Chief Joseph Dam. With respect to the McNary Dam, which is now under construction, the amount is required to initiate work on the south-shore cofferdam and for earning requirements under existing contracts on the north shore. Both the Ice Harbor lock and dam and the Chief Joseph Dam are new projects which are interrelated to the power development of this area. It was testified that the entire power capacity in the country approximates 53,000,000 kilowatts with the demand approaching 52,000,000 kilowatts. While it is recognized that everything possible must be done to promote as rapid completion of these projects as possible in order to alleviate the power shortage in certain areas and, in order for the Government to sooner realize a return on its investment, it is believed that the amount appropriated will not be entirely needed during the balance of the fiscal year, especially in connection with the two projects being initiated. However, the committee does not wish to earmark funds for either of these three projects and leaves it to the Corps of Engineers to effect the best possible utilization of funds recommended in the accompanying bill.

Mr. Speaker, this report is very inconclusive. It leaves many questions unanswered. It makes it essential that we carefully study the hearings in order to determine how these funds should best be allocated.

In order that the Congress and the House of Representatives may have the benefit of studies that I have made in this particular field, I ask unanimous consent to include some statistics that I have prepared, a letter from Mr. Michael W. Straus, Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, and a letter from Major General Crawford, Acting Chief of Engineers. I believe these reports from these men to be factual and that they should aid us in a better understanding of this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, new electric-power installations in the Pacific Northwest will run at least 186,000 kilowatts behind schedule until 1956, if appropriations contemplated by the administration's 1950 budget are not raised by Congress. At least seven projects intended to help offset the Northwest power shortage by that date will be delayed from 6 months to a year or more, six others will proceed as planned, and three will be pushed ahead of previously announced programs. At the allowed rate of construction, load growth will continue to exceed new installations for six more years and the shortage cannot be met for at least 10 years.

These facts were brought out in answers I received this week from the Chief of Army Engineers and Commissioner of Reclamation to letters I wrote them January 26, regarding the ability of the construction agencies to meet the advance program of the Northwest power pool under the 1950 Federal budget. The answers were based on a comparison of actual Budget Bureau requests for the projects for fiscal 1950 with the generator-installation program outlined in schedule R of the Bonneville Power Administration, issued November 10, 1948. This schedule sets forth the dates on which new power supply could be added to the pool if all projects were constructed at the optimum rate consistent with sound engineering and economical construction practice.

The major deficiency rests in the item for Chief Joseph Dam, on the Columbia River 51 miles below Grand Coulee Dam, which should have three generators supplying 193,000 kilowatts by 1956. The President's budget will delay construction of Chief Joseph Dam one full year. Competent officials have estimated $21,000,000 are needed in 1950 to keep this project on schedule; the budget allows $5,000,000 for next year and $2,000,000 supplemental funds in 1949.

Other new power units in the "delayed" category are Albeni Falls, Roza, Chandler, Hill Creek, Meridian—Lookout Point—and Dexter. Ice Harbor and Big Cliff will be 1 year ahead of schedule and Detroit Dam power units 6 months early. The total first-year generation of these three projects, however, is 40,000 kilowatts less than the initial output at Chief Joseph.

I am placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today a table showing the status of each Federal power project in the Pacific Northwest, the schedule according to which Bonneville Administration and the Northwest Power Pool (composed of public and private power distributors) had planned new generator installations, and the effect of the actual budget requests on that schedule.

While it is known that even if we built each of these projects as rapidly as engineering abilities and the supply situations permitted we could not catch up with the Northwest power demand for at least 10 years, these figures will show that the administration requests for construction money fall far below what could and should be done. I intend to ask the Congress to make up the deficiencies in the budget and to authorize the new projects necessary to meet the demand. There are several reasons why these projects should not be delayed:

First. Hydroelectric generation is the cheapest source of new wealth in the Pacific Northwest, putting efficient water to work and saving nearly 100,000,000 barrels of oil yearly and/or 6,000 train loads of commercially important coal yearly for use in areas having no hydro potential. All projects listed are reimbursable, with interest, to the Federal Government.

Second. Domestic demand and security provisions require immediate development of the maximum power potential for mineral, agricultural, industrial, research, and atomic energy purposes.

Third. Construction on a "slow-down" basis increases the net cost of each project.

Fourth. Consistent construction schedules are necessary to intelligent planning by power users. The future of hundreds of small business ventures hangs in jeopardy today because of the "stop-go" planning of these projects from VJ-day, through the President's "freeze order" of August 1946 the budget-appropriations squabbles of the Eightieth Congress, issuance of schedule R in November 1948, and the arbitrary juggling of projects in that schedule by the Budget Bureau in making up the 1950 appropriation requests.

I am also placing in the RECORD the complete text of letters received by me from the Acting Chief of Engineers and the Commissioner of Reclamation, a clear presentation of what must be done if Northwest power development is to go forward on an orderly basis:

COMPARISON OF 1950 BUDGET WITH BPA ADVANCE POWER SCHEDULE

(Compiled by WALT HORAN, Member of Congress, Fifth District, Washington)

RECLAMATION BUREAU PROJECTS

Grand Coulee: Dam complete, 11 generators in, total 18 scheduled for installation by 1952, proceeding on schedule with present funds.

Roza: 10,000 kilowatts power scheduled by 1952, no budget request for power facilities, will fall 1 year behind.

Chandler: 12,000 kilowatts scheduled by 1953, no budget request, 1 year behind.

Hungry Horse: First 104,000 kilowatts scheduled by 1953, on schedule if present request granted in full.

Anderson Ranch: 27,000 kilowatts due in 1951, on schedule.

Palisades: First 17,000 kilowatts due in 1954, can stay on schedule if construction funds granted in 1950.

Upper Scriver Creek: Must be authorized this year to bring in planned 30,000 kilowatts by 1953.

Lower Scriver Creek: 30,000 kilowatts planned by 1953, status same as Upper Scriver.

Garden Valley: 54,000 kilowatts planned by 1954, status same as Upper Scriver.

ARMY ENGINEERS PROJECTS

McNary: First 140,000 kilowatts due 1954, on schedule if all money requests now before Congress are granted.

Lower Monumental: First 60,000 kilowatts due 1956, on schedule.

Chief Joseph: First 192,000 scheduled for 1956, needs $21,000,000 this year to stay on schedule, budget request only $5,000,000, falls 1 year behind.

Ice Harbor: 130,000 kilowatts scheduled for 1955, being pushed 1 year ahead.

Big Cliff: 16,000 kilowatts planned 1956, being pushed 1 year ahead.

Detroit: Fifty thousand kilowatts scheduled 1954, pushed 6 months ahead.

Lookout Point (Meridian): Power features not yet authorized, 115,000 kilowatts planned for 1955, 6 months behind, more if authorization delayed.

Hill Creek: 20,000 kilowatts planned for 1955, project must be authorized immediately if delay of more than 1 year to be averted.

Dexter: 15,000 kilowatts planned for 1955, status same as Hill Creek.

Albeni Falls: 43,000 kilowatts planned for 1955, could be kept on schedule if authorization and initial construction funds granted this year; otherwise 1 year behind.

Hells Canyon: First 170,000 kilowatts planned for 1957, can be kept on schedule if authorized this year and construction begun by 1951.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1949.

Hon. WALT HORAN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HORAN: I have your letter of January 26 requesting information as to whether the Bureau of Reclamation, with funds made available as requested in the 1949 and 1950 budget, will be able to proceed with new projects in accordance with schedule R of the Bonneville Power Administration, revised November 10, 1948.

The power developments in the Northwest in which the Bureau is directly concerned are Columbia Basin project (Grand Coulee power plant), Yakima project (Roza and Chandler power plants), Hungry Horse project, Hells Canyon project, and the projects in the Upper Snake Basin, power plants of which are listed in schedule R. The status of the power developments on these projects is as follows:

Grand Coulee: Schedule will be maintained if supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1949 and regular estimate for fiscal year 1950 are approved by the Congress.

Roza and Chandler power plants are not included in the present budget and Roza will be postponed to fiscal year 1953 and Chandler power plant to fiscal year 1954.

Hungry Horse project will be maintained on schedule if appropriations now requested are provided.

Hells Canyon project is not as yet authorized so there are no appropriations yet requested.

Anderson ranch project will be on schedule except possibly the transmission line for which appropriations were denied last year. Appropriations are again being requested in the presentation for 1950 in the hope of expediting this construction. If materials can be made available in time, the schedule can be approximately maintained.

The Upper and Lower Scriver Creek and Garden Valley plants are part of the Mountain Home project which is, as yet, not authorized, and, accordingly, there are no requests for appropriations in the present budget presentation.

Palisades project: The budget presentations for 1950 include funds in the amount of $205,000 for preconstruction work on Palisades project so that construction of the dam and reservoir may proceed as soon as agreement is reached with the water users. The present schedule of installation of generating units in the Palisades power plant calls for one unit in fiscal year 1954 and another unit in fiscal year 1955.

I appreciate your interest in this matter. Your conclusion that, even if we build these dams as fast as possible, we cannot catch up with the demand for at least 10 years, coincides with my own opinion. This is true not only for the Northwest area but in all areas of the West in which the Bureau is directly concerned. I might even go further and say that it applies to the whole United States. I regret that this fact is not more generally realized, as the most rapid progress practical in developing our potential hydroelectric resources is the only rational one. Not only has our power market overtaken us, but so far as we can foresee now, the market far into the future will be limited only by the available supply of low-cost power and not by natural unrestricted demand. Also, the concentrated development of fuel-electric plants in the past several years and the restricted development of our hydro resources simply mean accelerating the consumption of our irreplaceable resources of oil, gas, and coal, while at the same time a large part of our perpetual water-power resources continues to waste. Such a procedure simply does not make good sense.

If I can assist you further in this matter, please call upon me.

Sincerely yours,

MICHAEL W. STRAUS,
Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 8, 1949.

HON. WALT HORAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HORAN: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 26, 1949, with which you forwarded a copy of the Bonneville Power Administration's schedule R, showing its current recommendations for future generator installations in the Northwest. You inquire whether the Corps of Engineers' projects in the Northwest can be constructed to meet schedule R with the funds included in the President's budget for fiscal year 1950 and in the approved 1949 supplemental estimate. You also request information for comparison with schedule R on when generators can be installed at the various projects with the funds included in the above budgets.

With funds presently included in the approved 1950 budget and 1949 supplemental estimate, and assuming adequate appropriations in subsequent years, generator installations at McNary and Lower Monumental are expected to meet schedule R. At Ice Harbor and Big Cliff, generator installations will be 1 year earlier and at Detroit 6 months earlier, but at Chief Joseph installations will be 1 year later than schedule R.

The construction of Lookout Point Reservoir (called Meridian in BPA schedule) will continue rapidly with funds included in the 1950 budget. Although the power features at this project are not yet authorized, provisions have been made to readily include such features when authorized. The entire projects at Hill Creek and Dexter sites have not yet been authorized. Hill Creek is upstream and will provide supplemental storage to Lookout Point. Dexter is downstream and will regulate the flows from Lookout Point. If the power features at Lookout Point, and the Dexter and Hill Creek projects are authorized for construction by the Eighty-first Congress and funds are appropriated for fiscal year 1951, power installations at these three projects can be expected about 6 months later than called for in schedule R.

Albeni Falls has not yet been authorized for construction. Senate bill 142, introduced by Senator CORDON on January 5, 1949, would authorize construction of this project. The Secretary of the Army forwarded on January 27, 1949, to the chairman of the Committee on Public Works, United States Senate, a report recommending early construction of the Albeni Falls project. If authorized by the Eighty-first Congress and funds are appropriated for fiscal year 1951, generator installations may be expected 1 year later than schedule R. If funds are appropriated for fiscal year 1950, schedule R can be met.

The Hells Canyon project has not yet been authorized for construction. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors will complete in the near future its review of the report on the Columbia River basin in which the division engineer, North Pacific division, has recommended early construction of the Hells Canyon project. If authorized for construction in this Congress and sufficient funds are appropriated for 1951 and subsequent years, it is expected that generators can be installed at this project to meet schedule R.

To meet schedule R, additional funds will be required in fiscal year 1950 for the Chief Joseph project, and early authorizations and appropriations are required for the Hells Canyon, Albeni Falls, Hill Creek, and Dexter projects and for the power features at Lookout Point.

Sincerely yours,

R. C. CRAWFORD,
Major General,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the close of the legislative program and after any other special orders previously agreed to, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] may address the House for 15 minutes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of all mercies, we give Thee most humble and hearty thanks for all Thy goodness and loving kindnesses to us. Grant us in all our doubts and uncertainties the grace to ask what Thou wouldst have us do, that the spirit of wisdom may save us from all false choices, and that in Thy light we may see light and in Thy straight path we may not stumble. Grant that this day we may fall into no errors and all our doings be righteous in Thy sight.

Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LANE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have permission to sit today during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address by Mrs. NORTON, of New Jersey, delivered over the American Broadcasting Co. on Saturday, February 5, 1949.

CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the recent farcical trial and subsequent conviction of Cardinal Mindszenty is further evidence of the operation of the Communist system. The Communist philosophy advocates a deliberate debasement of the dignity of the human being to the level of a common beast. How else would such a philosophy survive if each and every individual was not subjected to the domineering will of the state?

That trial was a political trial and had an imperialistic end. Obviously, in order to attain the imperialistic end, the proceedings at the trial had to be served to the outside world in such manner so as to indicate the apparent innocence of the state. Thus the cardinal was presumed to have pleaded guilty. This in itself serves as valuable propaganda for the Communist ends at home, even though it may not necessarily be accepted in a democratic country. But was it actually the cardinal who pleaded guilty? How are we to know whether Cardinal Mindszenty ever appeared at the trial? The trial was certainly not open to everyone and was not a free trial. Some say the cardinal was a victim of chemical treatment; others say he was drugged. The fact is, he is said to have confessed his guilt to some of the charges. But why could not the trial have taken on a Hollywood atmosphere and substituted a double in the cardinal's stead? That would not have been difficult to do, for we have no proof that he was there at all except that the controlled Communist press tells us that he was there. It is very likely that Cardinal Mindszenty never appeared at his trial, that he was either in a prison somewhere or was dead at the time.

It is absolutely necessary that a Communist-controlled government employ any expedient measure to erase the life of any human being who stands opposed to that government because of its false philosophy, particularly where that government condones the outrageous extinction of Christian doctrine.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, on which I have the honor to serve, has just reported a pension bill for World War I and World War II veterans. In my opinion the bill that has been reported has been reported without proper and due consideration by the committee. In fact, seven members of that committee walked out of the hearings this morning because of the high-handed and arbitrary tactics of the gentleman from Mississippi, chairman of the committee.

This bill provides that an individual, not having an honorable discharge, and ineligible for membership in major veterans' organizations, is still eligible to receive pension under the provisions of this bill.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, that the Veterans' Committee members never saw this bill until it was presented by the gentleman from Mississippi, Chairman RANKIN, this morning. Surely this House does not want to take up a bill that was only considered by the committee for seven brief minutes.

During my service on this committee I have always been sympathetic to legislation designed for the welfare of our veterans and their dependents; however, I cannot support a bill that would ultimately cost over $6,000,000,000 per year, nor would I ask this House to do so unless the Members were sure that ample hearings had been held. If this bill is brought up after the necessary number of days, under the new rules, I sincerely urge that the membership of this House will, regardless of possible political consequences, recommit the bill to the committee for further consideration. If this is done, I can assure the Members that a pension bill will be favorably reported by the committee that will be fair and equitable to both veterans and citizens.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] walked out on the veterans this morning and that a few uninformed, or I probably should say misinformed, members of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs went along with him; but a large majority of the members of the committee remained, went through the entire bill, and voted to report it out.

As to my being arbitrary, as a matter of fact, I put that question to a vote, and the committee sustained me, which put the gentleman on the spot, and that is when he walked out.

I want to say that a majority of the members of the committee voted to raise the age limit to 65 years and voted to follow the Spanish-American War veterans pension law by providing them a pension of $90 a month—just what the Spanish War veterans are being paid now.

Mr. HUBER. Is the gentleman discussing what occurred in executive session?

Mr. RANKIN. I am talking about what the gentleman spoke of here a moment ago.

The gentleman gets up here and misinforms the House, and I am trying to correct him. If the gentleman had stayed there and voted he would not have any "gripe."

We do not intend for our old veterans, when they pass the age of their earning capacity, to have to go to the poorhouse to get a meal ticket.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEARNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Mr. Eric Johnston.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a Lincoln Day address delivered by his colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] in Paterson, N. J.

Mr. HALE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one an editorial appearing in the Bangor (Maine) Daily News, and in the other an article by Roscoe Pound on the present situation in China.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. HILL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by a former Member of the House.

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by his colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. RIVERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by his colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., at Charleston, S. C.

Mr. WALSH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one an article appearing in the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Times, February 12, and in the other an editorial appearing in the same newspaper with reference to the celebration of the birthday of John L. Lewis.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it becomes necessary for me to rise in support and corroboration of the statements that have been made by the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Arizona regarding what did happen in our Committee on Veterans' Affairs this morning. I want the House to know that I attended every daily session of the hearings that were held on that bill, and to say that those of us who walked out, as a class, are uninformed is a reflection not upon those Members but upon the way in which those committee hearings have been held. I think that every one of us was justified in leaving a meeting of the committee. It did not operate in accordance with the rules of this House.

Mr. PHILLIPS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not have any desire to become entangled in any personal fight or disagreement between Members of this House, but I have been present at all committee hearings on a uniform-pension bill. I have heard the discussions on both sides. It has been fair. It has been an effort to keep faith with the men that have worn the uniform with honor in the defense of this Republic. The American Legion, the VFW, the Disabled American Veterans, and all great veterans' organizations have been given fair and courteous treatment before our committee. I introduced a bill myself, No. 5810. My chief concern is in promoting the welfare of the veterans and the American people. I trust that no veteran who has defended his country will ever be forced upon the charity of others when he becomes ill and disabled.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the committees of this House operate under the same rules as the House.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House so provide.

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know further whether this House has a right to appeal from a ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Any Member has the right to appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CHUDOFF. I should like to know whether, under that ruling, members of the committee can appeal from the ruling of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. They can.

Mr. CHUDOFF. So that the chairman of a committee who had his ruling appealed from would have no right other than to allow that appeal to go before the entire committee; is that right, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House provide that the rules of the House are made the rules of its standing committees so far as applicable. The Members of the House have a right to appeal from a decision of the Chair. That would also apply in a committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Suppose a question is raised here and a roll call is asked for, and one-fifth of the Members rise and ask for a roll call, and the Chair holds that a roll call is called for, no appeal from that ruling would be in order, would it?

The SPEAKER. That would be in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly. That is just what happened in the committee this morning. I demanded a roll call and asked for a showing of hands, and more than one-fifth voted for a roll call. One member tried to appeal from the decision, which, of course, was ridiculous. Then a few of them walked out, evidently to keep from going on record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was only answering the parliamentary inquiry. He does not know what happened in the committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and include certain statements and excerpts.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the general assembly of his State.

Mr. YATES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Chicago Sun-Times.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a report from a soil conservation district.

Mr. HARE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in the Emory Alumnus.

Mr. McSWEENEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some statistics he has gathered relative to the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous matter. In one instance, the Government Printing Office advises me the cost will be $159.75 and that it will take 2¼ pages of the RECORD, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I am a new Member of Congress. I am also an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, having served 5½ years—3½ years of this time overseas. I have a deep and sincere interest in the veteran.

I believe that our Nation owes a great debt of gratitude to the men who served it, and who helped to save our way of life—the great American way.

I deem it a singular honor and privilege to be able to serve on the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Today the Committee on Veterans' Affairs had under consideration a general pension bill for veterans. In my opinion, the people of our country are grateful that these men were able to preserve our democratic processes and they would like to make this feeling manifest through a measure of this kind. However, even while such a measure is under consideration, we must not yield any of our democratic processes. The veteran fought to preserve our democratic way—and as a Member of Congress—it is my solemn duty to continue to fight to preserve that way. And I intend to do so unceasingly.

This opportunity I do not believe was afforded to us because of the objectionable way in which the chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee conducted today's meeting.

The chairman of that committee has charged that seven members ran out on the veterans when considering the general pension bill. I take issue with that remark. My interest in the welfare of the veteran is as great as his—but I am strenuously opposed to what I regard as the undemocratic method he has used in the conduct of today's meeting. I feel that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] who walked out with us, reflected a commendable attitude.

I did not walk out on the veteran. I shall never walk out on the veteran. I shall always fight for the welfare of the veteran. But I shall also continue to fight for the things the veteran fought for—the preservation of our democratic principles.

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, I too am a new Member of Congress. The gentleman from Mississippi would like you to believe that the reason the members of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs walked out this morning did so because they are walking out on the veterans. I think that is an unfair statement. I believe the first obligation of the Congress is to the veteran. I think every member that walked out this morning walked out only because the chairman was not adhering to the rules of the House, and was acting in a dictatorial fashion.

AUTHORIZING READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, February 22, 1949, Washington's Farewell Address may be read by a Member to be designated by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be permitted to sit today during general debate.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand there is important legislation here. Will we be notified when the general debate is over and when the bill is being read for amendment?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will see that that is done. The rule calls for 3 hours of general debate.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that the committee will be notified?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will see to it that that is done.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, with that explanation I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 355 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be permitted to have until midnight to file a report on the bill H. R. 782.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 99 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, notwithstanding any rule of the House to the contrary, it shall be in order on Tuesday, February 15, 1949, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year 1949, and for other purposes, and all points of order against the bill or any of the provisions contained therein are hereby waived. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, later I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 2632, the first deficiency appropriation bill. The rule waives all points of order and provides for 3 hours of general debate, after which the bill will be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, the older Members know my position with respect to legislation carried in appropriation bills. However, I think I owe it to the new Members to explain that it is the duty and the function of the legislative committees to bring in legislative proposals.

The regular rules of the House preclude the Committee on Appropriations from bringing in new legislation, its jurisdiction being confined to making appropriations. Notwithstanding the fact that I have been opposed and am still opposed to the Committee on Appropriations reporting legislation in their general appropriation bills, I feel in this instance that this being a deficiency appropriation bill a waiver of points of order should be had and I favor the passage of the bill for the following reasons. Unfortunately the Republican Eightieth Congress went out of its way through waiver of points of order in restricting certain appropriations which have affected and which might affect the efficiency of some departments of government and which even make it impossible for some of the departments to perform their duties and functions as authorized by the Congress. Consequently I feel we are justified in agreeing to this rule which waives points of order on certain items in the bill.

Before I go any further in discussing provisions of the bill which will later on be explained by the chairman and members of the Committee on Appropriations, I am sure to the satisfaction of the House, I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations has filed and there is available to all Members a report showing the various appropriations provided for, including those that would be subject to points of order. I would advise the new Members to familiarize themselves with this report because, while 3 hours of general debate are provided for, a reading of the report will give them an opportunity to know the contents of the bill. I am satisfied that after careful consideration by the membership they will vote for the rule and later vote for the bill. I think the bill has been carefully prepared. There are reductions from the original amounts asked for by the budget to the extent, I believe, of $14,000,000. That shows that the Committee on Appropriations has been careful in passing on this legislation before reporting the same to the House. I urge the members to adopt the rule and vote for the passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has explained, House Resolution 99 makes in order the consideration of H. R. 2632, a bill to make appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year which ends June 30. The rule also provides for 3 hours of general debate and, in addition, which is very important, waives all points of order on the different sections of the bill.

I wish to say with all the seriousness and conviction at my command that every Member of the House had better look over this bill carefully. I have served for a great many years on the Rules Committee, and H. R. 2632 is one of the most cleverly drawn measures that I have seen in a very long time. When it was brought before the Rules Committee it was not even in printed form. It had not been reported from the committee, and it had not even been introduced in the House. It was practically impossible to get any information as to what the measure contained. Then some of us on the committee began to ask some questions, and we found that there are many provisions and sections in this bill which are actually of a type that the House should consider, as separate pieces of legislation or each item by itself, and decide for itself, after due consideration, just what policy it desires to follow on such widely different important issues.

For instance, no one can find any fault with some of the sections in this bill, such as those taking care of the needs of the Vice President, or the usual payments to widows of deceased Members. I am sure something has to be done for the Capitol Building and the House and Senate chambers. So that is proper legislation in a measure like this.

The section providing additional fees for jurors in the Federal courts can easily be explained. Also the provision to carry out the intent and purpose of the new law relative to the President's salary, and also for the other matters which have been authorized by the Congress.

Then the bill carries some other provisions. For instance, grants to States for public assistance in connection with administration of unemployment compensation. Incidentally I think it might be well for all Members of the House to check rather carefully to find out just what compensation will be given to each State to carry out the provisions of this law. I can say to you frankly that, regardless of political affiliation, the public officials of the State of Ohio are not at all satisfied with the treatment which that great State has received in this connection.

Then I want to refer, please, to page 7, line 19, the item for the Tennessee Valley Authority. I wonder how many of you can read that section just by a cursory reading, and determine that it is a provision to build, to construct, and to put into operation, the Johnsonville steam plant, which this Congress turned down by direct legislative action, when it refused to put the Tennessee Valley Authority and the United States Government fairly and squarely into the business of producing electric power. That, and nothing more nor less, is all this steam plant section of the bill amounts to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If the gentleman will give me additional time, I will be glad to yield to him. Yes, if the gentleman will give me 5 minutes extra, I will be more than glad to yield to the gentleman.

When you vote for this rule waiving these points of order, you will make it so they can put into operation this steam plant down in the Tennessee Valley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This steam plant is to be constructed at an expense of $2,950,000 of the taxpayers' money, to do something that we have been told all these years the Tennessee Valley Authority never intended to do; that is, to go into direct competition with our privately owned public utilities.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

I want to go on, if I may. Here in the bill is a provision to continue the life of the War Assets Administration. The House has already passed a bill, just this last week, to extend its life, but we do not know what the Senate or the President may do about it. It might surprise some of you to find that the President may want to do something about liquidating these matters.

I want to go a little further in the discussion of the bill quickly because of time limitation; I want to refer to line 17 on page 16. The entire intent and purpose, force and effect of this particular section is to put Mike Straus and Richard Boke back on the pay roll out in California on the Central Valley project. You and I know that a law was passed by the last session of Congress to require that licensed and properly accredited engineers be named for supervisory work of this type because a situation developed out there which was so scandalous, and the waste of the money of the taxpayers of this country has been so great, that, in the opinion of congressional committees which have been investigating, something had to be done.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I will yield if the gentleman from Illinois will grant me more time.

If you want to put Mr. Straus and Mr. Boke back on the pay roll and permit this same sort of wasteful activity to go on, then vote for this rule; but if you want to stand by the legislation previously enacted by the Congress, then vote against the rule. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this rule should be voted down. It is time that we bring an end to the waiving of points of order on appropriation bills. Yes, it is time we stop certain committees of this House from legislating by circumvention without permitting the Members of the House to really know what they are voting on. I hope this rule will be voted down. So I ask for a vote of "No" on the adoption of this rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE].

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I concur with my distinguished colleague from Ohio, Mr. BROWN, that this membership should have full information on this measure—indeed, on every measure that is presented to the House. I would not willingly be a party to any procedure depriving the House of information. Appropriation bills are by their nature difficult to draft and difficult to present. Those of us not serving on that great committee must depend upon the report and hearings accompanying each bill and upon the debate. At this moment the provisions of the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1949, are not in issue, nor is the continuing controversy of "legislation in appropriation bills" in issue.

The question is, Shall the House follow the recommendation of its Committee on Rules and consider the proposed deficiency appropriation bill without the privilege of attack upon its many items by the use of points of order?

This procedure for the consideration of such a measure is by no means new or unusual. It is not inconsistent with the customs and practice of this body. The position of the gentleman from Ohio in requesting the House to vote against the adoption of the rule is, however, seemingly inconsistent. During the last Congress and for many, many years before, appropriation bills were consistently considered under similar rules.

It is a good rule. It is a necessary rule, for it permits the expeditious consideration of the many and varied problems and issues arising almost daily before the Congress. For example: The bill we seek to consider provides funds for the widows of two of our deceased colleagues. Should it be necessary to refer such an accepted practice to a legislative committee for authorizing legislation? We think not. But without the adoption of this rule a point of order properly raised would likely be sustained. That, to be sure, would not be done. It is an example, however, of the necessity and correctness of this character of procedure.

This rule is democratic. It permits any Member to challenge any part of the bill with which he disagrees by offering an amendment, and it permits the House, by a majority vote, to effect any change its will dictates.

This rule is fair for it makes in order 3 hours of general debate. During that time any Member who desires can surely inquire fully into any or all provisions.

I, too, regret that the Committee on Appropriations has found it necessary at times to write into its bills legislation. I regretted that in the Eightieth Congress. For instance, the matter discussed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] concerning the Bureau of Reclamation, the hiring of certain personnel, was a provision of an appropriation bill passed by the Eightieth Congress. That appropriation bill came to this floor under a similar rule—one waiving points of order. I have that resolution in my hand. It was House Resolution 615, Eightieth Congress. It was recommended by the Committee on Rules of that Congress. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] was then a member of that committee.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The fact of the matter is that provision was not in the bill as it was reported to the House by the Appropriations Committee. It was put in by amendment. If it was out of order when it was offered, a point of order could have been made against it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Inasmuch as the gentleman has referred to me, I call his attention to the fact mentioned by the gentleman from New York that the item to which he refers was not in the bill at the time a rule was granted. It was placed in on the floor of the House by an amendment offered by a Democrat from California, by the way, a member of the minority at that time. It was the result of legislation which had been introduced and passed in the Senate. It was introduced in the Senate by Senator DOWNEY, of California. That was not partisan. It was just a very, very good American move.

Mr. LYLE. That is the point I would impress upon you. This procedure is not partisan, nor is it restrictive. Under this rule, any germane amendment may be offered and may be adopted.

It may well be that the House in its wisdom will retain the restrictive clause adopted during the previous Congress. Assuredly, it can do so.

Consideration of the bill under this rule by no means insures its passage in toto. A "yea" vote on the rule does not and is not intended to bind any Member in support of the measure in whole or in part. It permits orderly consideration. It permits the issues to be considered by a majority. It prohibits an individual from successfully urging points of order against individual items and provisions of the bill.

The adoption of this rule is consistent with good legislative procedure and is in accord with the custom and practice of the House. The issues—many of them justly controversial—that will be raised during the consideration of the bill on its merits can be resolved in an orderly and democratic way. I urge the adoption of the rule.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire to use.

Mr. Speaker, for some years I have been disturbed about the tendency of the Appropriations Committee to absorb the function of legislating, and I am not criticizing individual members of that committee.

In the bill covered by the pending rule there are something like 10 of those instances. I do not intend upon this occasion to discuss any but 1 of them, which will be found at the bottom of page 16 of the bill and has to do with legislation passed by the last Congress prescribing certain qualifications for the Commissioner of Reclamation, the Assistant Commissioner, and regional directors in the reclamation-project areas.

I think it fair to the House to give the Members, and it must be brief because my time is not long, the background of that legislation. I happen to be familiar with it because I was a member of a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments directed by the full committee to investigate publicity and propaganda activities of the executive departments, a field in which we knew at the time the bureaucracy had been engaged over many, many years at ever-increasing expense until the information reached us that a total of $75,000,000 was being spent by publicity agencies of the various departments.

In investigating the publicity propaganda efforts of the Bureau of Reclamation we stumbled upon some exceedingly interesting and, I might say, distressing facts. Those facts were submitted in a report by our committee to the Congress, but I doubt if that report, which was made late in the session, was read by a great many Members in the confusion of the closing days.

Going back as briefly as I can to tell the story—and it is not a very nice story—the budget recommended to the Congress in the early winter of 1947 an appropriation of $30,000,000 to carry on the work in the Central Valley of California project, whose headquarters are at Sacramento. According to the budget estimates there would be an unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1947, of something like $10,000,000. The budget recommended the reappropriation of that $10,000,000 and an additional $20,000,000 of new money, making a total of $30,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations of the House, and later the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, found that the accounts and the reports of the reclamation district out there in the Central Valley project were most unreliable. When inquiries were made as to how much money they would actually have left to spend at the end of the fiscal year it was found, in the first instance, that they reported they would have $19,000,000 instead of $10,000,000, and then we found in the papers of the Department a report from Sacramento itself to Mr. Straus, the Commissioner of Reclamation, that actually they would have $25,000,000 left unexpended. Mr. Straus withheld this information from the Congress. And finally, in desperation, either the Senate committee or the House committee appealed to the Bureau of the Budget to actually find out how much money they would have left unexpended at the end of the fiscal year, and the budget reported in round figures $21,000,000. So, the Congress, acting in accordance with the recommendation of the budget, appropriated the $21,000,000 unexpended balance, and added $9,000,000 plus in order to make the total expendable in the next fiscal year $30,000,000, almost exactly the figure recommended by the President.

Now, what happened? The Bureau of Reclamation was outraged by this. It began agitating in California against the stinginess of the Congress. We found any number of examples of that. But, let me tell you what that regional office out there did. The man at the head of the regional office was a man named Richard L. Boke. He had never had the slightest experience as an engineer, nor had he ever administered any large undertaking. Under him was a man named Calland, his first assistant. On June 17, 1947, this man Calland sent out a letter to all of the Reclamation officials in the Sacramento Valley region. On June 17 the Congress was just finishing up the appropriation bills, and it was then perfectly apparent that the Central Valley project was going to get $30,000,000. I will read you a portion of that letter, which was dated June 17, 1947:

> Subject: Means of effectuating the regional director's responsibilities for construction on programing and execution, region 2
> 1. For reasons valid or otherwise, the construction program in the region has fallen far behind schedule. Because of failure to meet estimated progress, large amounts of appropriated funds have remained unspent at fiscal year ends. This fact has brought severe criticism upon us from the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner, from members of congressional appropriations committees, and from others.
> 2. The heavy carry-over from the current fiscal year (1947) plus an appropriation in the order of amounts recently passed by the Senate and House of Representatives will give us a total of funds available for fiscal year 1948 which is far above that required to meet our current rate of spending. The Secretary and the Commissioner are insistent that 1948 funds be spent early in the year—by January 1, if possible.

There is an order sent out with the approval of the high command, that, despite the fact that the Congress said they should have $30,000,000 to cover an entire fiscal year, they must spend it in half a year; and that was done, under the most peculiar circumstances.

As late as September 1947, after the new fiscal year had started, there was a meeting of the reclamation officials at Salt Lake City, about September 1, at which it was generally understood that there was sufficient money left in the appropriations to go at least until February 1, 1948, at which time the Congress would be in session and a deficiency could be asked for, if necessary. Nothing was said about their going broke, until suddenly, on November 26, 1947, a conference met at Sacramento at the regional office, from which it was announced to California and the entire western coast that there was no money left, that all major contracts had to be suspended. Incidentally, Boke, the regional director, did not attend the conference. He had gone off on a vacation 3 or 4 days before.

Mr. Boke upon the stand said, "Yes," he knew about Calland's letter. He had not heard of it, he said, although Calland was his first assistant, until it had been out for 5 or 6 or 7 days. We asked him if he took any measures to counteract that letter which carried the order to this vast organization. He said, "No," he had not. We asked him why he had not done so. For administrative reasons, he said. That is all the explanation we could get.

I asked him if he thought the Calland letter was in conformity with the intent of the Congress, and he admitted it was not.

What happened? The contracts were closed down. One thousand six hundred employees of the contractors were thrown out of work. The contractors filed claims for damages amounting to $1,900,000. Were any Federal employees suspended from employment? Not one. They kept them all on, although most of the work in the field had stopped.

Senator WHERRY heard of this thing a day or two before it happened. He was completely surprised. The members of our Committee on Appropriations did not hear of it until afterward. They were completely surprised.

The instant that close-down took effect they flooded the California newspapers with violent attacks against the Congress for not having appropriated enough money. Now, that is the fact. There is your propaganda, deliberate, although they had violated all decent rules of financial management in spending in 6 months the amount of money which the Congress said should last them for 12 months. That is the fact.

The committee employed one of the best-known chartered public accountants in San Francisco to look into the books of that office at Sacramento, the regional office.

After a lengthy investigation and auditing he found that instead of their being broke on November 26 there were $7,000,000 still left unspent. That is the kind of administration we had. It did not stop there. I have referred to the meeting at Salt Lake City attended by reclamation officers from the Western States. It was attended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of Reclamation, Mr. Straus, as well as all the regional directors and engineers. In the appropriation bill which was passed applicable to the year commencing July 1, 1948, the Congress had seen fit to reduce the appropriations for their information and publicity services from $150,000 to $50,000. Of course, that was with the intent and in the expectation that the personnel employed in this publicity propaganda business—and we saw a great deal of the publications and many of them were not at all sensible—would be dropped from the pay roll. Did that happen? Not one of them was dropped from the pay roll. In the meeting at Salt Lake City Mr. Straus, the Commissioner of Reclamation, described how they had avoided dropping anybody from the pay roll. He said he changed the name plates of the persons: he transferred them to jobs with different names and left them on the pay roll.

You may be interested to know what the chief engineer of the Reclamation Service said about that. The chief engineer, Mr. Young, made a speech before that gathering, and we obtained transcripts of all the speeches, in which he said—I quote:

> There was a legal procedure involved there and we even went so far as to perjure ourselves to get ourselves out of the woods. It didn't amount to anything in money, but the principle is there.

There you have it—he admitted perjury.

Now that is the atmosphere in which this thing has been run by Straus and Boke. I am telling you the truth about it. Another little incident occurred out there which may be of interest. It may not be important, but the Secretary of the Interior was present at that Salt Lake City meeting and made an address. He was denouncing the Congress, as they all did. This merely indicates the contempt in which certain elements of the bureaucracy hold the Congress. He was denouncing the Congress and he said apropos of his connections and contacts with the Congress:

When you try to explain these matters to some "jass-ack" from across the river who has never had anything to do with such a construction program in his life, why you really got to have an excuse, and then I doubt it will do any good.

"Jass-acks," I greet you!

Well, I asked him in the hearings:

What river did you have in mind, Mr. Secretary?

Secretary KRUG. I do not recall, but I meant the general problem of explaining carry-overs to anyone. * * *

Mr. WADSWORTH. To what river did you refer?

Secretary KRUG. Perhaps the Mississippi—I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am disappointed. I thought perhaps you were going to say the Hudson.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the facts which were brought out, and many others which I have not related to you—many others—the Congress last year provided, in an amendment to an appropriation bill, to be sure, as a restriction on the expenditure of funds, that hereafter public funds shall not be expended for the salaries of the Commissioner of Reclamation and the Assistant Commissioner of Reclamation or a regional director, unless that officer has had 5 years' experience as an engineer and administrator. That provision took effect on January 1 of this year. I suppose Mr. Straus and Mr. Boke are out of office. Here we have in an appropriation bill a provision to put them back. The Committee on Public Lands has had no chance whatsoever to look into this thing, and as I understand it, it falls rightly within the jurisdiction of that committee. I do not think it is the part of the Committee on Appropriations to bring in an item like this asking a waiver of all points of order, in order that those two men, whose incompetence was demonstrated over and over again, may be reappointed. I am not violating any confidence. It is a matter of public knowledge that a sterling Democrat on our subcommittee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILSON] wrote his own report about those people and was just as severe as the report written by the other members on the Republican side. There was no party division on that subcommittee. I am hoping that in view of this situation the Public Lands Committee will be given a chance to look into these things, which they will not have if this rule is adopted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As a member of the Public Lands Committee, I want to extend my appreciation to the gentleman for making this information available to me and other members of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is all in our committee report.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This information has not been before our committee heretofore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WADSWORTH] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, all of the Members who were here in the Eightieth Congress, when the Republicans were in power, remember that that restriction was placed in the appropriation bill then under consideration, stopping the payment to those two men, and also a restriction on expenditures in reclamation. It was passed when only a few Members were on the floor of the House.

This matter had been considered by three committees of the Congress and by the Senate Appropriations and the House Appropriations Committee, and both committees found no reason to take any action against either Commissioner Straus or Mr. Boke. Both committees, by nearly unanimous action, recommended that appropriations be provided for both these gentlemen because the committees undoubtedly realized that while the Reclamation Division employed hundreds of engineers, it was also quite necessary that the Division be staffed with men possessing administrative and executive ability, which both these gentlemen have demonstrated in long years of Government service. These men sought to protect the public interest, and the fight against them were by those who were more interested in the private power interests.

Mr WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I am sorry I cannot yield now.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has quoted some speeches. We all sometimes make speeches here and there, and sometimes use words that may not be proper or that would not appeal to everyone. Now, the gentleman has paid a great deal of attention to it, and I hope that he is not being misled, as other people have been misled in California, due to the publicity that was given to this matter by the private power corporations that were opposed to the rulings of Straus and the Department of Reclamation, because they were trying to safeguard and protect the efforts on the part of the Government to construct, build, and complete projects in the interest of the public and not in the interest of a few private power interested corporations.

I am informed that a great deal of advertising space in California newspapers was used and paid for by the private corporations opposed to the ruling of the Secretary of the Interior and the Bureau of Reclamation refusing to yield on the 160-acre limit that Congress established, and because they failed to grant the things the private interests were seeking which would have been against the best interests of the Government and the people in that section of the country.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. HAVENNER. Can the gentleman say whether the Rules Committee was given any information about the very large sums of money expended by the private power companies through the newspapers and advertising agencies in the Central Valley area to persuade the people of California that the Government's program for public control of the power development on the Central Valley project was an evil thing? Does he know that millions of dollars were expended by the private power companies of California through newspapers and other agencies of propaganda to conduct this enormous advertising campaign? And that the power companies charged up to operating expenses the cost of these newspaper advertisements and the other propaganda, and that those operating expenses in turn were charged up to the ratepayers of these private corporations, who are taxpayers of California? Has that information been brought before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. SABATH. No; it was not brought to the attention of the Committee on Rules; but I have received such information from certain sources that have been opposed to the activities of these large private power corporations which are trying in every conceivable way to obtain benefits to the disadvantage of the Government and the taxpayers.

Now, may I say to my Republican friends that an outstanding Republican Member in the last Congress, Mr. Robert Jones, of Ohio, chairman of the subcommittee, insisted on the floor that the money should be expended, that these improvements should be proceeded with in haste, and that if he had the power he would demand, and urge, bringing about still greater speed in the execution of these projects that were criticized by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I regret I cannot yield. I have the floor and shall delete anything the gentleman may have said which the reporter may have taken down in his interruption during the course of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, personally, I am satisfied that the Committee on Appropriations that has heard the evidence used good judgment in embodying in the bill before us the various provisions contained therein striking out restrictions put in by the Republican Congress so as to hamstring the various departments in every conceivable way in the performance of their duty in the interest of the country. It was generally recognized then, and it is known now, the American people have spoken and disagreed with the policy of the celebrated Eightieth Congress.

In view of the existing situation I feel that the rule should be adopted and the bill passed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 242, nays 121, not voting 70, as follows:

Mr. ANGELL and Mr. HARRIS changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report accompanying the bill, H. R. 2632, does not comply with the so-called Ramseyer rule.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that although the resolution which has been adopted waives points of order against the bill by the provisions contained therein it does not specifically waive or exempt the so-called Ramseyer rule which requires that a report accompanying a bill, including appropriation bills, shall set forth in appropriate type the text of the statute it is proposed to repeal.

In this connection I invite the Chair's attention to the fact that on page 8 of the proposed bill, line 6, it is proposed to repeal a title in a previous act of Congress, and again on page 16, lines 15 and 16, the bill carries this language: "and the first, fourth, and fifth provisos under said head are hereby repealed."

I have diligently searched the entire report on the bill and can find no citation of the statute to be repealed in order to comply with the Ramseyer rule.

I make the point of order which, if sustained, as I understand it, would automatically recommit the bill to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule:

Notwithstanding any rule of the House to the contrary, it shall be in order—

And so forth—

and all points of order against the bill or any of the provisions contained therein are hereby waived.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair indulge me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will indulge the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Under the rule in the House Manual, a citation is made to a precedent in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Seventy-first Congress, second session, page 10595. This citation reads:

Special orders providing for consideration of bills, unless making specific exemption, do not preclude the point of order that reports on such bills fail to indicate proposed changes in existing law. (Cannon's, sec. 9220a; 71st Cong., 2d sess., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 10595.)

I fail to see any provision in the rule adopted which specifically exempts clause 2a of rule XIII, the Ramseyer rule.

The SPEAKER. The Ramseyer rule is a rule of the House, and this resolution states "all rules to the contrary notwithstanding," it shall be in order to consider the bill.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2632, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks at this time will be limited to a brief summary of the bill and the action of the Committee on Appropriations now presented for consideration by this body.

The report before you contains a rather detailed explanation of each item contained in the bill which is, as you are aware, the first appropriation bill reported to the Eighty-first Congress. First of all I wish to express my appreciation to the other members of the subcommittee, all of whom have been very cooperative and pleasant to work with. We are, of course, honored by having the chairman of the full committee the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], as a member of the Subcommittee on Deficiencies and Army Civil Appropriations.

The bill before you contains a total in recommended appropriations of $466,800,000, which represents a reduction of $14,000,000 in the budget estimates. I want to point out, however, that of the total request of $480,800,000 approximately $353,000,000 was requested for items over which neither the administration nor the committee had much control. For example, $151,000,000 is for additional grants-in-aid for public assistance made necessary by the enactment of legislation since the original fiscal year 1949 budget was presented. Almost $103,000,000 is for the postal service, part of which is due to the increased volume of mail and part of which is due to increased transportation rates imposed on the Post Office by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the Civil Aeronautics Board. An amount of nearly $100,000,000 is included for the veterans' benefits. The net result is that there remained only an amount of something over $127,000,000 in which the committee could effect some reductions, and out of this total the amount of $14,000,000 has been saved.

I wish to call your attention to one item, a recommended appropriation of $2,274,500 for reconstruction of the roof in the House Chamber and for other needed improvements. The Senate made a similar appropriation last year, and it was the thought of the Architect of the Capitol and the committee that considerable savings in the ultimate cost could be effected if the work on both roofs was done simultaneously.

As you read through the report you will notice that many of the deficiency items included in the bill are the result of legislation enacted subsequent to the presentation of the regular fiscal year 1949 estimates. This is the case in connection with the Office of Defense Transportation whose existence was continued until June 30, 1949, by the enactment of Public Law 606, Eightieth Congress.

The Displaced Persons Commission received an initial appropriation of $2,000,000 with a proviso that it could be obligated and expended during the first three-quarters of the fiscal year; hence, the need for this deficiency.

I previously mentioned the grants to States for public assistance. This calls for an amount of $151,000,000 made necessary by the enactment by the Eightieth Congress of Public Law 642, increasing the Federal share of the contributions for old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to dependent children.

With respect to grants to States for unemployment compensation and employment service, the committee is recommending the full amount of the estimate, or $4,987,000. However, the committee, because of the great divergence of opinion on this item, has instituted a study of the situation by its own investigative staff and will later entertain recommendations for such adjustments as the facts may justify.

For the Federal Housing Administration the committee increased the limitation under administrative expenses from $19,000,000 to $23,000,000 because of the tremendous increase in applications for loans. These administrative expenses, as you are aware, come out of the corporate earnings of the Administration and not out of the general fund of the Treasury.

The Housing Expediter requested $7,450,000. The subcommittee recommends $4,800,000, which will carry the activity through the month of May, prior to which time, undoubtedly, some new legislation affecting this agency will be passed by the Congress.

The bill includes $2,950,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, of which $2,500,000 is for beginning construction on the New Johnsonville steam plant. Although this item was left out of the regular 1949 appropriation act after considerable discussion of the matter in committee and on the floor, it is the thought of the committee that, so long as this is a Federal project, it should be made as efficient an operation as possible.

The bill includes nearly $100,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration. This amount is largely attributable to amendments to the authorizing act passed by the Eightieth Congress subsequent to the consideration of the regular fiscal year 1949 estimates.

For the War Assets Administration the bill includes the amount of $12,500,000. Under present law this agency is to go out of existence on February 28. However, in view of the President's recommendation for legislation to establish one over-all disposal agency, it is thought that the War Assets Administration should be continued in existence until the end of this year in order that a more orderly transition may be effected when the new agency is established. The bill (H. R. 2402), extending the life of the War Assets Administration to June 30, was, as you are aware, passed by the House yesterday.

Two items are included for the Department of Agriculture. They are not large from the standpoint of money but are nonetheless important. The first is an amount of something over $9,700,000 for establishing acreage allotments for cotton and wheat as provided for in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. The other item is an increase of something over $3,000,000 in the administrative-expense limitation for the Commodity Credit Corporation. The record crops and the recent drop in prices have trebled the number of loans from that contemplated originally.

There are five items in the Department of Commerce, the most important of which is an amount of $11,000,000, for the census of business authorized by the Eightieth Congress. The census will cover all the retail establishments in the Nation as of December 31, 1948, estimated to number 3,000,000.

Under the Department of the Interior there is an item of $6,000,000 for the Bonneville Power Administration, the amount to be used for extending electrical transmission facilities. Two small items are included for the Bureau of Indian Affairs; one in the amount of $360,000 for the Navajo and Hopi service, mostly for salary increases under Public Law 900, Eightieth Congress, and $385,000 for the welfare of Indians, generally. A number of construction items are included under the Bureau of Reclamation, both from the Reclamation fund and from the general fund. Under the Reclamation fund the bill includes $975,000 for continuing construction on three projects—two in Idaho and one in Utah. Three items are included for construction under the general fund. These also are continuing projects, and the added amounts are made necessary in the main because of contract earnings beyond the availability of appropriations. The total of these three projects is $10,800,000. Also included is an amount of $4,500,000 for the Missouri River Basin project. As most of you gentlemen are aware, this is a development covering 10 States of the Missouri River Basin and includes irrigation, power, navigation, flood control, and water for municipal and other purposes.

A number of items are included for the Corps of Engineers, National Military Establishment. For rivers and harbors a recommended amount of $10,500,000 is to provide for continuing construction on the McNary lock and dam and for beginning construction on the Ice Harbor lock and dam and the Chief Joseph lock and dam, the last two of which are interrelated to the power development in the Northwest area. Under flood control, general, the bill includes $14,000,000 for continuing construction on six projects. The bill also includes $2,500,000 for the emergency fund needed to complete the repair, restoration, and strengthening of levees in the Columbia Basin damaged by floods in May and June 1948.

Almost $103,000,000 is included for the postal service, of which $70,000,000 is for railroad transportation; $17,000,000 for foreign air-mail service, and $13,000,000 for the postal vehicle service. The additional appropriation is made necessary by a temporary increase of 25 percent in rail rates authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and because of a tremendous increase in mail volume. Increased rates were also approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board for foreign air mail.

Three items are included for the Treasury Department. In the case of two of these, no action could be taken by the committee. One is the amount of $2,300,000 for the payment of claims and another is $800,000 for refund of moneys erroneously received and covered into the Treasury. The committee allowed $1,500,000 for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the printing of an additional 16,000,000 sheets of currency for replacement, principally in the one-dollar-bill category.

As I indicated previously, while the total of appropriations in the bill is substantial, many of the items could not be reduced. I feel that the committee has done a good job and has reduced wherever reductions could be made without jeopardizing the authorized programs of the various departments. I hope that the House will sustain the recommendations of the committee in full.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I expect to make no motions with reference to most of the amounts contained in this bill. One exception is the amount for the steam plant at the TVA at Johnsonville, Tenn. I intend to discuss that in a moment.

I will first call attention to two or three of the major items of legislation involved in the bill, to which I am opposed.

At the bottom of page 13 there is an item under "Bonneville Power Administration," and following that on page 14 is an item which repeals the limitation under the head of "Bonneville Power Administration" on the use of funds for force account activities. There is also a limitation on the amount of money that may be spent for propaganda. I am opposed to the repeal of both of those items. They were put in for the protection of the Government.

The force account limitation was put in so that they would have to comply with the rules, and let the jobs to contract and get them done in a reasonable way for a reasonable sum, rather than to fill up the pay roll of the department with a lot of people who were unnecessary, and allow the work to drag and allow the people to work about half time, as they had been doing for a long time.

The idea of repealing the limitation on propaganda activities, allowing them to spend all the funds that are appropriated and made available to the agency for propaganda, has no appeal to me.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I notice that the committee has given the amount for the Veterans' Administration asked for by the budget. Is that correct?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did the Veterans' Administration ask for any more than the budget allowed?

Mr. TABER. They did not. The item with reference to the Veterans' Administration appears on page 8. There is an item for national service life insurance, $55,000,000. They stated that they thought that would carry them through to the end of the year without any trouble.

The next item is $190,000 for soldiers' and sailors' civil relief, which is a very small item and a very small activity.

The next item is $44,189,000. That is for veterans' miscellaneous benefits. They told us that they thought that would carry them through all right.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did the Veterans' Administration give any information as to when the accumulated dividends would be paid to the veterans?

Mr. TABER. They did not in these hearings; no. I did not expect, the way they were operating on that, that such a result would come about for 2 or 3 months, in all probability.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thought if perhaps more persons were put on the work the men might receive the dividends sooner.

Mr. TABER. It would be better if they could.

Mr. RABAUT. I should think that would be a matter to be referred to the regular subcommittee having veterans' affairs in charge.

Mr. TABER. That would be an item that would be considered when the regular annual bill came up. We took up nothing in this bill but deficiency estimates; and some of those deficiency estimates were considered in regular committee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There would be an appropriation, because they have the authority for it already.

Mr. TABER. If it were necessary to make an appropriation in order to meet what expenditures were required there would be no delay that I know of in anything of that kind by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Could the gentleman give us some idea of what this $44,000,000 item for miscellaneous expenses consists of in general?

Mr. TABER. It is such things as burial allowances and matters of a special character rather than the regular large items of pensions or education aid and that sort of thing; those are not included in it.

Mr. KEATING. It is to cover specialized items?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If the gentleman from New York will yield, there is a full description of that item on page 7 of the committee report.

Mr. TABER. The next item I expect to take up is on page 15 where there is another force account item under the Bureau of Reclamation. What I said about the force account in the Bonneville item applies equally to this item.

We pass now to page 16 where there is a section repealing the first four or five provisos under the appropriation act for the Interior Department 1949 and repeals the limitation which would throw them out. One of those limitations provides that not to exceed about $7,500,000 shall be transferred out of construction funds to the different administrative funds in the Bureau of Reclamation; in other words, they can spend the whole of the construction funds on salaries and expenses in their offices and agencies rather than have any limitation or any control such as the Congress set up for them.

Another of the provisions repeals the prohibition against spending more than $50,000 for propaganda purposes. It has no merit whatever.

The next item is at line 17 on page 16 where the Mike Straus amendment appears, to put Mike Straus back. He was so incompetent that they want to keep him; and I shall have to admit that that is the chief qualification for a New Deal appointment. But that does not appeal to me, nor does it promote efficiency in government.

These are the major items in the bill with reference to which there will be controversy. I would not say that they were all of them but they are the major ones.

I wish now to discuss for a little while the item relating to the steam plant in the TVA.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. On page 4, under "Appropriations for the judiciary," I have been consulted in my district by the secretary to the district judge regarding the purchase of typewriters. Can the gentleman inform me what the present provision in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act is regarding the typewriter question, or can someone on the gentleman's committee give us that information?

Mr. TABER. There is a limitation, as I understand it, that typewriters may not be purchased at a price above 90 percent of the lowest price quoted a commercial purchaser. I think that is correct?

Mr. KEATING. But under this provision it is intended, as I read it, to permit the purchase now by those who need them in the judicial branch of the United States new typewriters, and not simply have to recondition the old typewriters?

Mr. TABER. They would be confined to the price set forth in the Treasury-Post Office bill. There would be no limitation on their funds for the purchase of typewriters if they could be bought within the limitation which has been prescribed, provided they have the funds appropriated to them for that purpose, and I understand they have.

Mr. KEATING. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the TVA item on page 7, line 20, I propose to offer an amendment which will reduce the item of $2,950,000 to $450,000. They have asked for $450,000 for a couple of generators, for the initial payments on them anyway, in one of the hydroelectric set-ups, and that I am not going to oppose; but the two and a half million dollars is to start the steam plant, and that I am going to oppose. I will have to offer a similar amendment cutting two and a half million dollars out of the $24,000,000 item in line 24, and I will move also to strike out the part of the limitation which they propose to repeal beginning with the word "and" in line 4, page 8, and going through the rest of the paragraph.

I will also offer an amendment which would prohibit the use of funds for the construction of a steam power plant. What are the facts with reference to that steam power plant?

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, the Tennessee Valley Authority marketed 12,244,000,000 kilowatts of power. That appears on page 11 of the financial statement of the Tennessee Valley Authority which I have before me. The TVA has had appropriated to it funds which will increase its available power plants, including the steam plants and the ones they already have. They have steam plants at the present time capable of producing 448,000 kilowatts an hour. They have hydro plants capable of producing 2,200,000 kilowatts an hour, or a total of 2,650,000 kilowatts. That means that they have available approximately 18,000,000,000 kilowatts to sell in the course of a year. Of course, they cannot sell all of it because of peaks; that is, they have peak loads during the day. They probably have power available at the present time amounting to about 4,000,000,000 kilowatts to sell if they could sell at all. They tell us that they will have available power projects that are coming in with the funds that are already appropriated, and with the generators that are here provided, amounting to 3,504,000 kilowatts of power-generating capacity. That will produce for sale approximately 18,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year. Now, that is 50 percent above what they sold in the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. It is my understanding that private power companies use about two-thirds of their capacity, while the TVA has only used about one-half of its capacity; that is, if they use their two-thirds capacity like private power companies do, there would be no necessity for this steam plant.

Mr. TABER. There is no necessity for it anyway, because they have got the power capacity to take care of their loads with a margin now. Their steam capacity is plenty to firm up the hydro power that they have or ever will have, because they can run their hydro power or they can run their steam power in the low periods and hold back their water if they have a dry season, and ultimately use their steam or their hydro power effectively.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Was there any testimony produced before the gentleman's committee to show that some of the cities in Tennessee, I will not say had been compelled, but did make contracts with the TVA that they would not build any electric power plants within their cities?

Mr. TABER. There was not before our committee this time, but there has been such testimony before the Committee on Appropriations heretofore. Those contracts are in existence. Those municipalities and cooperatives all would have the right, if the TVA would let them, and the TVA could let them without any trouble, to build all the power plants that they wanted. They should do that if we are going to have the expensive method of providing peak power gone into in the TVA.

Let me give you the general picture of the TVA, because I think people generally ought to understand it. The low rates down in the TVA and for Federal power generally are caused by this fact: The TVA sets up only $2,000,000 for taxes. It has estimated power earnings, according to page 11 of its financial statement, of $48,000,000 a year. This means 4 percent. The private power concerns run 20 to 22 or 23 percent in their over-all tax, and that extra tax is part of the place where they save the money to the power users in their localities.

I checked the record in the manuals in the library, and I know one private power concern right next to this set-up where they have a gross revenue of $125,000,000 and paid taxes of $23,000,000.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the total capitalization of the TVA?

Mr. TABER. The total capitalization of the TVA that is allocated to power is $48,000,000, and they never have paid a cent of interest on that power set-up to the Treasury of the United States. They never paid any money back until this last year, when they paid just a hair under $31,000,000.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVINS. Will the gentleman point out to the Members of the House that there is authorization in the TVA Act for turning into the Treasury each year some $20,000,000?

Mr. TABER. That is so, toward principal, but there is no authorization for the payment of any interest. The taxpayers in the rest of the country are subsidizing the rates in the TVA by the TVA's avoiding the payment of taxes and by the failure to charge enough rates to cover a proper depreciation charge, which should be at least $11,500,000, and interest at the rate of 3 percent, which is what would be fair for the TVA to pay back.

Mr. EVINS. Will the gentleman point out if there is a public power plank in the Republican platform?

Mr. TABER. Maybe there is, but that did not mean a dishonest public power outfit that did not pay its way. It meant having things in such shape that the people of the United States who were not in the power district would not have to pay the electric-light bills and power bills of the folks in that district.

Mr. EVINS. I disagree with the statement the gentleman makes that you are paying the light bills of the people of Tennessee.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. EVINS. That is not true.

Mr. TABER. There is no question about it. The statistics all bear it out.

Mr. EVINS. Is the gentleman in favor of the St. Lawrence seaway project?

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. EVINS. The gentleman is not in favor of that project?

Mr. TABER. Not the seaway; no.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. The gentleman ought to be heard on this important point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-three Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2632, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 329 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he submitted herewith the names of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I stated a little while ago that I believe that according to the evidence the TVA submitted themselves in their own reports, and on pages 40, 41, and 42 of the hearings, they have demonstrated that this item is not necessary for the benefit of the people in that locality, because they have already in sight a 50-percent margin of power over what they are presently using.

Perhaps it might be interesting to the House if the House were told that some of the smartest corporations of the country have moved into that locality to take advantage of these low, subsidized power rates.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PATTERSON. Would the gentleman tell the committee the names of the corporations that have gone down South in order to take advantage of this cheap rate that has been subsidized at the expense of the taxpayers, say all those of New England, and in Connecticut especially? Also, will this not in effect invite new industries that might be starting in New England and some older industries to go down South to Tennessee, at the expense of the taxpayers in the North, to start operations?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct. Some of the corporations that have been smart enough to go in there are the Aluminum Co. of America, the Monsanto Chemical Co., the Vickers Chemical Co., and the Pennsylvania Salt Co. There are a great many more of those smart corporations. I do not blame them for going in there and taking advantage of this opportunity, but the taxpayers of the gentleman's territory and those in my territory are carrying that load.

I think it is about time that there be a complete review of this public-power business and that the whole thing be on the basis of fairness, with the power project carrying its share of the load and its share of the taxes. I do not think we should get into this situation and not have these power projects carry their part of the load. I cannot support it, and I feel that I shall have to do everything I can to bring it to the attention of the House and to see that the House has a full opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVINS. I respect the position the gentleman has held on the Committee on Appropriations as a former chairman, but I wish that he would be fair and tell all the facts.

Mr. TABER. I have told all the facts, except this: They charge $9,000,000 depreciation as against $11,500,000, according to the rules of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. They pay no interest. Those are the things I have not told.

Mr. EVINS. The gentleman just stated on the floor that these industries had moved into that area. That is not the truth. These industries have been in this area for some time. The testimony did not show that a single industry had ever moved from the North or the East or the South.

Mr. TABER. It did so.

Mr. EVINS. It did say some branch plants had grown up, and there had been some natural growth, but not a single one had moved from the North.

Mr. TABER. Many have moved into that area.

Mr. EVINS. The gentleman knows that is not true.

Mr. TABER. I know it is true, and the gentleman knows it is true. Let us be honest about it. Let us have the TVA pay to the Treasury of the United States $15,000,000 interest on the $480,000,000 investment. That is our peak interest and that is what it will cost the people of the United States and the taxpayers.

Let us have them charge their depreciation and pay it back every year. Let us have this public-power business put on an honest basis, dollar for dollar, and let the people of the United States understand that it is going to be honest and that it is going to be kept honest.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this being general debate, I want to make certain remarks before referring specifically to the terms of the bill. I want to say a brief word in regard to the Committee on Appropriations of the House.

APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE—STAFF AND ORGANIZATION

I have been a member of the committee for many years. I have long considered it the most important committee in the House of Representatives. Because of present conditions in the world both at home and abroad I consider it has a tremendous responsibility.

Over the years, Mr. Chairman, it has been the opinion of Members on both sides of the aisle belonging to this great committee that that committee could only do its work properly, in a manner worthy of the confidence of the House and of the country, if by some means or other it could obtain a competent, expert, permanent staff, a staff equipped to make investigations and analyses when the occasion demands.

As I stand here and look back over the years, I can hear Member after Member standing in the well of this House, Members from both sides of the aisle, making an appeal for that kind of staff.

We finally got the necessary authority for that staff, Mr. Chairman. It came in the so-called reorganization bill approved August 2, 1946.

That bill provides that—

> Each standing committee of the House and Senate, other than the Committee on Appropriations, is authorized to appoint by majority vote not more than four professional staff members * * * on a permanent basis, without regard to political affiliation and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the office.

That bill goes further, Mr. Chairman. It provides that—

> The Committee on Appropriations in the House and in the Senate is authorized to appoint such staff as each committee by majority vote shall determine to be necessary * * * and to conduct such studies and examinations of the organization and operation of any executive agency as it may deem meet.

In other words, each Appropriations Committee was authorized to have an unlimited staff, subject only to the judgment of the committee, and essential appropriations.

In my judgment this was one of the most important and most helpful features of the entire Reorganization Act.

What happened, Mr. Chairman? Not long after the Reorganization Act a beginning was made on a real staff for this great committee. Some 8 or 10 permanent employees were appointed, with contemplated expansion. The regular staff was augmented by a group of consultants from private enterprise, who gave generously of their time in the interest of economy. A small allowance for expenses was permitted, and the time and transportation of these individuals was a donation to the cause of good government.

In this manner, skills far beyond the ability of the Government to provide were made available to the committee.

Numbered among these men were 10 of the country's outstanding accountants, picked as a special committee by the American Institute of Accountants. All of these men were, of course, certified public accountants of national standing, and one is currently president of the New York State Certified Public Accountants Society.

The remaining men were business executives and research assistants of considerable standing, many of whom were, and are continuing to be, used as consultants by various Government agencies which have learned to value their counsel and assistance.

There was no partisanship in the activity, as the group was very representative of both political parties, although all were united on behalf of Government economy.

In addition to the day-to-day work of the staff, the major studies completed were as follows:

First. An exhaustive study of the then Federal Public Housing Administration, extending into nine States. The study exposed many vicious illegal practices, and was the basis of corrective legislation. As a result, the agency undertook a real reorganization, eliminating frills, waste, and extravagance.

Second. A review of the Department of Agriculture budget for 1948, including all the bureaus and agencies of that Department, resulting in many recommendations of benefit to the Department. This review also encompassed a particular inquiry into the Rural Electrification Administration.

Third. A study of the Maritime Commission for both 1948 and 1949, which resulted in corrective legislation recovering for the Government hundreds of millions of dollars.

Fourth. Studies of the Veterans' Administration's requirements for both 1948 and 1949, which information has been the basis of a great deal of organizational correction. This study likewise went into the Federal hospital picture in great detail and has formed the basis of continued study by the Hoover Commission as well as the Veterans' Administration themselves.

Fifth. A study of the War Assets Administration for 1948.

Sixth. Continuing studies of the Department of the Interior for 1948 and 1949, including such technical subjects as an analysis of existing Federal power policy and including spot checks of the accounting systems in the various field installations, which were made available to the Department of the Interior and are currently the basis of accounting reorganizations.

Seventh. Detailed analyses of the operations of the United States Employment Service and the Bureau of Employment Compensation, which materially assisted in the reorganization of those agencies and will no doubt be very helpful in the 1950 hearings. This particular investigation required a great deal of field study and resulted in the exposé of especially flagrant violations of the Hatch Act in the State of Tennessee. This information has been forwarded to the Department of Justice and to the United States Civil Service Commission, who are currently investigating the matter, with a view to dealing with the offenders.

Eighth. A detailed analysis of the operations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which resulted in the location of widespread abuses and inefficiency. The report has been made available to the Secretary of the Treasury, and studies are now being made and many improvements instituted that were recommended in this report. As a corollary to this investigation, particularly flagrant violations of the Hatch Act in Massachusetts were uncovered. This information was likewise turned over to the Civil Service Commission and to the Department of Justice for their investigation.

The Civil Service Commission has cited for removal some twenty-odd employees in one Massachusetts office of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I understand the Department of Justice still has the matter under consideration.

Ninth. An exhaustive investigation of the Department of State, which likewise located many flagrant abuses of good administration, and also located a list of undesirable individuals with subversive connections who were then employed by the State Department. Subsequent to the exposé, some 30 to 40 of these individuals were separated from the service. It is also interesting to note that many of the individuals mentioned in the original list were later questioned by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Tenth. A study of the Treasury Department budget for 1948 and 1949.

Eleventh. A study of the Army and Air Force budgets for 1948 and 1949, which formed a basis of rescissions approximating $5,000,000,000 returned to the taxpayers by this committee.

Twelfth. A study of the budget of the Navy for the fiscal years 1948 and 1949, which likewise formed a basis for substantial monetary rescissions and appropriations reductions.

Thirteenth. An executive study on operations of the Government in the Territory of Alaska. It touches upon the activities of almost every Federal agency operating in Alaska and should be of great value to the committee in the 1950 deliberations.

Fourteenth. A report on the study of the subsistence procurement of the Army for use in the 1950 hearings. The report indicates that corrected procedures can save tremendous sums of money.

These are only a few of the more important studies undertaken by the group. In addition, scores of comparatively minor studies were made of specific units of the Government.

The over-all result was that the committee was able to effect savings or rescissions detailed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of some $9,800,000,000 in 2 years, making possible a balanced budget for the first time in 16 years, making possible a reduction in our national debt of some $7,000,000,000, making possible a reduction in our tax burden of $4,800,000,000, 71 percent of which went to those with incomes of less than $5,000, some 7,000,000 persons being removed from tax rolls entirely.

It was a fine start, and I agree with the sentiment of a close friend of mine now on the majority side of this great committee, who said to me shortly after our return to Washington in January, that in his opinion the Republicans of the last Congress had made a fine start with this staff, and that his only criticism was that the staff had not been large enough.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you may be surprised, in view of this record, to know that this staff has been completely abolished. It has been abolished, despite the experience of years, despite the intent of the Reorganization Act, despite the splended record that it made.

The staff has not only been abolished, it is not only a question of relieving those who served on the staff, the whole theory of a staff responsible only to the Appropriations Committee has been, for the time being, abandoned, and we have gone back to the old idea of asking one executive agency to please investigate the actions of another executive agency, whenever an investigation seems necessary.

Mr. Chairman, that plan has been tried. It is better than nothing. But as long as human nature remains what it is, it will never, in my opinion, get fundamental results. In fact it may tend at times to conceal rather than to disclose.

Real results depend on a permanent, nonpolitical skilled staff, responsible to the Appropriations Committee and to that committee alone.

I want to pay my tribute, Mr. Chairman, to the work done by the staff of the Committee on Appropriations during the last 2 years. They made a splendid contribution to the Nation in terms of lower prices, in terms of lower taxes, in terms of a stable economy.

I want also to record for the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, my opinion that the action taken in abolishing the staff and certain other action taken in connection with the organization of the committee for this Congress is most unfortunate.

That action was taken contrary to the views of the minority members of the committee. In fact, it was taken without allowing any minority member of the committee the opportunity to question, to debate, or to offer to amend any one of a half dozen resolutions that were adopted in the full committee.

I regret the manner in which the action was taken. In my judgment, it was unworthy of the traditions of the great Committee on Appropriations.

I regret the action taken, because, in my judgment, it is likely to cost the people of this Nation literally billions of dollars.

THE BILL IN GENERAL

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly on the bill under consideration.

As you know, it calls for something less than $500,000,000 of appropriations. The budget sent it up here in the sum of about $480,000,000. The committee has taken off $14,000,000.

If I had my way, there would be further reductions. If I had my way, the restrictions and limitations, which it is proposed to cancel, and which have been referred to first by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and then by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], would remain the law of the land.

I want to mention in passing that the committee has allowed in full the amount of approximately $5,000,000 for grants to States for unemployment compensation and the Employment Service to give the Service an average of 38,000 employees as compared with an average of 35,000.

This situation has not been satisfactory. It has been charged, among other things, that the allocation to the several States of the over-all sum made available by the Congress has been very inequitable, that State set-ups which have striven to operate with efficiency and economy have been penalized, while others operating on an inefficient and extravagant basis have had more staff than they should fairly have been allotted.

This amount provided, in my judgment, is entirely inadequate. The Bureau of the Budget has ordered a complete investigation. The Appropriations Committee has also ordered a complete investigation.

I have no doubt that further funds will be available for this activity either in this bill or subsequently in the light of the two investigations.

TVA STEAM PLANT

The principal item of controversy in this bill is the one already referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

It is the proposal by TVA that this Congress make available some $3,000,000 as a first installment on a gigantic steam plant to cost ultimately some $84,000,000 and to produce some 375,000 kilowatts, having a capacity sufficient, it has been said, for all of the needs, both commercial and domestic of perhaps a million people; a steam plant requested for the purpose of meeting the prospective power needs of the TVA industrial users.

The identical proposal, Mr. Chairman, was before this House last summer. Exhaustive hearings were held before the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Government Corporations. Thorough debate took place on this floor on two separate occasions. On each occasion the proposal was voted down by a record vote.

I see no reason, Mr. Chairman, for the Congress to reverse at this time the decisions it made at that time.

I do not want to repeat in detail the arguments presented to this House last summer. I do want to say, Mr. Chairman, however, that the decision of the House was based on fundamental grounds which transcend in importance any single steam plant at any single project. I do want to say, also Mr. Chairman, that we are not discussing a theory; that this is an intensely practical question in which there is very great interest.

There is widespread opposition to embarking on the policy implied in the construction of this plant. If proof of this were needed, I may say that I understand that over 90 different organizations of businessmen, taxpayers, and others appeared in opposition to the proposal last summer. I may add that in the course of the very brief hearings conducted in respect to this bill we were confronted by the chambers of commerce of perhaps three-quarters of the States of the Union, by the National Chamber of Commerce, and by representatives of other business organizations who registered their emphatic opposition to the policy implied in the request now before us.

What are the broad grounds of objection, Mr. Chairman?

There are several of them.

In the first place, while it is clear that the TVA Act authorized the generation and marketing of electric energy incidental to navigation or flood control, it is exceedingly doubtful that there is any authority whatsoever for TVA to enter into the generation and marketing of commercial power which has nothing to do with navigation or with flood control.

But for the rule adopted by this House it would be my view that a point of order would clearly have lain against the present requested appropriation for that reason. I regret that the rule was obtained, because, in my judgment, the matter of policy here involved is far too important to be determined in the course of the consideration of an appropriation bill.

In the second place, Mr. Chairman, if the act be construed to give the necessary authority, then there is the further question of whether the act is constitutional. Time does not permit going into that legal question this afternoon. But I would like to quote again Mr. Justice Reed when he was Solicitor General some years ago, in appearing before the United States Supreme Court in a case concerning the Tennessee Valley Authority Act.

Mr. Justice Reed, then Solicitor General, said:

> From the bench and at the bar the controversy has come down to a question of this kind: If we assume that this act was primarily for navigation, then it would be valid. If we determine that this act, while stating that it is for navigation, national defense, and flood control, is actually for the purpose of developing power and selling it commercially, the act would be invalid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, aside from these legal questions there remains the broad question of national policy by which we are confronted.

The TVA could conceivably earn a profit even if it was organized and run like a legitimate business. It could at least eliminate all unfair competition by paying the legitimate costs of operation.

But that is not the case, Mr. Chairman. Here we have the TVA representing an over-all investment of $780,000,000, of which some $480,000,000 represents investment in power alone. Until recently TVA made no proper arrangements for amortization or depreciation. As has been pointed out, its interest burden has been practically negligible and the tax burden which it bears is estimated at between 10 and 20 percent of that borne by a private company in a similar situation.

Its net income of about $17,000,000 is not even sufficient to pay the interest charges and the amortization charges which would be normally borne by a private company operating in this field of industry.

However you figure them, the alleged costs of operation by TVA are far less than the actual costs paid by a private industry in the same field and the difference is paid by all of us in terms of subsidy.

Now until this time TVA has limited itself to dealing with power incidental to its proper functions of navigation and flood control, and it has acted under a statutory provision requiring that insofar as power is available, it should be made available to preferred customers, such as municipalities and cooperatives.

Now we see the TVA coming before the Congress and saying, in substance: "Gentlemen, there is going to be an increase in demand in the TVA area. We are not going to be able to meet that demand. Whether you intended it originally or not, we believe that there is a clear obligation on the shoulders of TVA to meet the total demand from the TVA area, whatever that demand may amount to, and whether or not we have enough power incidental to navigation and flood control to meet that demand. And, if you agree, you must give us the essential steam generating capacity to meet that demand which is in excess of the incidental power that we shall have at our disposal.

That, Mr. Chairman, is a radical departure from the policy heretofore followed. It is a very far-reaching departure, in my opinion, and for one I am opposed to it.

I am opposed to it because from the record it is clear that there is ample capacity available today and for the next 3 or 4 years to take care of the demands of all preferred customers.

If you look at the tables in the record, you will find that those preferred customers only used about 3,300,000,000 kilowatt-hours out of a total of 14,000,000,000 available in the fiscal year 1945; that they only used about 6,050,000,000 kilowatt-hours out of a total of 16,500,000,000 available in 1948, and that it is estimated that they will only use about 9,200,000,000 kilowatt-hours out of a total of about 19,600,000,000 available in the fiscal year 1952. The balance goes to industrial users and to public utilities in adjoining areas which are subject to control.

Were it not for the industrial users there would be more than sufficient to take care of the preferred customers. And, Mr. Chairman, there are vacant stalls today in various dams that are available for additional hydroelectric units.

What TVA is really asking is additional subsidized power to meet the prospective needs of its big industrial users, like the Aluminum Co. of America, the Monsanto Chemical Co., and the Tennessee Copper Co., and others.

That Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, is unfair to the men and women of the rest of the country who, on the basis of present operations, must subsidize the power that is used.

I am opposed to this proposal, Mr. Chairman, because the needs of these industrial users do not have to be met by TVA—they can be met in various ways. If the construction of a steam plant is necessary, the simplest way is to let the industrial users construct and pay for the plant just as they would in any area outside of the TVA area.

Let TVA limit itself to its prescribed role, and the industrial users and the cities concerned will supply the necessary steam-plant construction for other power, in my opinion, in very short order.

Failure to do this is unfair to other sections of the country with and for whose industries TVA-subsidized power under present conditions competes.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this proposal because I believe that Congress never intended that TVA should go into the power business over and above its incidental power, and because I believe if the precedent is established, there is no end or limitation in sight to unfair Government-subsidized competition with private industry.

Why, Mr. Chairman, should the people of the West, the North, and the East, rich and poor alike, be compelled to pay through higher prices and higher taxes for power used by the Aluminum Co. of America, the Monsanto Chemical Co., and other multi-million-dollar plants in or near the TVA territory?

Why, Mr. Chairman, should other parts of the country be compelled to subsidize TVA industry which competes with and for their own industries at home?

Why, Mr. Chairman, should we adopt a precedent which assures a widespread unfair competition with private industry in this field of industry, which may lead to complete nationalization in this field of industry, and which, if proper in this field, may be proper in any other industrial field in America?

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there is any present authority in TVA to generate or market electrical energy not incidental to navigation and flood control, in competition with private business.

If, however, the assertion of that authority, in spite of statutory and constitutional difficulties, is to be approved by this Congress, then let us eliminate the present elements of unfair competition immediately.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress will stand by its position in this matter. I hope that the amendment which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has referred to, when offered to this House, will be adopted.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, without a doubt, the things the Republicans in Congress are trying to do to bring order out of chaos in many departments of government will fall on deaf ears like a voice crying in the wilderness, but we must never give up the fight. We know only too well by now what is in the back of the minds of the party in power, because we had an excellent demonstration of that in the full committee about 3 weeks ago when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the full Committee of Appropriations, refused to recognize a single minority member when we attempted and tried our best to get Mr. CANNON'S attention. We had some amendments to offer, but, believe it or not, he did not even look our way. They put through their resolutions one right after the other and then immediately ordered the previous question, which shut off debate and when they got all their resolutions adopted they had someone of their own party move to adjourn, and they adjourned without paying the slightest notice to the 18 minority-party members present.

In this America of ours, the minority has always had a voice or a say, or at least had an opportunity to express its opinions in Congress and out of Congress until now. Now they are patterning after Uncle Joe Stalin and his one-party rulers. That is what the gentleman from Missouri is doing, and the gentleman is sitting right here in front of me on the floor of this House. If he does not like it, let him stand and defend himself before his colleagues and the American people.

I am waiting for the answer of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], Then I saw another performance, and it is almost too disgraceful to mention; just last week in a subcommittee meeting, the same gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] muffled one of the finest, most able Representative of the people in Congress and did his voting for him. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] had not heard a word of the testimony that had been given by the departments, but he came in and did the voting for this member of his party. Now, that is something to think about, folks. I want every American to know about this, so they will know the course we are taking. We are taking the direct course to a one-party rule in America like many other nations have, including Russia. Then, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] had the boldness to say that he was going to sit in with every Subcommittee of Appropriations during the marking-up of each bill. He is going to see to it that the program they have concocted to destroy our American liberties is going through regardless of any and all opposition.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I cannot yield to the gentleman at this moment, but I would yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. If he has any defense.

Mr. WHITE of California. I have a defense of the party, if the gentleman will yield to me for just one moment.

Mr. JENSEN. All right then, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WHITE of California. I ask the gentleman if he recalls the time during 1946 when the Gearhart committee of the Ways and Means Committee had star-chamber proceedings and brought out legislation under gag rule and not a word could be heard in committee or on the floor.

Mr. JENSEN. Oh, my dear colleague—gag rule—you accuse the Republican Party of gag rule? Say, the gentlemen on that side of the aisle have for years, without end, gagged the Republican Party or tried to gag us until it became a national scandal. Now, I do not care to hear any more of that kind of stuff from the gentleman who just recently arrived, or from anyone on that side of the aisle, because we know the sad story about them.

Last year the Eightieth Congress saw fit to put a limitation on the amount of money that could be spent for force account. Force account means that the Bureau of Reclamation can hire anyone they see fit, to do any job they see fit, regardless of how large the job is, whether $100 or $50,000,000, without letting a contract or asking for bids.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] is recognized.

Mr. JENSEN. Now, in this bill appears a provision which would strike out all of those limiting provisions which were placed in the bill last year and again let them run wild and do anything they like with the taxpayer's money.

More actual construction work for hydroelectric power, transmission lines, and irrigation has been performed in the last year and a half than has ever been performed in three times that length of time before in the history of this Nation. Why? Because we put their house in order. We said, "Go to work and stop wasting money and time." Now if there is anybody who wants to deny that, let them stand. They cannot do it, because what I have said is the truth. Yet they travel all over the country.. Yes, from the President on down—saying that the Republican Party had almost completely destroyed the reclamation program—when the facts are that the Eightieth Congress appropriated twice as much money than had ever been appropriated before for the development of the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my brief remarks I wish to express my appreciation for the action of the Appropriations Committee for having approved the amount of $2,500,000 for the beginning of construction of the new Johnsonville steam plant and $450,000 for two additional hydroelectric generating units at existing TVA dams. It is good economy for the Government to make full use of the natural resources of its investment. The existing power facilities in the Tennessee Valley serve a large area, which is rapidly developing, and with this natural progress and development there has been a great increase in the consumption of electric power.

More than 5,000,000 people are supplied by TVA power and are dependent upon this great Federal project for their source of electric power. It has been estimated by the Tennessee Valley Authority and by other reliable testimony that we are facing a power shortage in the entire valley served by TVA. The people of this section of America are confronted with a different situation than that which is generally the case. Here the only source of power is the Government agency. Private utilities voluntarily sold their properties and moved out. There is no other source of power. Industry needs additional power. The great REA program is in need of additional power to supply the applications that are now currently on file. Electric cooperatives have entered into agreements and contracts to furnish rural power to thousands of farmers, but due to the power shortage the Government has not been able to carry out these commitments. I have said on the floor of this Congress on previous occasions that the greatest guarantee that we shall continue as a free and independent people is for the Congress by appropriate action to place on the statute books of this country laws which will build up the rural and farm life of America. The farmers have never failed us in war or in peace, and we must not fail them now.

The development of this great area in America will create good business; the farmers and public generally will increase their use of electrical appliances and equipment in their homes, and will thereby create an outlet and market for electrical appliances and devices and gadgets of every kind, which are produced all over America. This natural market will, therefore, employ idle labor, and will stimulate production, and will in no sense of the word injure our American industry.

In my mind there is a big object, which we may overlook in this bill under consideration. This Congress has been called upon to appropriate billions of dollars in an effort to stop the onrushing tide of communism, which was calculated by some people to be on the march throughout the Continent of Europe, and on into the far eastern world. With that dark shadow casting its shadows on the lives, happiness and hopes of millions of peace-loving people throughout the world, we as a Congress have a responsibility to preserve the national defense of this country. When we spend billions to help little nations fortify themselves against our common enemy, then does it not follow as a matter of clear logic, that we should spend the necessary amount of money to build the power facilities to supply electric power to insure that the great atomic energy development, which is located at Oak Ridge, Tenn., has the required amount of electric current at all times to run and operate this great project on a full production basis.

The history of World War II shows that we had, and now have great and vast Federal agencies in the Tennessee Valley, which played an important role in the production of war material in the recent war. The Oak Ridge plant, the Alcoa Aluminum Mills, the Tennessee Eastman, the Holston Ordnance, and North American and Bemberg Rayon corporations are some of the big manufacturing concerns that contributed in a large way to our national defense.

In view of the world situation, I believe that this country should have the finest air force on earth. We should have an air force that can circle and police the world if necessary. The record shows that TVA at one time furnished the power that was used to make 51 percent of the aluminum which went into our war planes. The Eightieth Congress voted for a 70-group air force program. We cannot afford to face a situation which would deprive these great facilities of the necessary power during slack seasons to continue the full operation of these vital defense factories, which are a part of our announced preparedness program.

We are not considering a new principle here today. The Government has appropriated the money to build steam plants on a number of occasions. The Watts Bar steam plant built by TVA is an example of a steam plant. In fact when the private companies owned their own plants in Tennessee, they not only sold their water plants, but these companies sold steam plants to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is a corporation created by act of Congress on May 18, 1933. It was established to improve navigation and to provide for flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of the valley; to provide for the national defense, and for other purposes. The Tennessee Valley has accomplished these purposes by developing dams and reservoirs in the Tennessee River Basin and its tributaries It has engaged in the generation of hydroelectric power.

We should not in days of emergency deny to this great publicly owned utility the same right and privilege that is enjoyed by every private business and utility in America. I mean by this that it is a common practice for our large industries, which make use of hydroelectric power to also have as a secondary source of power, a steam plant. In that way an industry is not wholly dependent upon one source of power. A steam plant will, therefore, guarantee a continuous flow of power during a time when hydroelectric power may be curtailed in production because of dry weather, and because of a drying up of the water power in the dams.

In some quarters the legal power of the Tennessee Valley Authority to engage in the erection of a steam plant has been questioned. Under the Constitution the Congress has the power to promote the general welfare and to promote the common good of the people of this country. We are implementing a great program and are giving it the necessary strength and the necessary appropriation to implement the power program so as to meet the needs of the people in this valley. This is no new departure. The Congress from time to time has appropriated money for the great highways of this country. We have developed the forests and waterways of America. We have developed the rivers and harbors, and have developed the canal service to accommodate the commerce flowing all over this land.

We as a nation have encouraged the development of the great reclamation service of the West, which has produced fertile soil, where fruits and vegetables now grow. A great section of the West is rapidly becoming an agricultural and one of the chief bread baskets of America. This same area was at one time a place of dust and wastelands. This transition and new development has added to the wealth and productivity, as well as to the progress and happiness, of the people. Therefore, I want to say, in conclusion, that I have seen the benefit the people have derived from TVA, and I am happy that the Congress is approaching this subject from a nonpartisan and national point of view. I am happy that we are recognizing the great public interest involved and that we do not propose to place a lid upon the progress and upon the advancement of an area consisting of approximately seven States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, at the very outset I want to be recorded, as I have been in the past, that I am not opposed to the development of power in the river basins of our country by the Federal Government. With the demand that exists all over the Nation for power I think that is essential and necessary. What I am opposed to and where we divide with minds in this body is the projection of the Federal Government into the sale of power as a private distributor and in competition with investment already made by the citizens of this country and already serving the area where these new projects may come into being.

In a hearing before the Committee on Public Works last year and the year before it was developed that if the Federal Government were compelled to pay the taxes, overhead expenses, interest involved in borrowing money, payment of dividends, the Federal Government could not produce 1 kilowatt of power cheaper than private industry and private investment is now producing it in this country. It is because of that unfair advantage by the Federal Government in projecting itself into the power field in competition with private enterprise that sooner or later if the step we are taking today is extended and expanded private enterprise in the power field will vanish from the American scene. That is socialization of industry. If it is so desirable to socialize electric power, will someone get up on this floor and tell the Nation why it should not be projected into all the other activities of American life—communications, transportation, mines, food, clothing, and others. But after we have done all of that, we will have brought to America an ideology that is foreign to the standards and the basic principles upon which this Nation stands, and the Republic of the United States will disappear.

Congress is now confronted with a proposal that the Tennessee Valley Authority construct and operate a steam electric generating plant. This is unusual, and in fact an unprecedented request. The Federal Government in the past has constructed and operated steam plants, but in every such case the legal background for such authorization has been on the basis of national defense. The classic example, of course, is the still existing steam plant at Muscle Shoals, created under the War Powers Act of 1916 and constructed for the purpose of the manufacture of nitrates for ammunition. Similarly, in 1940, a large steam plant was constructed at Watts Bar, Tenn., as a part of the equipment of the TVA for the purpose of augmenting its generating capacity to meet national defense demands. In addition, the Atomic Energy Commission, at Oak Ridge, has one of the largest steam electric plants in the world, wholly devoted to generating power for the manufacture of atomic bombs.

With none of these projects has any objection ever been raised as they obviously follow the familiar pattern necessary to national preservation.

In the case of the pending proposal for the construction of a plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., the matter of national defense is not used as a justification.

The lack of such justification indicates that the administration is prepared to establish a new precedent: That the Federal Government shall accept as a normal function the business of producing and selling power commercially, not as an incident to the control of rivers, but as an out-and-out business, not incidental to any other necessary and constitutional functions of government. The proposal pending before Congress is unique in other respects.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-two Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2632, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 309 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he submitted herewith the names of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is recognized.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I was saying when I was interrupted a few minutes ago that the proposal pending before the Congress is unique in some other respects.

The proposal pending before Congress is unique in other respects. For example, it is presented as a deficiency appropriation. Until now, deficiencies have always been appropriated only for the continuance of enterprises and projects already previously authorized and for which funds have already been appropriated. In this case the Congress not only has not authorized and appropriated money for the steam plant, but in fact only a few months ago Congress by roll-call votes—two in the House of Representatives—flatly rejected the proposal to construct this very same project. No one has yet explained satisfactorily how a deficiency appropriation could be made for a project never originated and for which no money was ever appropriated.

There is a strong doubt that such an appropriation would be legal inasmuch as there is nothing in the organic TVA Act as amended which permits the construction of new steam plants. Even if the act did so provide, it would be patently unconstitutional. The TVA was created for the purpose of harnessing the Tennessee River so that its facilities for navigation would be improved and so that its floods would be controlled. As Senator Norris once said, "These are the constitutional pegs upon which the Tennessee Valley Authority Act must rest under the commerce clause of the Constitution."

There must be some lurking doubts as to the acceptance of this long step in the direction of socialism in the minds of its proponents. Otherwise the problem would have been approached in the normal parliamentary manner and under normal parliamentary procedure. The atmosphere of candor is lacking in the procedure by which this bill arrives before the House.

On February 3, 1949, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, acting either in that capacity or as chairman of the Deficiency Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, appeared before the Rules Committee and asked for a rule to obtain debate on the bill on February 4. He appeared before the Rules Committee without a bill. The Appropriations Committee itself had not met to discuss the matter. As I understand it there had not been a formal marking up of the bill by the Deficiency Subcommittee—although this may have happened among the majority members. Thanks to the wise decision of the senior Member of this House, both in age and in consecutive legislative experience—the chairman of the Rules Committee—the proposal was given short shrift.

In my long service in this House I recall no incident where the chairman of a committee requested a rule of the Rules Committee before his own committee had even held a meeting to consider the measure.

This is a house of the representatives of the people of the United States. Whether they bear the label Democrat or Republican, every member of this House is sworn to sustain the Constitution and to put flag and country before partisanship. On that basis every member in this House has a right to resent parliamentary tactics that would have been scorned by the so-called, rubber-stamp congresses of the early New Deal.

A century ago Karl Marx published the Communist Manifesto. The past century has been the bloodiest, the cruelest, and in many ways the most catastrophic century in the history of mankind. The forces let loose by this evil dream of Karl Marx are reaping their harvests down to the present day. Only now a cardinal of the Holy Roman Catholic Church awaits his fate at the hands of a Marxian court because he placed God before the Soviet Caesars. For his courage he may hang, or spend his life in a convict's cell, or in the mercy of this Marxian court, his term may be shortened. Marxism in Hungary is no different than Marxism in America, except in degree.

Socialism is a complete word. It needs no qualification. An activity of government is either socialistic or it is not socialistic.

This continent was peopled by men and women whose whole philosophy is a rejection of socialism and the planned state idea as conceived by Karl Marx. It was pioneered by men and women who believe in God, and in America.

This small item in the deficiency appropriation calling for the beginning of construction of a steam plant for the TVA is little in itself, but the potentialities as a precedent can involve enormous sums as the curse of socialized power spreads like a creeping paralysis over the economy of our Nation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK].

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to stress an amendment which I will present when the bill is read for amendment. It is to page 6, line 24. I shall urge there striking out "$4,987,000" and the insertion in lieu thereof of "$14,000,000."

On page 4 of the committee report, under "Grants to States for unemployment compensation and employment service," it states that the Budget estimate, $4,987,000, is being recommended for this item. There follows:

It is believed that the amount herein recommended, together with an increased application of flexibility as between the unemployment compensation and employment services should enable the States to make some headway in reducing the present backlog of work.

The concluding paragraph reads:

The committee is advised by the Bureau of the Budget that the present estimate is based on work loads as of November 30, 1948—

I stress that date—and that it is at the present time reviewing developments since that date.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] earlier today told us that an investigation is pending by the Committee on Appropriations, as it is by the Bureau of the Budget, to ascertain the amount of additional funds that would be necessary in this particular category and to make other pertinent recommendations.

I commend the investigations by the Committee on Appropriations and the Bureau of the Budget; however, it is my desire to bring to the notice of the Committee of the Whole House some facts subsequent to November 30, 1948, which indicate a need for immediate action, and a larger appropriation now. I quote at this time from the Hartford, Conn., Courant of Friday, January 28, 1949. The headline is "State jobless at high point for 10 years—Compensation claims of 44,264 last week up by 4 percent":

State Labor Commissioner John J. Egan said Thursday that claims for unemployment compensation payments are at the highest point in 10 years with the exception of the reconversion period at the close of the war.

Claims last week totaled 44,364, about 4 percent above the preceding week and 85.3 percent above a year ago.

New claims total 7,821, a rise of 800 above the preceding week and 107 higher than new claims a year ago.

Bridgeport continues to lead the State in the number of unemployed, with 7,508 claims for unemployment payments last week. Claims in other cities were New Haven, 7,172; Hartford, 4,605; Waterbury, 4,374, and Stamford, 2,953.

About 650 workers were laid off by textile mills in the Norwich area due to lack of orders. Lay-offs were also reported in the casters, electrical parts, turbine, screw machine, metal products, tire, lumber, and carpeting industries.

To bring that a little more up to date, I desire to quote from the New Haven (Conn.) Register of February 9, 1949, which carried this very imposing headline: "City's jobless double in month; now at 7,000—Survey indicates trend to shorter workweek—Smaller shops hardest hit—Uncertainty over future, seasonal lay-offs blamed for mounting idle total." This article is very interesting as much as it is startling and alarming. I sincerely hope it is not the recording of a definite trend of affairs in the days just ahead of us. I ask you to give it your attention:

Unemployment in New Haven has doubled in the last month. There are 7,000 workers unemployed as of today. About 3,500 who were working a month ago are not working now.

My colleagues, I am not reading any dispatches from 1932 or 1933 or any of the so-called depression years. This is February 9, 1949. The article continues:

The round-number figures were made public today by Mrs. Alice Marshall, manager of the New Haven branch office of the Connecticut State Employment Service.

Seasonal lay-offs can account for some of it. Finishing of building jobs without acquiring new construction contracts has left many workers stranded in the city, and that accounts for more.

But a good share of the unemployment, according to Mrs. Marshall, "comes about in lay-offs of from one to a dozen men, not only in the larger plants, but in New Haven's numerous small shops."

WORKWEEK CUT

In addition to swollen unemployment figures working hours showed a trend to cut back from overtime to the 40-hour week. In some places the workweek is under 40 hours.

There are a number of examples given here in this news item and I cite some as I continue reading the New Haven Register:

For example, the New Haven Clock Co., hard hit by importation of cheap Swiss clock movements, February 1 went on a 4-day week. That reduced by 20 percent the income of 1,000 people.

The American Steel & Wire Co., employing 1,000 went on a 4-day week in some departments, affecting 200 men. S. B. Metcalf said, "Business has fallen off, and we are going to cut back on hours rather than lay off men. We will do that until it hits a 3-day week, if necessary."

SMALL SHOPS HIT

Mrs. Marshall said it was in New Haven's numerous small shops that the cut-back was most apparent. "When a firm that employs 15 or 20 men lays off 2 or 3, that adds up. And when a company which employs 500 men lays off 15 instead of a usual seasonal 10, that is 5 men out of a job, and it adds up."

Most men laid off, she said, "hope they will be taken on again soon and the manufacturers do too." But they are not on a definite call-back basis.

Mrs. Marshall cited factors which manufacturers think operate adversely. They included uncertainty in regard to taxes, price changes in consumers' goods, foreign competition in some lines such as the clock business.

To bring the attendant facts still more up to date, I wish at this time to call the attention of the Committee to a release from the Connecticut State Labor Department, which was released on February 9, 1949, for the morning papers of February 10. I read from that release:

Reaching its highest point since the reconversion lay-offs in 1945, the number of jobless claimants for unemployment insurance benefits in Connecticut rose to 49,822 during the week ended February 5, Labor Commissioner John J. Egan stated today. This was 9 percent more than a week ago and 101 percent over the 24,793 who filed a year ago.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Committee that this is ample evidence for increasing this particular deficiency appropriation at this time without waiting for the investigations of the Committees on Appropriations and the Budget Bureau, which I am sure will substantiate what I have said not only for my district, which is the entire State of Connecticut, but also throughout the United States. May I ask for your favorable consideration of my amendment when it is offered under the 5-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, namely:

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask if there is any appropriation in this bill for the Committee on Un-American Activities?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, so far as I know there is not. The appropriation for the Committee on Un-American Activities comes out of the contingent fund of the House and there is no money carried for that purpose here. I believe that that is correct.

Mr. CANNON. There is no money involved in this bill for that committee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is very vital that that money should be expended by the Congress for these investigations of subversive activities.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman will yield, the money has already been appropriated.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But I wanted to draw attention to the importance of it.

I want to read to the Congress a letter that came to me this morning. This is one letter. I have received a great many threats recently. This letter begins "Valentine Day." It reads:

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: Here is a valentine for you. Lay off your activities against us now, or we will get you. Who are we? We are the Nazis. We are the loyal supporters of Hitler. Long may he live. Down with the Israelites. Down with the Jews.

Then it reads: Signed "The Nazis."

I bring this letter to the attention of the Members of the House because I have received a great many threats recently. I warn the House and the country that not only communism stalks in the United States today but also nazism and Hitlerism. There are disloyal, subversive persons in the United States. They should be sent from the shores of America. No effort should be spared to remove them. They appear in strange and unexpected places. I believe they will be caught.

This letter will be turned over to the FBI, as well as other information that I have in my possession.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE HOUSE

Miscellaneous items

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1949, the appropriation for "Miscellaneous items" for the House of Representatives in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1949, shall be available for purchase of new or used typewriters at prices which do not exceed prices established under the provisions of the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1949.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to speak for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to call the attention of the committee to page 3 of the bill under the title "Architect of the Capitol, Capitol Building, Senate and House Roofs and Chambers."

I am calling this to the attention of the committee in order that I may give you a brief summary of what has taken place relative to the improvement of these Chambers.

Several years ago a special committee was appointed by the Speaker, with the thought of improving the interior of the House of Representatives. It was my privilege to serve as the ranking member on that particular committee, then as chairman of that particular committee, and today as the ranking minority member of the committee, under the chairmanship of the capable gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

We have taken the position for some years that we would hold in abeyance any construction on these Chambers so that we might give to those individuals out in our respective districts the opportunity to obtain building material which is necessary for them to construct homes which are so badly needed. We also took into consideration the high construction costs and the high material costs, if you please, feeling that possibly at a later date these material costs would be less, and possibly at sometime we might get into a depression and have an unemployment program whereby we would have our plans ready to immediately step into the construction and the remodeling and improvement of these Chambers. That was the policy of your committee prior to the present time. We also objected during that past period of allowing this construction to be done on what is known as a cost-plus basis. Some of us are of the firm conviction that all should be given an opportunity to bid on the project, should be given an opportunity to have their day in court, so to speak, rather than to continue further on that philosophy and method of the Federal Government whereby we are developing a policy of letting contracts on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis. When you go back to your private business I am certain that if you had a house to build or some other structure that you would ask for bids on it; then you would get value received for the dollar you spent. On a cost-plus basis, as set forth in this bill, you seldom know what your costs will be until the project is completed.

The question arises in our minds, just how much the repairs on this building, on this Chamber, will cost if we get into the category set forth in this bill of cost-plus-a-fixed fee. We have heard for quite some time that we who are members of the Legislative Committee should be careful and always protect our rights. Here is an appropriation measure that contains a definite legislative provision. I will quote from the bill:

The Architect of the Capitol is authorized to enter into contracts—including cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts as approved by the Special Committee on Reconstruction of House Roof and Skylights and Remodeling of the House Chamber, and to make such other expenditures as may be necessary for the improvements affecting the House wing of the Capitol authorized by such acts, in such amounts as may be approved by the House committee appointed under section 1 of the act of July 17, 1945, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of that act.

Please note—

I may call to your attention the fact that previously we had authorized and appropriated $585,000 for the remodeling of this Chamber. Approximately one-half of that amount has been spent to date for plans, designs, and specifications; or approximately $292,500. This legislation gives further authorization and an appropriation of $2,274,500; and a contract is to be awarded, if you please, on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis.

We did not have any meetings of the special committee until this morning we were called into session by the chairman of our committee. He presented to us a letter to sign; and I should like to read it to you. This is a letter dated February 15, 1949, today, and on the bottom of it appears this statement: "Members of House committee appointed under Public Law 155, Seventy-ninth Congress," and then there is supposed to be the signature of the House committee. It is addressed to Mr. David Lynn, Architect of the Capitol, and reads as follows:

MY DEAR MR. LYNN—

Mr. Lynn, by the way, is the national architect. He handed us this letter for us to sign, a letter which I believe he had written and addressed to himself. The letter is as follows:

MY DEAR MR. LYNN: Subject to the enactment of the necessary legislation and appropriation in the First Deficiency Act, 1949, you are hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts and to incur such other obligations as may be necessary for the reconstruction of the roof over the House wing of the Capitol and improvement of the House Chamber, cloakrooms, and other adjacent areas included in the House project as approved by the House committee appointed under Public Law 155, Seventy-ninth Congress, in a total amount of not to exceed $2,567,000.

The contracts may be let on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis to such extent and in such manner as in your judgment is to the best interest of the Government.

You are further authorized to award the general contract for the House project on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis to the Consolidated Engineering Co., of Baltimore, Md., presently employed under contract of October 28, 1948, as the general contractor for the reconstruction of the roof over the Senate wing of the Capitol and improvement of the Senate Chamber, cloakrooms, and other adjacent areas.

Allow me to divert a moment and call your attention to the fact that this is on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis. In this letter we are giving Mr. Lynn the authority to enter into a contract with one individual, if you please, the Consolidated Engineering Co., of Baltimore.

Now, if I may go on with the letter of instructions that the committee received:

The committee authorizes the award of the general contract to the Consolidated Engineering Co., without further competitive bidding, for the following reasons, predicated on the urgency of the time element:

(a) The materials and equipment required for the House project cannot be fabricated and delivered to the site in time to permit the start of construction work on July 1, 1949, unless orders for the same are placed immediately upon the approval of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1949.

(b) Inviting of competitive bids and subbids for the House project, including bid analyses, conferences, and other details necessary prior to contract award, would cause too great a loss of time to permit scheduling, fabrication, and delivery of the required materials and equipment to the site by July 1, 1949.

(c) Utilization, insofar as practicable, of Senate subcontract bids for the House project at the same price levels used for the Senate project, which prices are the result of comparatively recent competitive bidding, will enable the House materials and equipment, which are similar in character to the Senate materials and equipment, to be included in the Senate production schedules, thereby expediting fabrication and enabling the maintenance of construction progress schedule for the House work on the same basis as the Senate work.

(d) Award of the general contract to the Consolidated Engineering Co. will eliminate the time losses that would otherwise be entailed not only by the securing of competitive bids and the possible necessity of having to work out the details of contract negotiations with another general contractor, but entailed also by the details necessarily incident to negotiations with different subcontractors than those employed for the Senate project, and the working out of new production schedules and other procedures.

Then there is a space for the members of the committee to sign.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I am reading this whole detailed report because I firmly believe this committee should know about the whole procedure. I read the letter that was given to us in all fairness by Mr. Lynn, the Architect. It is entirely up to this committee. If you want to let the contract for the remodeling and repairing of this Chamber on a cost-plus-fixed-fee basis, it is in this bill. If you pass it as it is then you are giving complete authority and really a directive, to this special committee to enter into an agreement and award the contract to this one company on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the gentleman state how many members of the committee have signed that letter?

Mr. McGREGOR. None of the members of the committee have signed it yet because the Member speaking raised the question this morning whether or not we had any authority to bind this Congress to the expenditure of over $2,000,000, without further enabling legislation. It was suggested that we get a letter from the Comptroller General, Mr. Warren, citing his opinion before deciding whether or not we should sign this letter to Mr. Lynn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. McGREGOR. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, these are the facts and it is up to the committee to decide what they want done.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

CAPITOL BUILDING, SENATE AND HOUSE ROOFS AND CHAMBERS

Capitol Building: For an additional amount to enable the Architect of the Capitol to carry forward the improvements affecting the House Wing of the Capitol authorized by the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act of June 27, 1940 (54 Stat. 629), as amended by the acts of June 8, 1942 (56 Stat. 342), and July 17, 1945 (59 Stat. 72), $2,274,500. The Architect of the Capitol is authorized to enter into contracts, including cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts as approved by the Special Committee on Reconstruction of House Roof and Skylights and Remodeling of House Chamber, and to make such other expenditures as may be necessary for the improvements affecting the House Wing of the Capitol authorized by such acts, in such amounts as may be approved by the House committee appointed under section 1 of the act of July 17, 1945, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of that act: Provided, That the amounts so approved by such committee may be obligated in full prior to the actual appropriation thereof.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGREGOR: Page 3, line 6, strike out all of the paragraph.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, this amendment is offered so that each and every one of you will be given an opportunity to decide whether or not you want the remodeling done which will cost, in addition to what has been allocated, $2,274,500. This amendment would simply strike out that particular section of the deficiency bill which gives an authorization for the remodeling of this chamber and the adjoining cloak rooms. An authorization to be established under the legislation on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis. I am certain that the other members of the committee, on which it is my privilege to serve, will not object to allowing you to decide whether or not you want to continue that procedure in Federal construction.

Again I reiterate my previous statement, if this amendment is turned down, the repairs of this section of the Capitol will, at least, be temporarily delayed. The procedure that we have carried for a number of years is that we should not repair at this time and allow the material, and that which is necessary for the repairs, to go to the individual who is having a difficult time to find material and labor to build a house. I am leaving it for your consideration whether or not you want to authorize a contract being entered into on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis to the extent of $2,274,500 for the repair of these chambers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Do I understand that neither the gentleman nor the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] agreed with this program?

Mr. McGREGOR. We have not agreed with the program, nor have we disagreed with it, I will say to the gentleman from New York. We gave consideration to it this morning. The question was raised whether or not we should sign the letter to Mr. Lynn, which has been previously referred to. The question was also raised whether or not we should enter into a contract of a cost-plus nature to the extent of $2,274,500. I want to be perfectly fair; a similar arrangement has been made in the Senate. They are following through on a cost-plus basis, but we have always taken the position that we are not going to do it on this side.

Mr. TABER. Frankly, I will not say that it is in the testimony, but I understood when this matter was before the committee that the gentleman's committee had approved it. Now, if that is not so, that is a different picture.

Mr. McGREGOR. I will say to the gentleman that we have not approved it. We had no meeting until this morning, and the statement referred to was handed to us, and we—I think in all fairness to those who have honored us with that responsibility—refused to sign the statement, and that is the reason I am taking the floor here today so that the committee may know what is incorporated in this legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the gentleman in a position to state whether there is an emergent condition here which should be cured immediately or as soon as possible?

Mr. McGREGOR. I will answer that by repeating the statement that our good friend, the minority leader, made, "It is unsightly but safe."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Just exactly what will be our situation? I am tired of this bandywork being over my head and destroying the symmetry and beauty of this Chamber. I have talked to the Architect of the Capitol and he says this work can be done in 5 months. If you strike out this paragraph, what will be our situation? Are we going to get this work done?

Mr. McGREGOR. May I say to the Speaker that it will require approximately a year to complete the whole project, and it would have to be done in two 5- or 6-months periods, for reasons that I am certain all of us are familiar with. Should we not pass this legislation, it probably would go over until another year, and if you did not decide then to do it then it would go over to another year. It is entirely within our power to authorize its construction at any time.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is just exactly what I think about this. If you strike this out, then no one can tell when this work will be done. Frankly, I do not feel any too safe under this thing. If we are not going to do anything if this is stricken out, then I would certainly be opposed to striking out this paragraph. I think this work ought to be done. I think this Chamber ought to be modernized. I think we ought to have better seats in here.

Mr. McGREGOR. New seating arrangement is covered in the plans.

Mr. RAYBURN. We ought to have a great many other things. I should like to see this gray painted out and put back to gold, that was around here for so many years and that was so beautiful and so attractive to the eye. I do not like coldness when I can have warmth. I just fear that if you strike out this paragraph we are not going to get this job done in 2 or 5 or 10 years.

Mr. McGREGOR. Carrying further the statement of our distinguished Speaker it is incorporated in this legislation or at least the plans that if it goes through there will be a different seating arrangement; the plans have been in the Architect's office for many, many months where all can see them. There is a different seating arrangement being arranged for. The acoustical part is being taken care of. The beam work is taken out. The roof is changed. It will be the privilege of the various Members of Congress to decide what they want to do with the seals of their respective States, because the ceiling will be entirely different.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. If I understand it, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR] is not opposed to the face-lifting operation but only to the manner in which the operation is to be performed. I agree with the gentleman. Surely there should be no objection to consulting various doctors of architecture. It would be better to consult and successfully operate rather than to operate without consultation and find that instead of effecting a cure, we had only succeeded in deforming.

Mr. McGREGOR. I certainly want this committee to know just what this section of the bill really does. We are most assuredly closing the door to any competitive bidding and closing the door to any other contractor, and allowing that one to construct on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis.

I am certain that the other members of the special committee will join me when I say, "We want you to decide."

My personal opinion is that it should not be repaired now in the face of high prices, critical-material shortages, and I certainly do not like, or do I think it is fair to the taxpayers, a cost-plus construction procedure.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have just this to say. The Architect of the Capitol—and I think everyone else understands this situation—thinks that it would be so much easier to do both these works at the same time. I fear, and let me express the fear again, that if we do not do this as provided in this bill we will not do anything for some years to come. I have talked with the Architect of the Capitol about this. I think it is his idea that these contracts ought to be carried on at the same time. I do not see why we should not look after our business and our comfort here just as the other body or anybody else does. I hope this provision is not stricken out of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I am wondering if something could not be done that would result in an amendment that would perhaps do away with this idea of letting the contract on a cost-plus basis to this one contractor, and leave it to the approval of this committee, composed of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR], before a contract is entered into.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not like cost-plus contracts. I believe this is the one way we are going to get this job done within a year or two, to be frank about it.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in not to exceed 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. Many of you know of my great concern regarding the danger of possibly destroying valuable American architecture. I have gone all over this problem from its inception. There is absolutely nothing wrong with this ceiling. The original plan was to repair the roof because the Architect and the engineers whom we brought here to Washington at the expense of the Government, to examine the ceiling, found some defects in the iron. Then we feared that a heavy snowfall would cause the roof to cave in because we had an instance where a heavy snow falling on the roof of a theater caused the death of some people some years ago.

We removed the roof over this Chamber and put up the superstructure and these iron supports for additional safety. However, the ceiling is in excellent condition. There is nothing the matter with it. I have seen some of the proposed plans, and I fear that when they are completed, some valuable American architecture, which should be preserved for posterity, would be removed. Your State seals will be removed. When they get through with this program of face lifting the Capitol of the United States, because there is an apparent defect in the dome where the lip hangs over the cornice, you will find that they are going to remove column after column of historical American architecture. The cornstalk pillars designed by Thomas Jefferson will be removed. Many of the statues, I am told, will be farmed out to the States. I, too, do not like to disagree with my distinguished Speaker, but I believe that we should have this matter reviewed in order that every Member of the House will realize his responsibility in voting for something that at some time they may be sorry for—something that will destroy American architecture which should be preserved for posterity.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If this paragraph is stricken out of the bill, is there any reason in the world why we cannot bring in, if necessary, a special resolution after the other body has considered the matter?

Mr. STEFAN. There is no hurry about it at all. We have many, many new Members here who also believe in preserving American architecture. Let them study this program which is designed to streamline the Capitol; to take away the State seals and put in neon lights and make this historic Chamber look like a modern night club.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. What does the gentleman suggest that we do about this matter? This roof has been condemned. What should we do about it?

Mr. STEFAN. The ceiling is intact and in perfect condition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska really think that that is a correct statement?

Mr. STEFAN. That is what I am told, sir. I have crawled over every part of the roof that has been removed.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been told otherwise. I do not know why, if the ceiling is in good condition, why we should have all this steel framework over our heads.

Mr. STEFAN. I would not debate that point with my distinguished Speaker, but I have gone into this matter carefully and I have been told by the Architect that the ceiling is in perfect condition. I have been told that your State seals, from Kentucky and Maine and Ohio, and every State in the Union, would be removed. They have shown me other designs for changing the appearance of this Chamber.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then why is this steel structure erected over us if the ceiling is safe? Why do we have these steel girders supporting the ceiling?

Mr. STEFAN. For the reason of additional protection, since they removed most of the roof, because we are liable to have a snow that would come down on top of the ceiling. You could make this Chamber safe by putting on the roof that they originally wanted to replace. There has been no change in this historic Chamber from the very time it was constructed, except the seating capacity or arrangement. No other change has been made. And yet overnight, Members of the House, you are participating in a program that some day you will regret.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the original committee, together with Senator CONNALLY, to investigate the roofs of the Chambers. We went up there, and we were astonished. This roof is somewhat similar to a bridge construction. It is up beyond this glass ceiling, and, incidentally, what appears to be plaster overhead is cast iron. That is a cast-iron ceiling that weighs either 80 or 120 tons. I am calling this figure from memory. This bridge roof support is of old-fashioned iron construction, with pins holding the two elements together in the brace of the roof. Those pins were bent, each pin going in two directions, proving to anyone who would look at them that the pins were broken somewhere in between. This roof is dangerous. When it was brought to the attention of the able Speaker of this House as a precautionary measure, we proceeded to put in this beamwork, inside of this Chamber, which I want to explain to the new Members of the House does not belong in this room and would not be in this room for this period of time, had it not been for the war which came along, and, of course, set all things of this nature aside by reason of its immensity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how long is this bridgework to be in this room? How long are we to sit idly by, when people come to the Capitol, and ask them to hide behind posts to take a look at the House of Representatives, that cannot even put their own Chamber in order without debate such as we have had here this afternoon?

Over and above that, the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol, the Senate Chamber, is smaller than this Chamber, and that roof is in a similar condition, because all of the air-conditioning has been hung in these roofs, among other things up there that were not there originally, adding weight to a condition which made it all the more dangerous, both here and over in the Senate.

The Senate has entered into an agreement with the contractors, and they did it in the Eightieth, Republican Congress, for the repair of their Chamber. They are to vacate the Chamber by the 30th of June of this year. Now, do we want trucks and whistles and hoists out in front for 4 or 5 years, to the inconvenience of the American people when they come to the Capital of the United States, or do we want to step on the gas and get this thing over with? I see no reason why we should not proceed to take the bridgework out of this Chamber. It is very nice for my friend the gentleman from Nebraska to talk about moving a statue or moving something else. They have been moving statues and men around this building for a long time; they have moved them out since I have been here; and I was moved with them once.

Many statues were taken out of the rotunda a few years ago, as you older Members will recall, and it is no longer permitted to place them away from the sides of the room, for they have all been moved closer to the supporting walls, because it was discovered there was a danger from the concentrated weight.

This roof is 90 years old; it was built according to the standards of those days. It should be taken off now just like a chap would shed his ancient cap.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if I understood correctly the description of the structure above us as given both by the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Michigan, there is a difference between the ceiling and the ironwork that we see, and the roof itself which is or was above the ceiling. Apparently the condition of the roof itself was responsible for the ironwork. I remember that shortly after I came here this ironwork was put in because we were told that if a heavy snow should come, the ceiling might fall on us; but apparently a distinction should be made between the ceiling, including these sections which carry the State seals, and the structure of the roof above.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. We held a brief hearing yesterday. As to the safeness, or the unsafeness, if you choose to call it such, of this ceiling, we have been assured that the roof has been removed. These beams were put in; and as I have said before, and the evidence before our committee will show, it is unsightly but safe.

The gentleman from Michigan said the roof has been here for 80 or 90 years. I might say to my distinguished friend that that section has been moved and was moved when we put in these new beams.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman is not correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Just a minute. If I have time I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Now, personally, I would like to see the seals preserved up here. This morning I read in one of the columns, I think it was in the Washington Post, that under the plan that had been agreed to, if this language should prevail, these seals would be removed.

I should like to know whether the plan as presently contemplated does include the removal of the seals from the ceiling? Could some gentleman of the committee advise me definitely on that point?

Mr. McGREGOR. As a member of the committee I may say that it has been agreed that the seals will be removed and will be taken care of according to the will of the various State organizations.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is if we approve this language.

Mr. McGREGOR. That is right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then our only chance to preserve the seals for the House of Representatives is to take the language out.

Mr. McGREGOR. Either that or endeavor to get your committee to change the plans of remodeling so that the seals will be retained; but under present plans and specifications the seals will be removed. That is called for.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I share the desire of the Speaker to see this work done. We should agree upon a plan for the work and go ahead with it; but if the present plans, as they appear to, mean the removal of the State seals from the Chamber of the House of Representatives I shall be compelled to support the amendment to strike this language from the bill. In voting that way, however, I do not want it understood as meaning that I am opposed to getting rid of this ironwork and the unsafe condition of the Chamber, but rather that I want the seals preserved for the House of Representatives.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder how many Members of this body have taken the trouble to go down to the Architect's rooms and see the plans? I wonder if they know that these two doorways will be changed, that the position of the portraits will be changed, that Brumidi's painting of General Washington and Lord Cornwallis will be removed—Why? Because there must be balance in the Chamber and there is no painting in the corresponding corner on the other side of the Chamber. Not only will this ceiling of the State seals be destroyed but also all the decorations will be changed. There will be columns on either side of the Speaker's chair that might bury the Speaker behind them. Columns are formal and cold and out of keeping with this present old room so filled with understanding between the Speaker and those of us on the floor. And these are but the simpler changes.

It seems to me a great pity that we in this young country do not see the value to posterity of this great Capitol. A thousand years hence—and we hope this Capitol will still be here—the young people will not bless us if we remove all evidence of ourselves and our methods and our ways of life.

You know well that in the other countries of the world, in the old countries of the world, it is very wonderful to go into their houses of parliament, or whatever they may be called. Redolent of the past they give dignity to all that there transpires—they are living history.

Let me call attention again to the condition between the ceiling and the roof. If the contractors so lack ingenuity that they cannot find ways of making the roof safe over and above this old-fashioned, traditional ceiling, we had better find another contractor!

I too agree with the Speaker in the matter of the removal of our factory construction—but here under these iron beams we fought a war like no other war.

For myself—and I am certain that I speak for the people of this great Republic—I would rather keep the factory supports a little longer than destroy this atmosphere. By all means let us have new chairs, but not new walls. You have not seen the picture of the dull, arched ceiling, the uninteresting design. If you had, you would not lend yourselves to this destruction.

They say we will be able to hear. If we are quiet, we can always hear. Are you so sure the change will do all you say it will?

To use as an argument the removal of these steel struts to strengthen a roof that can be strengthened up above and so destroy an atmosphere that has seen some of the great of our country, within whose walls vibrates something we cannot afford to lose, Mr. Chairman, will deprive those who come after us of a rich heritage they can ill afford to lose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take 5 minutes. I would like to direct your attention, however, to the fact that before long an analogous situation will no doubt be presented to the Congress. I refer to the situation that involves the historic White House. It is said on good authority that the present structure could be reduced and a new structure be built to meticulous specifications as to present form at a cost of $2,000,000. It is further said that to preserve that historic structure as is, with suitable improvements, will cost from six to eight million dollars, and you are going to have to ultimately decide that when the appropriation for that estimate comes before the Congress.

Now, the wails have gone up all over this country at the very thought of destroying that historic structure, and voices have been raised all over this country to preserve it, cost what it may. Now you will have to meet that issue again a little later on.

I am inclined to agree with the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] and my good friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]. I was here when these atrocious supports were put in this room. As a Member of the House of Representatives I have not suffered any by it. I have seen the plans that are proposed. Far be it from me to attempt to assess whether those plans are the best that could be prepared or not. But, let me tell you that if you vote for this proposal you are going to vote to destroy this Chamber of the House of Representatives as we have known it and as the people have known it for the last 90 years.

Maybe we have reached a point where sentiment means nothing, but in my vote it still does mean something. I would hate to have this Chamber transformed in the manner in which it has been suggested and thus for all time destroy the identity of this Chamber with the historic past. It is more than just a mere changing of the roof, Mr. Chairman. There is more to this situation than just the mere expenditure of this money in order to improve the comfort of people who are involved.

Mr. RAYBURN. Right there, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I gladly yield to the distinguished Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. Neither the Architect of the Capitol nor anyone else during the next 2 years can make any plans for changing this structure unless they consult with the committee of the House named by the Speaker the other day. That committee is composed of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TRIMBLE], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN]. Neither the Architect of the Capitol nor anybody else could do anything without the approval of that committee.

Mr. KEEFE. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I read the language of the bill, it says:

> The Architect of the Capitol is authorized to enter into contracts * * * in such amounts as may be approved by the House committee—

And so on. I understand from the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR] that the Architect of the Capitol has already, before the passage of this act, presented a letter of approval of this program to go into effect, and the whole necessity and urgency is based upon the fact that unless he is immediately authorized to enter into this contract in collaboration with the contract that has been entered into to improve the Senate, that we will not get what we want.

Mr. RAYBURN. The bill goes on to say:

and to make such other expenditures as may be necessary for the improvements affecting the House wing of the Capitol authorized by such acts, in such amounts as may be approved by the House committee—

And so forth.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, I understand that, but for all practical purposes does not the Speaker realize, and I am sure he does, that if we pass this appropriation this afternoon, the balance of it is merely perfunctory because the plan has already been submitted to the committee? The committee is prepared to go ahead, and the very basis of it all is speed. We must work in cooperation with this firm of contractors that is doing over the Senate. I wish it could be done that way and preserve this historic Chamber.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the statements made on this floor by the gentlewoman from Ohio and the gentleman from Wisconsin. The bill brought before us is a deficiency bill. This is considered so important a matter that we cannot wait for 6 weeks, or whatever the time may be, before an appropriation bill comes before this House in its regular order appropriating $2,274,500.

If the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the Speaker of the House, is correct, and it is necessary for the committee still to approve plans, for plans still to be completed, then it seems to me it is primary evidence that it is not necessary for this item to be in a deficiency appropriation bill. It might very well take its proper order. The committee might consider the plans, vote upon them, pass them, and determine the amount of money, for if the plans have not been approved, how does the committee know the amount of money that is necessary?

However, I call attention primarily to two things. One has already been spoken of by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], and that is that right downtown, at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, we have a house which does not have the historic associations of the Chamber in which we sit today. Here the laws of the United States have been made. In the other house they have only been carried out. This is the body, this is the building, this is the Chamber, in which United States history has been made. Yet when it comes to repairing the White House, at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, we have evidence before our committee that $6,400,000 is to be spent on the White House to preserve the White House as it stands, when a like building, similar in every way, better and more modern, could in the words of the head of the Public Buildings Administration be built for half that amount. It seems to me that here, in this Chamber, is where the historic evidences of the history of this country ought to be preserved.

So let me tell you what England did under exactly the same situation. England during the last war was bombed, bombed thoroughly, bombed as I hope this country may never know what bombing is. The House of Parliament was struck by bombs. The House of Commons was completely destroyed, gutted, nothing left standing except the walls, with everything else open to the air. The chamber of the House of Commons, which goes down in its history and in the hearts of the people of England as this building should go down in the hearts of the people of America, never was big enough, or has not been big enough for generations, to seat all of the members of the House of Commons at one time.

What would have happened in this country? If this is any evidence, architects and committees and Architects of the Capitol and building contractors would immediately have rushed in and said, "Here is our chance. Now let us build a great big room, a great big new room. There isn't anything left. Let us build one that will take all the members of the House of Commons at one time." Did they do that? No. The new House of Commons which is now being built in England is exactly the same size, an exact replica of the room which was bombed during the war.

It seems to me that while this may not be the most important matter to come before this House this session, it is a very important matter. If this Nation is to be preserved, we must look back to some of the principles that were established in this room, and we should be reminded by the room of what those principles were and of their association with the history of the United States.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. Am I not correct in believing that this Chamber, this building of our young Republic is the oldest House of Representatives in the world? The British Chamber is younger than this. I think the French Chamber is, and I know of no chamber where the elected representatives of the people meet any place in the world that is as old as this 90-year-old Chamber in which we meet.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman. I am sure we should preserve it.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of California. I want to supplement what the gentleman said about the House of Commons in England. When I was there the Assistant Speaker told us that the reason they did not enlarge the Chamber, or at least one of the pertinent reasons, was that they always have so many people absent, about 100 or 150, that if they enlarge the Chamber, the absence would be so much more noticeable and that they therefore retained the old size.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Is the gentleman suggesting that, in making this change, we reduce the size of this Chamber?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEFAN) there were—ayes 74, noes 116.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. RABAUT and Mr. MCGREGOR.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 78, noes 122.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WORLEY. In view of the difference of opinion in the House, I wonder if it would be satisfactory if we just repaired the roof on the Democratic side and let the Republican side stay as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2632, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. PATTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTEN. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Congress, I am not in sympathy with the manner in which the Veterans' Affairs Committee was conducted this morning. A bill of such magnitude was reported out that it might involve as much as $200,000,000,000 in the future, and affects thousands of veterans.

This bill was reported with a total hearing time of 7 minutes, having never been seen by many members of the committee prior to the meeting this morning. I shall always object to conducting a committee hearing in this fashion.

I have a very keen interest in the problems of veterans and I am anxious to see this particular bill be given full and adequate consideration by the Members of both Houses. Certainly a bill affecting the very life and welfare of our veterans should be given every consideration and study. The committee, I feel, was being put in a position to place its stamp of approval upon proposed legislation regardless of its feeling in the matter, and without giving the Members a chance to pursue the details in the bill.

Neither was their help asked or their advice requested on what may or may not be best in this legislation. We believe that, because we are on this committee, we are responsible to the veteran and are his voice on matters pertaining to legislation that concern him as well as the public in general. Therefore, it behooves the chairman, as well as the committee members, to familiarize themselves with any measures that are brought before the committee for its action. My 5 years in the service, with 31 months overseas, justify my belief that I have as great an interest in this legislation and in the veterans and their problems as any Member of this Congress. My continued interest in veterans' organizations since my discharge in 1945 further substantiates this.

It was necessary for the members of the committee to decide in 7 minutes what the minimum age would be for a pension, and to vote to exclude the 62–64-age group without an adequate presentation of background data to substantiate this exclusion. Further, the bill provided for the pensioning of those other than honorably discharged from the armed services and gave consideration to non-service-connected disability veterans below the age of 65. The chairman of this committee did not permit me or any other member of the committee the opportunity to ask questions or discuss these facts, but in an arbitrary manner himself called for a roll-call vote. I consider that he has exceeded his authority as chairman and is not providing adequate opportunity for the problems of veterans to be considered, for members of the committee to be heard, or for information to be distributed and assimilated.

MR. CORBETT DESIGNATED TO READ WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the special order agreed to today, the Chair designates the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT] to read Washington's Farewell Address immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday, February 22, 1949.

PROGRAM FOR THE BALANCE OF THE WEEK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, last week I announced that if the bill (H. R. 782) to constitute the Federal Security Agency a Department of Welfare were reported out of committee, that it would be on the program for this week. The bill is still in the committee; and even if it were reported now, the bill could not come up this week.

With that exception the program is the same as heretofore announced.

With the completion of the bill now under consideration there will follow H. R. 1661, the Export Control Act; House Resolution 66, the investigation of public lands; and House Resolution 75, investigation by the Committee on Education and Labor.

There will be a bill out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House Joint Resolution 92, continuing the authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate ships until June 30, 1949.

If these bills are disposed of by Thursday, it is my intention to ask to adjourn over until the following Monday.

REPUBLICAN OBJECTORS ON CONSENT AND PRIVATE CALENDARS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House I wish to state that the Republican objectors on the Consent Calendar will be the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER].

The objectors on the Private Calendar will be the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LICHTENWALTER].

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter to the editor of the New York Times.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Passaic (N. J.) Herald-News on housing.

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. O'NEILL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Times-Leader-Evening News of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a short statement.

Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE].

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow following the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore granted for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER TRANSFERRED

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I had for tomorrow be changed to Thursday of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced House Joint Resolution 161, and my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, ANDREW BIEMILLER, has introduced an identical resolution, calling for the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project—a project which has been the hope and dream of the people of the Great Lakes area for over two decades, and one which is necessary to the future prosperity and welfare of the entire Midwest section of the United States. There is no need to present a detailed analysis of the provisions of this resolution on this occasion. The effect of this bill is to authorize the President to approve the 1941 agreement with Canada to permit the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project in cooperation with Canada.

The advantages of constructing the St. Lawrence project are so obvious, so convincing, and so well known that I need mention them only in passing. By building the necessary dams, locks, and canals to remove the obstructions to shipping in the 119-mile bottleneck between Ogdensburg, N. Y., and Montreal, Canada, a great inland seaway of 2,351 miles in length would be made available to ocean shipping. This would mean that the deep-sea vessels from all over the world would be able to steam up the St. Lawrence River from the Atlantic Ocean, and unload their cargoes at the Great Lakes ports of Duluth, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, and Buffalo.

Such an inland shipping system would mean great savings in transportation costs to consumers and producers alike. It is estimated that the average reduction in transportation costs would be about $3.90 per ton. Automobiles could be shipped from Detroit at a saving of $12.24 a ton. Wheat and flour could be shipped from Duluth at a saving of $1.61 per ton, and could be laid down in Liverpool at 5 to 8 cents less per bushel. Crude rubber could be brought to Detroit at a saving of $8 per long ton. The dairy products of the Great Lakes region could be transported to the Atlantic coast at a saving of $4 per ton. In other words, savings in transportation costs would amount to between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 per year, which means that the seaway would pay for itself in transportation savings alone in a few years' time.

The seaway would have the effect of stimulating trade between the east coast and the Midwest. Grain, flour, meat, and ores would flow from the Midwest to the East to be exchanged for the manufactured goods of the East. Trade between the two great regions would grow, employment would rise, and living standards in both areas would improve.

The power facilities of the St. Lawrence project would provide enormous amounts of cheap electric power to relieve the power famine now affecting New York and the New England States. It has been estimated that the United States share of electric power generated by the project would amount to 13,000,000 kilowatts per year at the very low rate of 1 mill per kilowatt. According to the New York Power Commission, St. Lawrence-generated power would save the people of New York some $26,000,000 per year in reduced power costs, and and would allow for the expansion of her retarded industries to employ 50,000 additional workers. The New England States would also benefit in a similar degree.

Just as the savings in transportation costs would pay for the cost of the seaway in a relatively short time, so will the electric power obtained from the project also offset in a few years' time the $571,000,000 outlay on the part of the United States for its construction.

The case for construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project is so overwhelming that it is a mystery why anyone would be opposed to it—the mystery is, Why was it not constructed years ago? The project has been an issue in the Congress year after year, and each time its supporters have been disappointed. However, the picture has been changing and support has been growing for the project by leaps and bounds.

An unprecedented series of developments have occurred recently to give the project a new and powerful stature and bring close the day when the Congress must recognize its intrinsic merit. President Harry S. Truman recommended the passage of the seaway measure three times during the month of January of this year, and has listed the seaway as an expenditure item in his 1950 budget. The appointment of Dean Acheson as Secretary of State is important, inasmuch as Mr. Acheson headed State Department activity in support of the project in the past, and he was also the former chairman of the Joint Canadian-American Defense Board.

Of equal significance has been the shift in position of the Great Lakes shipping interests. Mr. George Humphrey, of M. A. Hanna Co., has now come out in support of the seaway, and the influential Lake Carriers Association has decided to change its position from bitter hostility to one of neutrality. Shippers and leaders of industry have come to realize that the seaway is essential to the stabilization of the iron and steel industry—the backbone of the American industrial system.

Just as the movement supporting the seaway gathers momentum, we also find the opposition forces now resorting to new stratagems to prevent its realization.

I note from the press reports from Albany, N. Y., that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey is busily engaged in encouraging the passage of resolutions in the New York State Legislature to petition the President and the Congress to build the St. Lawrence power project and defer the seaway. I recall that during the Presidential campaign, when he came to Minnesota, he gave strong assurances that he is for the St. Lawrence seaway project, and if elected President he would vigorously press for congressional approval of the project. But, of course, Albany is not Minnesota, and we hear a different tone now since the Presidential campaign is over.

My friends in both great parties realize, however, that for the first time in the history of the country we have a President elected with the support of the Western States who has unequivocally stood for the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project to benefit the whole Nation, regardless of sectionalism. In fact, for the past 25 years no President has been elected to office who has not strongly and unequivocally supported the construction of this project for both power and navigation.

Needless to say, this Congress should not entertain any idea of following Governor Dewey's suggestion to develop power alone, for the following reasons:

First. As proposed by Governor Dewey, if St. Lawrence power alone is developed, the project will cost $49,000,000 more to the people of the State of New York and other Northeastern States, thereby increasing the cost of power developed to industries and consumers. It is not to the interest of the northeastern part of the United States to support this proposition. The Governor has kept this fact from the people of the State of New York.

Second. It is unfair to mislead the public of New York and other Northeastern States with the false hope that they will secure the power project without navigation, as both the Canadian Government and our own Federal Government have commitments and agreements for the joint development of the project. And those arrangements cannot be changed without years of delay and without welshing upon promises made to the people of this country and of Canada. I am sure that the Federal Government will not go back on its word and any false expectations aroused to the contrary merely mislead the public and play into the hands of the minority groups who oppose this great development.

Third. On account of the critical situation arising in the exhaustion of our raw materials upon which the industry of the Middle West and the whole country depend, the St. Lawrence seaway is just as vital to national interest as the power, hence no leader who only recently presumed to represent the country as a whole can, in good conscience and with frankness, propose the indefinite postponement of the seaway in order to satisfy minority pressure groups in New York and other Eastern States.

At a time when the press of the country is applauding the initiative taken by this country in support of democratic principles all over the world through economic and technical assistance, it is inconsistent to close our eyes to the greatest development within our grasp, which will make the North American Continent a strong and a better place in which to live.

Recently, Defense Minister Claxton, of Canada, gave a speech at Sault Ste. Marie, on January 11, emphasizing the importance of the joint seaway power development in the defense of the North American Continent, from which I quote in some length:

THE PLACE OF THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY IN OUR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Here we are, 1,500 miles from the sea at one of the four main junctures of Canada and the United States across the mighty St. Lawrence system. The foresight and cooperation of Canadians and Americans built the locks which opened the waterways system from Fort William to Sarnia and joined Lakes Superior, Michigan, and Huron into the greatest inland area of deep-water transportation on the face of the earth. What this single engineering job at the Sault has meant in profit to the people of Canada and the United States is impossible to calculate. More tonnage passes through the Sault Ste. Marie canals than through the Panama and Suez Canals combined, and this despite the short season.

The way opened here was extended by other canals on through Lakes Erie and Ontario, down the St. Lawrence as far as Prescott, adding 500 miles to deep-water inland navigation.

Now there is only the part from Prescott to Montreal blocking the flow of deep-water trade and travel from Lake Superior out into the oceans of the world.

You will recall that it was during the darkest days of the war that President Roosevelt and Mr. Mackenzie King worked out again an agreement for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway. The project was advocated as a great contribution to the peaceful life and trade of this continent, and it was planned as a definite line of communication for the defense of our continent.

If it was desirable in 1941 that we should construct the waterways for purposes of transportation and for power, recent events have shown that it is even more desirable today; if it was desirable to proceed with the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway for purposes of defense in 1941, nothing that has happened since has in any way diminished that need.

In the interest of national defense and international security the St. Lawrence waterway project should be started as soon as possible and pressed to completion. General economic benefits, transportation and communication, power, and iron ore are reasons which give the completion of the St. Lawrence urgent priority in joint defense. Let us examine each of these:

1. The completion of the waterways system, like every other major development of transportation and power, would lead to the expansion of the civilian economy, and any expansion in the industrial and economic potential which in peacetime leads to prosperity and a higher standard of living also leads to an increased ability to arm ourselves for our own defense. Here, in this home of steel, there is no need to remind you of what Hanson Baldwin said, that it was "the factories of America, the industrial know-how of America, and the mechanical competence of America * * * that won the war."

2. In the modern war the lines of communication stretch all the way from the battle front to the factories and the full use of the St. Lawrence would bring resources of the interior of our continent closer to any possible fighting front; it would permit the more effective mobilization of the industrial potential of the continent; it would make possible the construction of all but the largest vessels in the industrial centers of the Great Lakes; it would provide a means of transportation alternative to the railways.

3. We saw in the last war how important an element was water power. You may remember how it led us in 1942 to build at Arvida a plant bigger than Boulder Dam in a little more than a year. The United States and Canada need the full power potential of the St. Lawrence now.

4. The completion of the waterways would make it possible for the great resources of iron ore in northern Quebec and Labrador to be made safely available to the smelters of Canada and the United States.

This matter has already received the attention of the Permanent Joint Board of Defense. Ordinarily its recommendations are not made public, but this was of such interest that the recommendation of the Board in May 1947 was put in evidence by General Marshall at a congressional hearing. The Honorable James V. Forrestal, Secretary of Defense of the United States, gave evidence of the need for the project.

In these circumstances, it is not surprising that the Governments of the United States and of Canada, accepting the advice of their principal military and civilian advisers, are pressing for authority to proceed with the completion of the St. Lawrence waterway as a combined power and navigation project in the interests of prosperity in peace and security in war.

This speech by Defense Minister Claxton indicates the thinking of most Canadians—it shows that our neighbors to the north share the views of most Americans who today recognize the material benefits to be derived from the navigation and power facilities of the St. Lawrence project.

In addition, they agree with most high military officials in America that the seaway is an important link in our joint national defense system. For the seaway would provide both countries with a great inland water route protected against enemy submarine and air attacks in case of war—it would make available new and protected shipbuilding facilities where ocean vessels could be assembled and floated directly to the ocean.

Mr. Speaker, every postponement of the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project robs America of a valuable natural asset. The seaway will open the world's market to Midwest farmers, and stimulate commerce and trade between the east coast and the Great Lakes areas. It will provide vast quantities of cheap electric power to power-starved New England. It will directly benefit half of America, and indirectly the whole Nation. It will contribute to our national defense.

The people of the Midwest have dreamed of the day when the seaway would become a reality. Forty years is long enough to wait for this development which represents their hopes and aspirations for the good life. It is far too long to have permitted the railroad and the power lobby to block a program of utmost importance to the general welfare. It is my hope that the Eighty-first Congress will set aside any narrow sectionalism that may exist, and forget all false fears that seaway will damage any region or any American industry, and take action to enact this resolution into law.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLATNIK. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER].

Mr. BIEMILLER. May I congratulate my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] on his able and skillful presentation of the case for the St. Lawrence seaway. I find myself in complete agreement with what he has said. I sincerely hope that the resolution which the gentleman has introduced, and which I have the honor to introduce a twin to, will soon be before the House, and that we will have the privilege of bringing to a realization this great dream that so many people have had of a very important means of strengthening our entire St. Lawrence and Great Lakes regions, and at the same time strengthening the national defense of the United States.

Mr. BLATNIK. I thank my friend and colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER]. I am more than happy to welcome his support in the sponsorship of this very important resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include testimony of Dr. John D. Clark before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. BOGGS of Delaware, for February 16, 1949, on account of attendance at funeral services.

To Mr. CARLYLE (at the request of Mr. KERR), for the 15th and 16th, on account of official business.

To Mr. WEICHEL (at the request of Mr. MCGREGOR), on account of illness.

To Mr. TAYLOR, for indefinite period, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 16, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

221. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed Economic Stabilization Act of 1949, together with a summary of the proposed bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

222. A letter from the Under Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to provide for further contributions to the international children's emergency fund"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

223. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

224. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 1705 of title 18 of the United States Code, relating to destruction of letter boxes or mail; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

225. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated August 6, 1948, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a review of reports on the coasts of the Great Lakes, harbors of refuge for light-draft vessels, particularly with respect to harbor of refuge at Lester River, Minn., requested by a resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on October 30, 1945; to the Committee on Public Works.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of compassion and deliverance, we thank Thee for Thy promise: If any man lack wisdom, let him ask Thee.

In this moment of prayerful quietness we would again take the pledge of service we owe our country. We pray Thee to confirm that which is good in us, and rebuke that which is foolish.

While we value the counsel and fellowship of our comrades in service, yet we know that, as individuals in the hands of a good God, we cannot be all things to all men, but true to Thee and our consciences. Free us from the fetters of our old selves, and help us to stand erect for the truth and right. Lead the way, O Lord, and Thine shall be the praise. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUSPENDING CERTAIN IMPORT TAXES ON COPPER

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2313) to suspend certain import taxes on copper.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say as a member of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means that this was considered by the full committee and there was no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the import tax imposed under section 3425 of the Internal Revenue Code shall not apply with respect to articles (other than copper sulfate) entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption during the period beginning April 1, 1949, and ending with the close of March 31, 1950.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "March 31, 1950" and insert "March 31, 1951."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill H. R. 2313 is to continue for another 2 years the suspension of the import tax on copper. In 1947 the Committee on Ways and Means held hearings at which the critical shortages in the supply of copper for American industry were described. The Honorable Oscar B. Ryder, Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, has advised the Committee on Ways and Means that there have been no major developments which would indicate any substantial change in the production of, or the civilian demand for, copper and copper products for some time to come.

We are confronted, therefore, with the identical problem that we faced 2 years ago. Present production of copper in the United States is insufficient to meet the demand. In fact the demand for 1948 was roughly 400,000 short tons in excess of domestic supply. As a result of this critical supply situation not only industry consumers of copper but also the producers have joined in the support of the pending legislation. Continuation of the suspension of the import taxes on copper has been urged by manufacturers of products used in such varied industries as the automotive, electrical equipment and appliances, housing and construction of all kinds, shipbuilding, telephone and public utilities, and other basic industries. A brief submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means on behalf of more than a dozen of the principal domestic copper producers stresses that the present abnormal demand is temporary, resulting from the unsatisfied civilian requirements of the war years and of the requirements of the Economic Cooperation Administration and Government stock-piling for defense. The domestic producers agree it is necessary to suspend the import taxes, but they want a time limit of 2 years placed upon the suspension.

In addition to the endorsement of producers and consumers of copper, the interested governmental agencies have expressed their support not only in the interest of meeting the quantitative requirements of industry and the national defense program but also in maintaining the current price of copper and thereby providing an anti-inflationary effect. The Secretary of Commerce advised the committee that should the import taxes in question be restored at this time, it is certain that the price of copper would rise still further, having an inflationary effect on the American economy.

DIVISION OF WATERS OF COLORADO RIVER

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to call the attention of this House to the unprecedented unity of the Congressmen from my State of California.

For many years California has faced a serious controversy over division of the waters of the Colorado River. We have now proposed that the issues of this conflict be placed before the Supreme Court.

Our economy in California is based on an assured and dependable water supply. Therefore, whatever is the result of this vital controversy is the key to our future.

We have 23 Members from California in this House, and each one of them has introduced a resolution asking the permission of Congress to take the Colorado River controversy before the Supreme Court.

Party lines are invisible in this issue. We, of California, stand together, united without exception. Our strength is the strength of 22 men and 1 woman who, regardless of political beliefs, are working for the common good of our State, its people, and their destiny.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GORSKI of New York asked and was given premission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some articles on the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty.

Mr. RODINO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. CROOK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a house concurrent resolution of the Indiana State Legislature memorializing the Congress to enact effective legislation providing for flood control in the Wabash River watershed area and tributaries thereto.

ADOPT THE 70-GROUP AIR-FORCE PROGRAM

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, on invitation extended to me by the Honorable CARL VINSON, chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services, it was my privilege, yesterday afternoon, Tuesday, February 15, to attend at Andrews Field, the most spectacular air show or demonstration that I had ever winessed.

The President, his Cabinet, Members of Congress, and other Government officials were present. On exhibition in the huge hangars were the crude planes used by the Wright brothers at the birth of aviation. Alongside these simple machines, the successors of which have changed the very face of the earth, were the modern engines used in the finest types of aircraft. Certainly great strides have been made in aviation during the past 2 decades. It was our privilege to examine the latest jet bombers and fighters. Surely they are the pride of the world.

The tragic truth is we now have the know-how but do not have the planes to protect ourselves. It is hard to realize how much time is required after authorization before planes of any appreciable number are in production. In spite of the accelerated plane production program precipitated by World War II not a single plane participated in combat during the war which was designed after Pearl Harbor Day.

In my judgment, we should adopt the 70-group air-force program without delay because for a truth air power is peace power.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, 31 years ago today, the fine people of Lithuania adopted their Declaration of Independence at Vilnius.

Americans of Lithuanian descent are today observing this anniversary. They are expressing their gratitude to the land of their adoption for not recognizing the annexation of Lithuania and her two small Baltic neighbors, Latvia and Estonia, by the Soviet Union.

In our turn, Americans of all racial origins, all Americans who love freedom and who respect the dignity and the independence of free people, may well rejoice that the heroic men and women of these small Baltic states are resisting the oppressor with every means at their command.

The brave people of Lithuania are determined that they shall not be subjugated. They are determined to be free again. So long as they are impelled by the spirit of freedom, they will never be conquered.

The great darkness which falls behind the frightful iron curtain in Europe will not prevail forever. The tragic fate of nations ground into submission under the heel of dictatorship is gradually awakening all the world.

Communism can rule only with the bloody tools of tyranny. It is at war with every aspiration of free men and women. It is a one-way street to human slavery.

Those who, like the people of Lithuania and the Baltic States, resist the godless advances of world communism, are fighting the good fight of human freedom everywhere. That freedom will be realized only when Lithuania and all other fair lands now under the domination of the Kremlin are restored to their full rights and privileges in the family of free nations.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, today marks the thirty-first anniversary of the Declaration of Independence by the people of Lithuania, which occurred historically on February 16, 1918, at Vilnius. Lithuanian Americans throughout the United States are observing this day with fitting ceremonies of thanks to this great country for not recognizing Russia's annexation of Lithuania and her two good Baltic neighbors—Latvia and Estonia. Today, Lithuania is isolated by the iron curtain and her people are dying for their belief in God and freedom. An armed heroic resistance is carrying out the will of the people against the oppressor and their attitude of enslavement.

Looking back in retrospect, I recall that on March 17, 1922, I introduced in the House of Representatives the following resolution:

House Joint Resolution 289

Resolution urging the recognition of the Republic of Lithuania by the Government of the United States

Whereas the Council of Lithuania representing all of the peoples of that nation on February 16, 1918, unanimously decided to communicate to the Russian, German, and other governments the following declaration: "The Council of Lithuania, the only representation of the Lithuanian nation, relying on the recognized rights of self-determination for nationalities, and the decisions of the Lithuanian Conference at Vilnius September 18–23, 1917, announces the rebirth of the independent democratic Lithuanian State with the capital at Vilnius, and the severance of all governmental ties of this state with other nations;" and

Whereas for over 4 years a stable government has been maintained by the Republic of Lithuania; and

Whereas the geographical situation of Lithuania is not only a warranty for its survival but for its growth to wealth and power among the nations of the world; and

Whereas in this Nation there are nearly 1,000,000 people of Lithuanian blood who, during the late war with unsurpassed devotion to the cause of liberty and independence, rallied to the assistance of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas England, France, Italy, and Poland have recognized the Republic Lithuania de facto; and

Whereas Czechoslovakia, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Estonia, Germany, Russia, Argentina, and Mexico have recognized the Republic of Lithuania de jure: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Government of the United States recognize the Republic of Lithuania.

I am indeed gratified that shortly thereafter the United States recognized the independence of the Republic of Lithuania, whose people have demonstrated to the world that they were capable and deserving of self-government.

Needless to say, I greatly regret that at the present time the people of Lithuania should be denied the freedom and liberty that I personally urged and advocated.

It is my fervent hope and prayer that in the not too distant future, Lithuania will again be liberated, together with the other unfortunate countries of Europe.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

CARDINAL MINDSZENTY AND BISHOP ORDASS

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN].

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will give due consideration to the resolution submitted to us by the general court of Massachusetts memorializing Congress to use all possible means to secure the release of Cardinal Mindszenty and Bishop Ordass.

These flagrant and inhuman outrages against organized Christianity have aroused the righteous indignation of the American people and millions of right-thinking, liberty-loving peoples throughout the world.

I believe it is the duty of this Government to take immediate and unequivocal action to secure the release of these persecuted churchmen and move to prevent the reoccurrence of similar outrages against persons because of their religious convictions and courageous opposition to the godless doctrines and practices of communism.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall take advantage of the time allotted me to express my thoughts on this thirty-first anniversary of the declaration of independence by the people of Lithuania. I am proud of the fact that this nation has refused to recognize Russia's annexation of Lithuania and her two Baltic neighbors, Latvia and Estonia. I sincerely pray that we may continue our stand in this regard until the day when Lithuania and the Baltic states become free and independent governments once again.

No finer citizens ever emigrated to these shores than those who came from Lithuania. Today, when these Americans of Lithuanian birth and descent celebrate throughout this Nation the declaration of independence made at Vilnius, Lithuania, on February 16, 1918, they have in their hearts genuine appreciation of our Government's refusal to recognize the Moscow-trained gangsters and cutthroats who have taken over the land they love.

Lithuania is, I hope, only temporarily isolated by the iron curtain. Because of the barbaric treatment accorded them by the Communists thousands of her people have perished while stoutly maintaining their religious convictions, belief in God and right to freedom.

Despite constant persecution and indescribable humiliations suffered by these people in their struggle, they have had the fortitude and courage to carry on a resistance against the oppressors who serve the Soviet Union.

Our forefathers founded our free and liberty-loving country upon the recognition of the existence of a supreme being. I am sure that the people of our Nation, of all religious faiths and creeds, are saddened at heart today by the plight of Lithuania. I am sure they join me in thoroughly denouncing these communistic tyrants of Soviet Russia who, through intimidation and force, have brought about the enslavement of Lithuania and the Baltic states.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include resolutions.

Mr. LANE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement from the Irish Legation.

Mr. ELLIOTT asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. JONES of Alabama asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Atlanta Journal.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts from the Michigan soil-conservation report.

ANNIVERSARY OF LITHUANIAN DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join with the other Members of Congress in paying my tribute and extending my congratulations to the fine, brave people of Lithuania, who celebrate today the thirty-first anniversary of their declaration of independence. Late this afternoon I shall go to the Lithuanian Embassy to convey in person my good wishes and to tell the Lithuanian Ambassador how much we admire the Lithuanians who are in our country and how much they have contributed to America.

As I was listening to the other Members, I could not help but feel the gravity of the situation of these courageous people of Lithuania, isolated behind the iron curtain—people who are dying and suffering because of their faith and their love of freedom. I believe everyone in the world today who wants a free and democratic form of government will join with us here in America in wishing them a future of happiness, and freedom to enjoy it. Those of us assembled here know how hard the United States is working to remove the iron curtain and to secure freedom, independence, and happiness for the world.

VETERANS' PENSION BILL

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Committee on Veterans' Affairs reported out a bill providing $90 a month pensions for the veterans of World War I and World War II after they reach the age of 65.

The press describes this bill as a "hot potato" in the lap of the administration. It is no "hot potato" as far as this particular Member of Congress is concerned.

I am unalterably opposed to this bill. Let me serve notice that if an attempt is made to bring this bill up under suspension of rules, I will certainly object to such procedure.

This legislation is dishonest. It attempts to deceive the veterans into believing they are getting something for nothing when, as a matter of fact, in 10 years our veterans will be shouldering half of the Nation's tax burden, including the tremendous increase this bill contemplates.

Such legislation is unsound. At a time when we are staggering under the impact of our huge war-incurred debt, at a time when all of our resources and ingenuity are pledged to the prevention of another such conflict, it would take us dangerously near the brink of national insolvency.

I want the veteran to be able to look forward to a future in which peace is possible, in which his Government is sound, in which his tax burden is reasonable, in which he can be assured of governmental care based on his need—a future, in other words, which has meaning for him and his children. This bill will seriously jeopardize that future.

In all sincerity I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if we Members of this great legislative body cannot point out to the veterans in our individual districts the dangerous fallacies in this legislation, then we do not deserve to represent our districts in future Congresses.

AN ANSWER TO SHORTAGES AND CONTROLS

Mr. MACY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACY. Mr. Speaker, in view of this morning's newspaper comment to the effect that the majority expect to reinstate controls, it might be interesting to note that 105,000 tons of scrap steel came over from the German Ruhr in December and 150,000 tons in January. These are larger amounts than have come over in previous months and the boats taking over relief have not come back empty to that extent.

While it was urged last year that this operation was desirable, it is also interesting to note that during the fine summer swimming weather, a tight embargo was placed on scrap steel so that the relief boats were coming back empty, for the most part. This was due to interdepartmental and international involvements.

Steel has been recently, and now is being, manufactured in the United States at unprecedented peacetime rates and doubtless had steel scrap come back last summer more finished steel would have started flowing through our domestic markets at an earlier date. This only shows that increasing supplies is a much better answer to shortages than controls, which simply divert scarce supplies into black markets at prodigious advances.

Another result is that steel scrap in the United States has dropped from $50 to $37.50 a ton, which may have an effect not only on the supplies of finished steel but upon the price as well. It would not surprise me if price support efforts would now be made, which would again induce shortages, which would set in motion renewed measures for control.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM] may be excused indefinitely on account of official business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the State board of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, December 8, 1948.

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address by Senator IVES.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, commemorating the thirty-first anniversary of the birth of the Republic of Lithuania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence on the Atlantic Defense Pact.

Mr. D'EWART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Montana.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Know Your Congress." I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $159.75, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. Bill Cunningham, of the Boston Herald.

VETERANS' PENSION BILL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was very much surprised at the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES] who spoke a moment ago, attacking the bill for the pensioning of World War veterans who have reached the age of 65 years. His speech showed that he did not know what he was talking about. That bill merely follows the exact line of the Spanish-American War pension bill, except that the committee voted out of it the provision for pensioning veterans at age 62 and raised the minimum age to 65 years.

You were told on yesterday, that the bill would pension dishonorably discharged veterans. There is not a word of truth in that statement.

You were also told on yesterday that we only had 7 minutes of hearings on the measure. We have been holding hearings on these measures for weeks. There are 186 pages of hearings. We brought in every witness anybody asked for. Yesterday there appeared before our committee the representatives of the Veterans' Administration for the members of the committee to ask any questions they desired.

You have been told that this bill was reported by a minority. There were 19 of the 27 members of the committee present. One distinguished gentleman was unavoidably absent, and I refer to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MEYER]. If he had been present we would have had 20. We had 19 members present and all of them, with the possible exception of 2 or 3, voted to report the bill.

I am filing my report as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee today, and we hope to bring it to the floor of the House for final passage at an early date.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 13]

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Abbitt | Curtis | O'Toole |
| Allen, Ill. | Davis, Tenn. | Pace |
| Allen, La. | DeGraffenried | Perkins |

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seventy-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUBER: On page 3, line 12, before the period insert "Provided, That in making such improvements the basic architecture of the House Chamber shall not be altered and the existing skylights of the House Chamber shall be retained."

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I listened to the debate yesterday regarding the reconstruction of the House Chamber with a great deal of interest. I share the opinion of our esteemed Speaker and others that this structural steel should be removed from the roof of this Chamber.

I am not an architect or an engineer. However, I heard the reference to the amount of cast iron in this roof and it seems to me it would be a very simple matter to take out the cast iron and put in a strong aluminum or other lightweight metal that would carry the load. We do not build airplanes out of cast iron. I believe the type of construction to which I referred could safely reinforce the roof and make it safe and yet retain the basic architecture of the Chamber as it is.

Mr. Chairman, we are only the temporary custodians of this Chamber. It belongs to posterity and should be preserved. We have over here on the other side the old Senate Chamber. It is regarded as such a holy of holies that they have a fence around it and we are not even permitted to go in and walk around. Yet we would change the architecture of this Chamber overnight.

My amendment will not interfere with the letting of this contract. They can go ahead and make the necessary repairs and do the remodeling of the House Chamber, but it will not be necessary to take out the skylights and change the basic architecture. It is very little consolation to think that the State seals overhead will be taken out and deposited in a certain place in your home State. We are spending a lot of money on other projects and I do not see any reason in the world why we cannot safeguard this historic Chamber and keep it so that generations to come may visit and see it in its historic state. There is no reason, in my opinion, why it should not be preserved.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that my amendment will be agreed to. As I stated, it will not interfere with the letting of the contracts that are proposed. Surely the Architect and the engineers can do this job, yet preserve the building as it is.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, whenever I enter this Chamber I do not necessarily see the faces that are here now. All of us look back into history and we see and think of the great men and women who labored in this room for the preservation of free government on this earth. In these seats have sat and in these aisles have walked the great of America.

These walls and this roof have heard the debates of some of the greatest men this country ever produced. Their labors always have been for the preservation of America and her institutions. To change these walls and to change this roof would be destroying one of the greatest shrines of freedom on this earth. These walls are rich in the traditions of our country and to change them, to make them over or alter them, would destroy that richness of tradition and history it has represented throughout the years.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio ought to be adopted. The Architect, in my opinion, could well change the plans to conform with the object he has in mind, namely, preserving this Chamber, this rich, historic room, in its present form. Reference has been made to the fact we cannot hear each other, but that is perhaps due more to our own fault than to that of the acoustics of the room itself. Now that we have this public-address system anyone can hear who will listen, and there is no need nor necessity for changing or destroying one of the finest shrines and monuments to freedom in the world—the Chamber of the House of Representatives.

I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CROOK. In this proposed amendment is it planned to leave this structural work intact?

Mr. DONDERO. No. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio takes into consideration the removal of this steel. If they could build a cast-iron roof 90 years ago, and that is what is in this roof, they can build it with structural steel or aluminum to support it now.

Mr. CROOK. We, over in the great Hoosier Commonwealth of Indiana, do not like this steel construction, where we have to look through a tremendous amount of steel work to find the seal of the State of Indiana. I want to see those seals preserved, but I want to see them put down some place where the public can see them.

Mr. DONDERO. It can be done under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HUBER. Unless this amendment prevails, you will not see the seal of the great State of Indiana in the ceiling of this building, or the seal of any other State. They will be gone forever.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, may I ask one more question? How many of these seals were here when this building was originally built?

Mr. DONDERO. We are admonished by scriptural authority to "remove not the ancient landmark which thy fathers have set"—Proverbs 22: 28.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, we would like to stay with the old quill pens, but present conditions require the use of many typewriters, and as far as my colleague is concerned, in his devotion to antiquity, why do we not take the Capitol back to Philadelphia?

I discovered yesterday and today a great many architects in the Congress of the United States. They are more informed on the needed improvements to this room than is the Fine Arts Commission and some of the most outstanding engineers of this country.

I have here the report of the Commission of Fine Arts, and I am going to ask, when we go back into the House, to insert it at this point in the RECORD.

THE COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1947.

Hon. DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LYNN: The Commission of Fine Arts, at their meeting on June 19, 1947, were pleased to consider with you and with your associates the plans and the samples of materials of construction and embellishment necessary for improving the Chambers of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Commission unanimously approve the plans for these two Chambers, as well as the samples of the materials of construction and embellishment which were presented with the plans.

The Commission gave careful consideration to the suggestion that only those portions of the Chambers above the gallery floor be improved in the first construction contract, and that the lower parts of both Chambers be delayed at least until the construction of the upper portions are completed. While it is practicable to arrange to carry out such a program the Commission respectfully suggest that further consideration be given the reconstructing the two Chambers in a single operation. The inconvenience to the Members of the Congress would be minimized, the total cost would undoubtedly be less, and the completely reconstructed Chambers would present a unity of design which will not obtain in the case where the upper parts of the two Chambers are of one character and the lower parts of another. Of course, the approval of the plans by the Commission is predicated upon the ultimate carrying out of the entire approved plan for each Chamber.

The Commission are exceedingly well pleased with the results obtained by you and by your architects and we believe that the results of the remodeling of the two Chambers will provide meeting rooms for the Senate and for the House of Representatives in keeping with the importance of the deliberations of the legislative branches of the Government.

Please accept our congratulations upon the excellent results you have obtained. We appreciate your splendid cooperation.

For the Commission of Fine Arts:
Sincerely yours,
GILMORE D. CLARK, Chairman.

Furthermore, we have the report of the Committee on the Construction of the Roofs, and so forth. The report was issued by that sterling gentleman and former colleague of ours, beloved by every Member of this House, the Honorable Fritz Lanham. What does it say in this report? Here is what it says:

The plans, as submitted, represent designs developed by Francis P. Sullivan, associate architect, and Harbeson, Hough, Livingston, and Larson, consultants, in collaboration. The designs have the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts and the Architect of the Capitol, and they are acceptable to the several consultants on air conditioning, lighting, and acoustics, and to the structural engineers. In their present form, they are the result of the combined efforts and ideas of all concerned with their preparation.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McGREGOR. I might say, as a Member of the committee which has been appointed to go over the plans and specifications for the remodeling of this Chamber, that if this amendment is accepted, it will mean a complete change of all the plans which will completely take us out of the coordinated efforts of the House and the Senate, so that we then cannot expedite the remodeling which this committee voted for last year.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman is absolutely right, and it is time that we entrust the affairs of this roof to men who have been educated in our institutions in architecture, in engineering, and in design, rather than to constitute ourselves as a group of professionals in the field of architecture.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HUBER. Has the gentleman ever known a contractor or an architect willing to cut down on the size of a job?

Mr. RABAUT. I am not suspicious of every man in his own business, but I should like to ask the gentleman, as well as the Members of Congress, is this a matter of your own personal opinion or does it go back to the people of this Nation? If so, why is it that we have built so many new State capitols and abandoned the old for the new? We are seeking here only to make a renovation of this hallowed room. So let us have no more talk about it. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUBER) there were—ayes 72, noes 86.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. RABAUT and Mr. HUBER.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 83, noes 109.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for "Grants to States for unemployment compensation and employment service administration," $4,987,000.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RABAUT: On page 6, line 24, strike out "$4,987,000" and insert "$10,000,000."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the committee consents, reluctantly, to the introduction of this amendment. The Bureau of the Budget has received an estimate on the item but has not yet had time to process it. The committee itself has had its investigators working on the proposition for the last 2 or 3 days, but they have not yet had sufficient time to complete their investigation.

Enough is known, however, to indicate that there must be some increase in the amount of this appropriation. The amount provided in the last session is not sufficient to meet the needs of the agency.

Enough money is available to take care of the requirements for this quarter, and apparently we have funds available to take care of the situation until another deficiency bill can be brought to the floor.

However, in view of the vital nature of the proposition and in order to be absolutely certain about the matter, we propose at this time in this amendment an increase of $5,000,000, so as to leave no doubt about the matter.

Accordingly, the committee has authorized the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] to offer the amendment, and the amendment has the sanction of the committee.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Is it possible that this money may have been allocated to the States by quarters, in advance, and has already been spent, necessitating the closing of a lot of these offices and branch offices?

Mr. RABAUT. If the gentleman wants an explanation of it, here it is. In the Eightieth Congress their funds were cut $15,000,000. They had an increased load. Now they are feeling the pinch of the condition.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I was not asking necessarily for an explanation of it, but it is a fact that in Indiana there were 72 field offices of the United States Employment Service and they were all closed. We were able to get one of those offices reopened and kept open because the people had to travel about 80 miles. Perhaps a hundred people a week traveled 80 miles in order to sign up, and that created a hardship. So now we have 71 of the 72 offices in Indiana closed, and they say it is because they have already spent the money in the first half, which was necessary to carry through the whole year.

Mr. RABAUT. I may say to the gentleman that I was not here in the Eightieth Congress. The Eightieth Congress curtailed these funds to the point where it pinched the agency; so there is nothing to do except to recognize the condition in which they find themselves. They have money to continue; but they have not money to meet the program as it now faces them.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Then it is possible that the money for this quarter may have been allocated to the State and already spent; is that correct?

Mr. RABAUT. The agency administers these funds under the laws that have been enacted.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Then the gentleman cannot answer my question.

Mr. RABAUT. Not that part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. SADLAK: On page 6, line 24, after the word "administration", strike out "$4,987,000" and insert "$14,000,000."

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I talked of the necessity for increasing this appropriation. I gave the total of unemployment claims in the State of Connecticut as being 49,822. I want to submit to the House at this time that the total unemployed in the State of Connecticut has again risen during the past week, and as of this last Saturday, after a telephone call to the Department of Labor this morning, it is now 52,451, an increase of some 2,629 in 1 week.

I want to stress this one point. To process the claims it requires the same procedure for partial or full claims for benefits. It requires the handling personnel which is lacking, especially in local field offices. The individual States operate the unemployment compensation and employment services, they collected for the United States Government during fiscal 1948 some $200,000,000. The States received in return for the administration of these services $130,000,000; in other words, the United States Government made a profit of $70,000,000, and there is no earmarking of these funds. As a matter of fact, remarks were made here on the floor yesterday about contemplated changes and improvements of this Chamber even to the extent of installing neon lights. I submit that the money which has been collected from the employers could even be used for such purposes to the detriment of the growing numbers of unemployed who need expeditious servicing of their claims for checks to which they are entitled and need now.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to associate myself with the position taken by my friend and colleague, and commend him him for his amendment. It reflects the new necessities brought about by increasing unemployment not only in Connecticut but in the Nation at large.

Mr. SADLAK. I am most grateful to the gentleman for his support. In the district he represents, one of the largest affected cities in the State of Connecticut is the city of Bridgeport, and they have some 10,000 unemployed at this moment.

This matter is nonpartisan, and we want to give the States the tools to work with to do this job properly.

I refer you to the hearings on this particular point and to the statement made by Mr. Harry Kendall, chairman of the Employment Security Commission for North Carolina. He there stressed the fact that we have an obligation to return these funds to the States so that they can do the job for the people who are entitled to this service.

I am told that it is necessary to wait from 5 to 9 weeks for the initial check because of the backlog of these claims in these offices.

I urge you to vote for this amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. What did the gentleman say the number of unemployed in Connecticut is?

Mr. SADLAK. 52,451.

Mr. RANKIN. What is it normally?

Mr. SADLAK. Well, in mid-October 1948, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, it was 21,000.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. There are a lot of folks unemployed. Many of those folks are experienced in clerical and office work of every kind. Was any effort made to bring those folks into the offices to expedite the unemployment payments, or are they just standing in line and doing nothing?

Mr. SADLAK. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that with the unforeseen change in employment or rather the loss of jobs and the consequent applications for unemployment claims, the States did not have sufficient funds to put on additional clerical help, and I say that we should have that additional help as soon as possible in order to properly audit these claims and process them in an endeavor to help the jobless who need the money.

Mr. JENSEN. There are all kinds of folks standing in line waiting for their checks, or to sign them, that would be only too happy, I am sure, to go in and work for the good of the cause without any compensation.

Mr. SADLAK. I assure the gentleman that such patriotism is worthy of praise, but it is conceded by both sides of the aisle that the Government now has some $70,000,000 in excess of the three-tenths of 1 percent that had been collected to be used for that purpose, and we ought to send back a larger amount of this money now for the proper administration of this service. With the large number of unemployed and more workers laid off each day as I have shown to you in my remarks yesterday and today and new claims to be made, the $14,000,000 of my amendment should be approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, far be it from me as a member of the subcommittee dealing with appropriations for this agency to try to take anything away from them, but I think the fairest consideration this agency has ever been given has been given it by the deficiency committee here this afternoon in allowing $10,000,000 instead of the $4,987,000 allowed by the Bureau of the Budget.

I think it would be well if we went back a year ago. The employment services and the unemployment compensation boards of this country requested the Bureau of the Budget for $160,000,000 to run this program in this fiscal year of 1949. The Bureau of the Budget cut the $160,000,000 to $145,000,000. That was the figure we had before us a year ago this time when we were considering the Budget for the fiscal year 1949.

The Subcommittee on Appropriations for Labor and Federal Security cut the Budget request of $145,000,000 to $123,000,000 a year ago. The bill went over to the Senate and they increased the $123,000,000 to $136,000,000. In conference we finally agreed on the sum of $130,000,000 to run this agency for the fiscal year 1949, which was $15,000,000 below the request of the Bureau of the Budget and $30,000,000 below the request of these agencies to the Bureau of the Budget for the fiscal year 1949.

As I recall now, the figures that were presented to the deficiency committee at this time, before they were approved by the Bureau of the Budget, were figures that were arrived at last October or November. They did not take into account the increase in the work load that has developed since the first of the year 1949. As a consequence the Bureau of the Budget cut that $14,000,000 down to $4,987,000.

A year ago we gave a great deal of consideration to the establishment of a contingency fund. I thought a year ago we were going to establish a contingency fund. I think the committee was at that time in full agreement that a contingency fund should be established. It had been represented to our committee that that fund would be established by allowing 10 percent of the grant made; in other words, if we had established a contingency fund a year ago of 10 percent of the the $130,000,000, it would have been $13,000,000, and we would not have any need for this deficiency at the present time.

I hope this year when we finally write up the appropriation bill and report it to the House in the early part of March the subcommittee can agree on the establishment of a contingency fund that would take into consideration some of the things that we, as a committee, cannot foresee a year ahead. I know it is very difficult to look ahead for 1 year or a year and a half and determine what the work load is going to be.

State legislatures at times raise the pay of their employees. That is something we cannot foretell or foresee. It is one of the things we are up against when we make appropriations of this kind. But I do believe that the fair solution is to stick to the $10,000,000 being allowed by the Deficiency Committee at this time and that will serve to accomplish the purposes that we are looking toward at the present time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the State of Rhode Island have the same percentage of unemployment as the gentleman from Connecticut says there is in his State?

Mr. FOGARTY. I did not hear the percentages, but I know that in the State of Rhode Island it is worse now than it has been in the last 10 years, that is, since 1939.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I am glad to note that the gentleman from Rhode Island has brought up this question of the contingency fund. I think it should be made crystal clear that the subcommittee last year was in unanimous agreement, including the gentleman who is now addressing you and who was then chairman of the subcommittee. But you will recall that we were not able to sell that to the other body. That is where the stumbling block was. Right now the subcommittee is considering the establishment of a contingency fund that can be utilized under authorizations from the Bureau of the Budget which will meet these variables found in the administration of these various grants in the States.

But may I ask the gentleman: He is satisfied, is he not, from the testimony that has been given by the administration itself, by Mr. Goodwin of the Employment Service and the people from the Bureau of Employment Security, plus the representatives of the interstate conference, which is composed of the State administrators, that this $10,000,000 will not do the job and that you will have to provide some money in another deficiency appropriation which will be coming along very shortly? The gentleman is satisfied as to that, is he not?

Mr. FOGARTY. I am not definitely decided on that.

Mr. KEEFE. Their story was this morning that they would need at least $20,000,000.

Mr. FOGARTY. But at the same time I am firmly convinced that the additional $5,000,000 which is being allowed by the Deficiency Appropriations Committee would be better than $10,000,000 in another deficiency bill which is to come later, because they need the money and need it now to take care of some of the deficits that arise at the present time in practically every State of the Union.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. SADLAK. According to the gentleman's own statement then, he is unqualifiedly in favor of my amendment to allow $14,000,000?

Mr. FOGARTY. No; I am speaking in favor of the recommendation of the subcommittee, which is found in the bill, for the $10,000,000, because they have gone into that in the hearings. They have heard the Employment Service. They have heard the interstate conference people on this particular item in the bill and I think that they have more knowledge of what is needed at the present time than any of the other Members of the House.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK].

It has been apparent to me all along from the hearings on this bill that the amount carried in the bill is totally inadequate and I reserved specifically in committee the right to support an amendment of this character, should it be offered on the floor of the House.

I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], has given the fundamental reason for the difficulties by which we are confronted. I suspect there is another reason. I suspect that the formula for allocation by FSA to the several States of the lump-sum appropriation made available to FSA by the Congress has been so inequitable as to penalize certain States while providing other States with an excess of staff. The formula has certainly been under fire for a year or more, and the record shows that nothing has been done to date by way of changing the formula.

Whatever the reason Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly apparent from the record that important States cannot function with the money now available, and that the amount carried in this bill is entirely insufficient.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we are confronted by a serious problem arising from the flagrant abuse under this law, an abuse which can only be regulated properly if sufficient personnel is provided.

Some months ago, in October or November, the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies met and determined that an additional $14,000,000 was essential to the proper functioning of these agencies—an increase of $14,000,000 was in fact recommended by FSA to the Bureau of Budget. So that all this substitute amendment asks for is the amount which the Social Security Administration itself actually submitted for approval to the Bureau of the Budget.

Since that time, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], has pointed out, there has been a steady increase in unemployment and a corresponding increase in the work load of this agency.

I have a letter from the director of the Division of Employment Security in Massachusetts, a highly competent and conservative official, in which he states that the current work load in Massachusetts, is 43 percent higher as of January 26, than it was a year ago this time, and that he understands the increase in work load in some States runs as high as 200 percent.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HAND. Prior to the work load being increased, in my State certain offices were being closed because of lack of funds. Is the gentleman satisfied that under the Sadlak amendment there will be sufficient funds, at least for the purpose of this appropriation, to take care of that situation?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am prepared to go along with the Sadlak amendment, in the light of the testimony of the organization to which I have referred; in the light of testimony embodied in letters which we have received from various governors of States, and in the light of the fact that whereas we are collecting about $200,000,000 from the States, we are only returning to the States about $130,000,000.

Mr. HAND. And this is the amount the States are asking?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. This is the amount which the over-all organization representing the State employment security agencies suggested several months ago as adequate, before the recent increase in work load.

In the interest of the unemployed, I urge the adoption of the Sadlak amendment. If that proves to be insufficient, further funds can be made available in the light of the two investigations to which I referred yesterday, one ordered by the Bureau of the Budget and the other ordered by the Appropriations Committee of the House.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I think in this connection it should be made crystal clear that the 1950 budget estimate, which is now pending before the subcommittee for this very purpose, gave to this service the identical amount that the Eightieth Congress gave, plus the amount of the deficiency recommended in this bill. So that the amount that the Bureau of the Budget recommended for these two services for the fiscal year 1950 was in round figures $135,000,000. That is some indication of the lack of consideration that they have received from the Bureau of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the Truman depression is on. That is obvious, and this is one of the first recognitions of that fact.

I did not intend to inject politics into this debate. I simply asked the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] a simple question about the allocation of funds to the States by quarters, because I found that Indiana was extremely short on funds at this time, and 71 or 72 field offices have been closed. Now I want to remind the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] and the Members of this House that when the estimate of funds was made in that Eightieth Congress we had the highest peacetime employment of any year in the history of this country. Also, under that Eightieth Congress labor had the greatest income of any peacetime year in the history of this country. Farmers had the greatest peacetime income under the Eightieth Congress of any Congress in the history of this country. Those may be the reasons why we did not anticipate the need for allocating a lot of funds to take care of the 3,000,000 unemployed people we have today. Had the Eighty-first Congress continued as a Republican Congress, had we elected a Republican President and thereby restored and renewed the confidence of the people in their form of government, private enterprise, the free enterprise system, we may not have had this unemployment today, and we would not have needed any additional funds.

We must take care of these unemployed. We must reopen these field offices so unemployed people do not have to travel 80 and 90 miles weekly to sign up for unemployment compensation and look for jobs. I am willing to vote for whatever funds are necessary; but I do charge the committee with the responsibility of seeing that whatever funds are made available are used for the purpose of helping the unemployed. I recall when we cut the amount of funds for the expenditure of the customs department by 20 percent, and the administration went out in the field and cut off 80 percent of the gagers in the field, the men who collect the revenue. Right in my own congressional district in the little town of Lawrenceburg, a town of 5,000 people, where the Federal Government collects more revenue than it collects in the entire city of Chicago, the Customs Bureau took off 80 percent of gagers in the distilleries there. We cut the appropriations for that purpose 20 percent; but they cut the men who collected the revenue in the field 80 percent and kept the office padded with surplus personnel as they have done ever since the Bureau has been in existence.

The purpose of course was to close the distilleries and thereby bring the wrath of thousands of workers down upon the heads of the Congressman. The workers were led to believe that Congress was closing the distilleries.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. I am glad the gentleman has referred to the 1948 Treasury-Post Office appropriation and the funds therein for the Customs Service. The aftermath of that is this. When Customs came back for funds in 1949 they asked for $500,000 less than we gave them the prior year, proving our action was proper, and in the taxpayer's interest.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, when I asked a few mintes ago that debate be closed in 15 minutes I had in mind that the Chairman would divide the time for debate evenly amongst those desiring to be heard, or that 5 minutes would be reserved for the committee. I have since been informed that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON], desires to speak to this amendment.

Mr. COTTON. I will take only one-half a minute.

Mr. RABAUT. I now ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON], be allowed to speak for 5 minutes, and that I be allowed to speak following him for 5 minutes to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Chairman, it is not our concern here today to determine who is to blame for the unemployment existing in the country. It is very much our concern to see that adequate measures are taken to provide promptly the compensation for those who are out of work.

I rise in support of the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut that $14,000,000 be included in this deficiency bill for additional grants to States for unemployment compensation administration expenses. This is approximately the amount asked for by the Bureau of Employment Security and was based on detailed reports from the States. The bill has reduced that amount to $5,000,000. The committee on the floor has now, in its own words, "reluctantly agreed to raise this amount to $10,000,000."

Mr. Chairman, I am amazed and appalled at the refusal of the committee to include at least $14,000,000 for this purpose. Last year we collected in this country over $1,000,000,000 from the employers of labor to provide unemployment compensation. The numbers of unemployed are greater than they have been in 10 years and still increasing. In my State the unemployment load for the last week of January was double what it was the last week of January 1948, and indications are that the load will increase. Men and women out of work are not getting their checks because the unemployment service has had to reduce personnel and cannot get them out promptly. The money has been collected from the employers of the country and indirectly from the wages of the workers. They are entitled to receive this help when it is needed.

The explanation given by the committee is that they thought $5,000,000 would take care of the matter until the next deficiency appropriation and that they feel that the proposed $10,000,000 is certain to do so. Some of us have been waiting anxiously for this deficiency bill to appear upon the floor. We have talked with members of the committee; we have telephoned the clerks of the committee. Our people back home have been crying for action. Six weeks have elapsed since Congress convened and at last the bill is on the floor. I am not criticizing the committee for this because we all realize the many details that have to be considered in a deficiency bill, but we all realize also that this is true of every deficiency bill and the next one is likely to be just as slow in reaching the floor.

Mr. Chairman, the most urgent need covered in this bill is this one for unemployment compensation administration. We cannot afford to run the risk of having the service run short of funds before the next bill. We are under an obligation to the States; we are under an obligation to the employers who have paid in the funds; and we are under a special obligation to the men and women who are out of work and who have been assured of this income.

Mr. Chairman, we are furnishing money to half the nations of the earth. We appropriated over $6,000,000,000 for that purpose in the last Congress and are preparing to appropriate 5 or 6 billion more in this one. We are appropriating money right in this bill for all kinds of projects, including an amount for a steam plant to generate power in connection with the Tennessee Valley Authority; power which will be paid for in part by the tax payers of my State to furnish cheap power in the Tennessee Valley to lure industries from my State and the rest of New England, and cause even more unemployment, and yet we are refusing reasonable aid to our own unemployed.

I must say that I resent rather bitterly the situation in which I find myself. I have waited anxiously for this bill. I have begged and urged that it be brought upon this floor that the unemployed whom I represent could be provided with facilities to get their checks. When it finally is brought forth I find only a niggardly and inadequate amount for this purpose and then I find that in order to obtain even that amount I must vote for a project which I think is incompatible with our system of free enterprise and which I know will take the bread from the mouths of some of the workers in my State.

I hope that the substitute amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] is recognized for 5 minutes to close the debate.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, the committee has in mind to do no wrong. The committee seeks to provide this money, $10,000,000 at this time for the unemployment service administration. The committee is not closing the door to calls by this worthy agency for any future sums necessary. The committee is having its own investigators investigate the conditions in this agency at this time. Over and above that, the committee has called before it the budget Director asking why such a small amount was allowed at this time when the necessity appeared to be so great and when the cut in the last Congress was so drastic.

This increase in excess of $5,000,000 above the budget estimate is necessary at this time and as I said in the beginning the door is not closed to the agency for additional funds, the need of which I feel will be further augmented as a result of the investigations now being made.

At this point by special permission I place in the RECORD the telegram from Gov. G. Mennen Williams, of the State of Michigan:

LANSING, MICH., January 25, 1949.

LOUIS RABAUT,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Deficiency appropriations for State unemployment compensation administration will come before your committee Wednesday. Michigan, and I believe every other State, has been forced to operate hundreds of thousands of dollars in the red due to inadequate original appropriations. Suggested deficiency of less than $5,000,000 is completely inadequate to meet money already spent by States. Full information may be obtained from the Bureau of Employment Security as to the inadequacy of the Budget Bureau's recommendation. You can do the State of Michigan a good service by getting all the facts before the committee.

G. MENNEN WILLIAMS,
Governor.

The committee has been informed that the budget is having an investigation made.

It becomes apparent that we are trying to do the right thing by this agency. We are not looking into a crystal ball, as one gentleman said, misjudging the future by $15,000,000, and now grabbing the ball and saying that $14,000,000 is the necessary sum. No. That crystal ball was brighter in some folks' minds a year ago than it is today and it was looked into so many times, and so many times the erroneous answer came therefrom, according to the things we are learning now in the Eighty-first Congress, that I hope the committee will be followed in its decision for this sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SADLAK) there were—ayes 76, noes 97.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. SADLAK and Mr. RABAUT.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 101, noes 132.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

For an additional amount for "Tennessee Valley Authority," $2,950,000, to remain available until expended; and the limitation under this head in title I of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1949, on the amount available for capital expenditures, is increased from "$21,689,000" to $24,639,000": Provided, That the limitation under this head in title II of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1949, on the amount available for administrative and general expenses of the Corporation, is increased from "$3,677,000" to "$3,988,000", and the limitation therein on the use for such purposes of funds appropriated by title I of said act is hereby repealed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER:

On page 7, line 20, strike out "$2,950,000" and insert "$450,000."

On page 7, line 24, strike out "$24,639,000" and insert "$22,139,000."

Strike out "and" at the end of line 4 on page 8, and the balance of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the construction of a steam power plant."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the TVA at the present time has a capacity of 2,650,000 kilowatts per hour. It is selling 12,244,000,000 kilowatts a year. With what they already have coming in without this big plant, they will be able to sell 18,000,000,000 kilowatts a year, an increase of nearly 50 percent, and it is absolutely impossible that they can increase their consumption to that point in 3 years.

At the present time they have steam plants which they can use for firming power with a capacity of 448,000 kilowatts, and that is sufficient to take care of their peak. So much for the needs of the situation. There is no need.

They are not charging in the TVA enough to cover interest on the investment, payment of a reasonable amount back to the Government, and the equivalent of the taxes they should pay on the basis that private concerns pay.

A similar concern with an investment of $492,000,000 as compared with their $480,000,000 for electric power pays taxes totaling $23,000,000 and as set up here the tax payment is only $2,000,000. The depreciation that they should charge according to the provisions of our internal revenue laws would be about $11,500,000 and they charge off only $9,000,000. They pay no interest on the money that they get from the Federal Government. The total cost of TVA power investment according to their own story is $480,000,000 for the electric power set-up and they have passed a bill here providing that they should only pay back $392,000,000 which is nearly $100,000,000 less than the cost—and with no interest.

This whole thing means that you and I, your taxpayers and my taxpayers are paying for the subsidy that is being given to the people who use the TVA power. Many large corporations are there getting low rates. The figures show that they get 3,472,000 kilowatts or one-third of the total consumption. That is the commercial and industrial figure. Those rates are very low—3.16 mills. I am taking these figures directly from the report of the TVA Authority, which I have before me. It seems to me that it is absolutely unfair on any basis for us to appropriate this money to throw even more money into a socialistic attempt to destroy private business.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by praising the gentleman from Tennessee who stood up here yesterday and defended the building of this New Johnsonville steam plant for the TVA. I think he was representing the folks of his State and coming from the side of the aisle that he does leads me more and more to commend the stand that he took.

I hope this bill can pass without a crippling amendment. I think it is justified. I think it is necessary and meritorious.

I am amazed at some of the arguments that my colleagues on the left side of this aisle bring up every time a piece of forward-looking legislation is proposed on the floor of this Chamber. Of course, they are in opposition to anything that will make TVA better and that will make it work. I want to see TVA extended and coupled in with the White River project in Arkansas and Missouri; connected with the Grand River Dam in Oklahoma, and the Denison project in Texas, and carried on up through my State of Missouri by Southwestern Power Administration, so that Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas can have a chance to become the great inland industrial empire that they have every right to become.

What makes the argument against TVA and anything that will make it efficient so amusing is because it runs along the same old pattern. Those opposing TVA say it is communistic, socialistic, unconstitutional, and interferes with free enterprise and puts the Government in business in competition with private industry. That cry has been going up from the left-hand side of this aisle ever since Woodrow Wilson was President of these United States. It was said that production credit was all the things I have just mentioned and that it would result in the ruin and destruction of every bank in the rural areas. The exact opposite has been the result. Those banks today have more money on deposit than ever before in their history. They have a larger volume of loans than ever before. They have more customers, whose notes, are good at the teller's window than they ever have had before. A little healthy competition improved the services of the banks to the good of everybody, including the bankers themselves.

Before the day of the Federal land banks, mortgage loans were made on a 5-year basis. Out in my country a farmer paid 7-percent interest and 5-percent commission to secure a loan, and in 5 years the loan was due, and for an additional 2½ percent he might get a renewal for another 5 years. So if he borrowed a thousand dollars and kept it for 10 years, he paid out $775 in interest and commission, and still owed the full $1,000 principal.

The Federal land bank was declared unconstitutional, communistic, socialistic, and all these other "istics" that come from the left-hand side of the aisle whenever legislation of that kind is proposed in this House. That argument is so old that its whiskers drag on the floor of this Chamber every time they bring it out. I am tired of listening to it. So you see their prophesies of dire calamity have failed to materialize in the past, and their predictions have proved wrong so many times that I am sure they will prove untrue in the future.

Let us give TVA, REA, and Southwestern Power Administration a chance to develop. REA brought the blessings of electric lights and power to the American farm, and permitted the hardworking farm woman to throw away her old coal-oil lamp and the farmer to discard his old smoky lantern that only served to make the night a little darker, and allowed them to have the blessing not only of electric light but refrigeration, hot and cold running water, and motors for the milking machine and the washing machine. The job is only partly done. Let us give REA, TVA and Southwestern Power the tools with which to finish the job.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can reach some agreement as to how much time will be required on this paragraph.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph, and all amendments thereto, close in not to exceed an hour and a half, the last 10 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, and Members of the House, there are some facts in connection with this matter which I think are highly important, which I wish to call to your attention. I hope you will keep them in mind as we consider this matter for they correct certain arguments which have been presented by supporters of this amendment. This is not a question of public power versus private power in that the TVA is already in existence. We are in the public-power business through the national ownership of the TVA. This utility—and that is what it is—is the property of the United States of America; every dollar of its earnings belongs to the United States of America. Some opponents of the proper operation of this Government-owned plant will raise questions here, and I have heard them raised before, that the TVA does not pay interest on the investment the Federal Government has in it. I tell you the TVA must do more than that. It is doing more than that. Under the law which this Congress passed, with my support, the TVA, in a 40-year period, must return to the Federal Government in cash, if you please, the entire cost of the power-producing facilities; and, listen to this: When it does that, in 40 years, when all the cost has been returned, the Tennessee Valley Authority and all its assets still belong to the Federal Government. We are in the power-producing business in the Tennessee Valley; in fact, through law, this is the only public utility in the area. Let me repeat: This utility, the TVA, and all its earnings belong to the Federal Government. At the end of the 40-year period at the rate funds are being withdrawn all that money invested in the power-producing features of the program will be repaid and we still will have the TVA. So do not fall for the fallacious argument that interest is not paid.

The Tennessee Valley Authority primarily produces its electric power from water. Electricity is produced from a series of dams which provide flood control, navigation, and electricity. A few of these dams were purchased, most of them were built with funds provided by Congress. When the private facilities in that area were purchased as provided by law the privately owned utility then operating in the Tennessee Valley was operating steam plants along with its water generating plants because it has always been recognized as the proper way to have available the maximum amount of firm, year-round electricity. These steam plants were purchased by the Federal Government along with the water generating facilities. The TVA Act itself provides for erecting steam plants. Since the Government started operating the TVA, an additional steam plant has been built and its productive capacity integrated in the system to help firm up the water-power production.

You may ask, if they have steam plants, why build another? The answer is that since that steam plant was built, we have built a number of new dams, which have increased tremendously the waterpower production, the hydropower, and now there is simply inadequate steam production to carry through the lean months, or months of low water supply.

You may ask, if this is a hydro or water-power development, why have steam? There is a real answer, a real reason for the steam capacity. In the fall and winter there is much water in the reservoirs. This will generate great quantities of electrical energy as it goes through those dams. In the summer and dry seasons, however, the water becomes limited, the amount of electricity which can be produced through these dams falls off.

Rural electrification associations, municipalities, and most other users must have dependable supplies of power—it must be available on a year-round basis. If it were not for steam power, the TVA would be limited in supplying such distributors to the electricity they could produce during the summer months. Much of the huge production during the water season would have to be sold to other users, whoever would be willing to take such electricity knowing it would be available for 5 or 6 months, knowing it would play out during the dry season. This would mean the sale of this Government-produced electricity at dump or low rates.

If we want to increase the availability of power for the public users such as the REA, the municipalities, we must firm up this power, produce steam-generated electricity during the dry season in order to bring the low point up, for the low point of production fixes the limit of firm power that can be sold on a year-round basis.

My friend from New York complains that much of the power generated by the TVA is sold to large industrial companies. Too much of it is. Who else is going to buy electricity available only for a part of the year, unless it be the privately owned utilities?

The Tennessee Valley Authority and all its assets belong to the American people.

We all have an interest in its proper operation, with maximum benefit to the people, with the maximum return to the Government which owns it.

In the absence of steam to hold up the total production in the dry months, the high production during the water season is what might be termed an undependable source of power and they have to sell at low rates. But if you permit the TVA to firm up this power and make it available on a year-round basis, the TVA can sell at much higher rates, firm rates, because it is worth more. This is the organization, proponents of this amendment say, they want to return to the Treasury what has been put into it. I agree with them on that. If you want to further increase its value and success as a worth-while financial undertaking beyond the point of its worth today, permit the TVA to firm up its power during the dry seasons and thereby let them sell their power at firm rates. Do not cripple its operation by denying funds for steam generation in the lean months. To deny steam generation is to go counter to the policy of the privately owned utility which served the area before the advent of the TVA. To deprive the TVA of a proper proportion of steam is to force TVA to sell its surplus power at low rates to the big industrial companies, of which gentlemen on the other side of the aisle complain. There is one other outlet for the surplus winter power and that is sale to privately owned utility companies. If they can buy the extra power produced in the water season at dump or cheap rates, they could firm up such power, sell the combined power at firm rates and make a neat profit, some say, of millions of dollars.

If there is profit in taking the high-water season production and firming it up, and thereby selling the combined production at firm rates, do you not think that profit should go to us, the Federal Government, which has put nearly a half billion dollars in this project, not to mention the benefits of having additional firm electricity for the further expansion of REA lines in this time of national shortage of firm electrical power?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is making a very important statement and I desire to yield my time to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Tennessee, who I know is vitally interested in this matter. That is the situation in a nutshell. As I said, when we bought TVA it was understood that they had to have steam plants for the purpose of firming up water power. The private utility formerly operating in the area had such steam plant for its small hydro or water-power system. Such necessity has been recognized in every water-power development for the generation of electricity throughout the history of this country. The TVA now operates steam plants. However, since we have had the TVA, we have built new dams.

In the last 4 or 5 years through the action of this Congress we have added five or six new dams which produce hydroelectric power. We have produced more and more electricity by that means and now the steam power capacity for the dry or lean period is lagging behind. The actual production of electricity in 5 or 6 months of the year is away beyond what it is during the remainder of the year.

If we want the TVA to properly operate and to be the best possible investment on the part of the Government, we need to provide funds for the construction of this steam plant to firm up this current so it can be sold on a year-round basis to municipalities, to REA cooperatives, and to the other power users which is required in the basic law and which I wish them to do.

If, on the other hand, you want to take the development that we have developed in the Tennessee Valley at a public expenditure of more than $400,000,000, if you want to take the benefits of that expenditure of Government funds and turn them over to the big industrial companies or private utilities, for that matter, who will buy at dump rates, firm up such power with their steam plants, and sell the whole at firm rates and make the profit, you prohibit the TVA from firming up its hydro power by steam and you will do just that.

I believe the Membership of this House will take no such ill-advised action. You will want maximum service to the people, maximum return on the Government's investment, and I firmly believe that can be attained only by maintaining the proper proportion of steam power to go with the hydro or water power we have provided in the construction of these new dams.

You may say the privately owned power companies could firm up this power for the TVA. I asked that question of them and no offers have been received. They are all having trouble meeting their own needs. No. The power companies say, "We would buy the surplus from the TVA." Of course, they would buy it at bulk rates, cheap rates, forced rates, because in the absence of firming up, the TVA would be forced to sell extra hydro power to such takers as they can find. Some have said this possibility explains the many telegrams which Members of the House have received the last few days opposing this plant. As to that, I cannot say. I am sure that many of the senders have not understood just what issue is involved here and if they did, I believe they, too, would be for the proper operation of this public utility with maximum service to the people of seven States and with maximum returns to the Government.

The senders of many of these telegrams apparently do not understand and many Members here do not seem to realize that to prevent the construction of the steam plant would mean we would not fully utilize the millions and millions of dollars that this Congress put into the development of a great facility which provides all of the electricity for a great part of the people of seven States.

I do not happen to live in the Tennessee Valley. However, I have been for the last 4 years a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations that handles the TVA, and the need for providing this steam plant is so clear in my own mind that I wish I could convince you and point out to you that what this amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would mean is that, after we have already put this money into the TVA, we are not willing to let them run it in a proper way to render the maximum service and to make the greatest return to the Government on its investment, and, again, may I remind you, the minute TVA pays out, returns to the Government every dollar we have put in it, as it will, under the law, the TVA will still belong to the United States of America. So, at the end of 40 years the Government will have an amount of dividends equal to the original cost; in addition to that we will have a going concern, a property worth millions, which will bring in substantial returns in a financial way as well as render a fine service to the people of future generations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi the time reserved to me in order that he may continue.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I have always understood that it was not the practice of this House to permit one gentleman to yield his time to another in a situation of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, it certainly can be done.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted to me be yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I do not like to object, but obviously if 15 men stand up on one side of the aisle and all yield to one man——

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to state that the gentleman from Alabama is named on the list. He is entitled to his time.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. He is asking unanimous consent that his time be yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. I deeply appreciate the action of the gentleman from Alabama, who has worked untiringly with members of my committee and whose interest in and knowledge of this subject and problem is great. During this time which has been granted me, I would like to discuss certain provisions of the TVA Act which make steam generation more necessary than would normally be the case.

The Tennessee Valley Authority must generate its hydroelectricity between two water levels. The TVA must first provide flood control, and, secondly, under the basic act the TVA must operate its dams so as to provide navigation, and between those two requirements it must produce electricity. In the absence of these requirements of the law you might say, why not fill all the reservoirs in the wintertime with their 18 or 20 dams, hold all of such water, and let it out gradually so that it will last the year round or until the next rainy season. If it were not for the law itself, from a power-producing angle, that might possibly be done. However, in order to take care of flood control, the primary requirement under the law, when those reservoirs get sufficiently full, the TVA must let the water out so that they will be sufficiently empty to take care of the floods that may occur. On the other hand, you might say, in the summertime why not let all the water out, down to the absolute bottom of the stream, perhaps, and thereby meet their needs of this firming up of power? As heretofore pointed out, under the basic act the TVA cannot do that. Under such law, when the water reaches a certain low level the dams must be closed, for sufficient water must be retained to provide for navigation.

So the TVA is caught, and rightly so, in this multiple-purpose system, of having to produce power while keeping the water low enough to take care of flood-control needs and keeping the water high enough to protect navigation. Hydropower production is "Mr. In Between."

It means that in the wintertime when reservoirs would fill with water, they have to let it out to keep storage space available for flood control, and as they let this water out they must generate electricity, or the chance to develop electricity from that water is gone forever. Electricity so produced is for sale, but who is going to buy electricity which will be available only during the time the water is high and they are letting it out?

As I have said, there are two groups that might buy it. One is the big industrial company down there in the area who may buy it at that time, and figure on firming it up themselves by providing steam during the summertime, and the other is the big utility companies who might buy at these cheap dump rates, and firm it up and pass it on to the ultimate consumer on a firm rate, a high rate as compared to the dump rate at which they would purchase.

But there is another way for the matter to be handled and that is what we are trying to do in this bill. That other way is to let the Tennessee Valley Authority generate more steam power, and I say more, because they already are generating steam power; let them generate more steam power in the dry months so that this hydro power of the high-water months is available to the people of the area on a year-round basis, so that the TVA can extend this service to more and more REA cooperatives and to more and more municipalities, firm power, dependable and valuable. If we defeat this amendment, and provide this steam plant, it means a net income to the Federal Government, the Federal Government that, my friends on the left say, they want to protect. To firm it up, as provided under the original act here through an additional steam plant to go along with the five or six new hydro dams we have built, will mean an income of millions of dollars to the Federal Government, sole owner of the TVA and all its assets, including its profits. Vote down the amendment of the gentleman from New York. Thereby we will help to insure the maximum financial returns to the Federal Government by providing for the proper operation of the Government-owned TVA. We have financed the construction of many dams which provide a huge amount of power for much of the year; let us provide additional steam facilities to carry through the dry months, that the maximum firm, dependable power will be available to the REA, to the municipalities of the area, on a year-round basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON].

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment to eliminate the item for construction of a steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn.

As I read the hearings I could discern the same persistence of the public-power-minded people to insist in their will to drive private industry into the position of capitulation.

If they cannot achieve their objective in a direct manner, they do it indirectly.

Talk about monopolies. These people have gone so far that they will not permit any community who now uses their power to build a steam plant, should they wish to do so. And, not being content with staying within their own boundary, they are extending their tentacles into other areas.

Their attempt to justify this steam plant—as indicated in the hearings—is indeed the same pattern which is so clear to many of us who listen to the public-power-minded people. They just pound and hammer away at private industry until they so weaken it that there is very little resistance left, if any, in some parts of the country.

I stated last year that the electric power people in my district were building their own power plants. They do not ask our Government for a hand-out. In fact, they are now expanding their property to the amount of $115,000,000. Of course, that is because we are not handcuffed by any TVA, or similar set-ups. We still retain the rights of free people and we want to continue to be free.

But, under the guise of flood control and navigation, the taxpayers of the United States are now asked to pay the power bills of certain sections of the country. It reminds me of a case of paralysis agitans—creeping paralysis. If this thing is not curbed it will slowly and surely paralyze private incentive.

This appropriation to begin construction of a TVA steam plant at New Johnsonville is another step to state socialism.

The Tennessee Valley Authority was originally authorized for the purpose of harnessing the Tennessee River and its main tributaries to promote navigation and control floods. But instead, we see these tax-exempt or Government-owned enterprises in one area resulting in a greater tax burden on the taxpayers in the rest of the country and which will eventually strangulate free enterprise.

Such a steam plant as proposed for New Johnsonville would place the Government outright into a commercial business, opening the way for nationalizing of that business and thus creating a precedent for nationalization of other business.

The Government would be assuming a responsibility that does not properly belong to it by undertaking to supply all the electricity the TVA region may require, without limit, for all future time, thus saddling the taxpayers of the Nation with increased and continued expense for the benefit of a favored area.

Additional Government - subsidized cheap power in the Tennessee Valley can only hinder the efforts of other States to attract new industries and encourage the expansion of industries already there.

Steam-generating plants operated by the Government are alien to the original concept of TVA as a flood control and navigation project, and will create additional Government competition for our privately operated electric utility companies.

Such projects as the proposed New Johnsonville steam plant is a definite step toward nationalization of industry, and is setting the stage for a gradual or piecemeal transition from our competitive economy to a Socialist state.

There can be no warrant for additional appropriations for a Government project which will mean further competition with private business. A measure of justification might be found in some areas where electric generation is the by-product of flood control or navigation. But when these bounds are exceeded and public funds used to create a steam plant for electric generation, then the sinister figure of Government competition with public business appears.

One is astounded by the figures which show how this competitor with private business is growing and expanding. The Government is contending for business with privately owned concerns. The time has come again for American citizens to ask themselves if they want this trend to continue.

Are industry and all the other institutions which in private hands made this a great country to become nationalized? Do we follow the steps of England, trembling and limited as they are, or shall the United States go the whole way and wrap the blanket of socialism around it and enslave itself to a philosophy which is so alien to our American way of life?

Now is the time to answer the question of Government competition with free American enterprise by stopping in its tracks this movement or any other movement to expand already overexpanded Government competition with private business and industry.

I ask that the appropriation requested for this steam plant be rejected in such a decisive manner that no further attempts will be made by those who try by every means at their command to force upon us another step to state socialism by putting our Government in competition with the American system of free enterprise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak on this amendment because I believe we ought to go through with it and it ought to be passed. I want to serve notice that I am going to vote against other projects elsewhere until I can get satisfaction for my territory. One of the Members said that the TVA would help in flood control. They cannot do a thing for us up on the Susquehanna River. At least they have not tried to and nobody else has tried to. They talk about logrolling. I have seen a great deal of it in the last 10 years that I have been in the House. The shoe is always on the other foot, whenever our area wants anything. The only thing they ever do to us in upstate New York is to roll us, but they never give us any logs. I think it is time that we had some flood control on the Susquehanna River.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], because he has a lot of levees of his own down there.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have been a constant supporter of the St. Lawrence project to develop 12,000,000,000 kilowatt hours of electricity which is going to waste, and thus relieve his people of high power rates.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. The gentleman is getting far afield when he gets into the St. Lawrence project. I remember he did that a couple of years ago when I took the floor. That does not have a thing to do with what I am talking about, which is flood control on the Susquehanna River.

Last year we were just about wiped out. Many of the 20,000 Endicott-Johnson shoe workers were left homeless. It took out the power plant in the city of Endicott. It was one of the most devastating floods in history. It took out many of the homes of the workers of the International Business Machines Co. in Vestal and in Endicott. It went on to prove that flood walls are necessary for the protection of that section of the Susquehanna River. I think it is time the House gave us some money for flood control up there, where we so sorely need it.

We are getting ready for our annual flood. I predict we will have an annual flood, because we have always had it, and the same answer has always been given us by Washington, "We are not giving you a penny for flood control up there." I say it is about time that we had it.

I propose to erect flood walls in the Endicott, Vestal, and Johnson City areas to protect some of the largest manufacturing plants in the entire country; plants that are engaged in turning out shoes for the military; shoes for the civilian population; some of the finest shoes that are made. They cannot function if the Susquehanna River is going to wipe out the homes and the cities of Endicott, Vestal, and Johnson City every year. It is time we were given some protection.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. The gentleman is expressing the same ambition that we in the valley are expressing and I cannot see how the gentleman can oppose the amendment.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. But you are getting the fruits of it and we up there are out in the cold, as we always have been. You cannot help us a bit except to vote for an appropriation for these flood walls that I am interested in. I would like to see the House appropriate the money so that we can have the flood walls to keep the Susquehanna River from overflowing its banks every year.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. The gentleman got the fruits of TVA during the war when half the aluminum in the country was manufactured in that district.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Not in my district. The trouble is the geography is limited to your part of the country, and we get nothing up where we are.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman have a bill in for an appropriation for flood control on the Susquehanna?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I certainly have.

Mr. RANKIN. This is the first time I ever heard of it.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. That is not my fault. The gentleman is too busy with other subjects. If the gentleman will read the RECORD he would have seen it.

Mr. RANKIN. Well, I cannot read the RECORD all the time, but I am willing to help the gentleman.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. The gentleman does a pretty good job of keeping track of things from what I have seen.

Mr. RANKIN. But this is not the way for him to get results.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. If the gentleman can think of a better way, I would like to hear it. Nevertheless, flood control is definitely a part of this program, and I would like to see it brought in for my section.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. PICKETT. Has there been an authorization for a flood-control project on the Susquehanna?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. We are waiting for a report. We have waited a year, which is far too long to have to wait, and we are about to undergo another disastrous flood before anything comes of it. We had better get busy before we have another deluge in my territory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] has expired.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, in the exercise of our common sense, let us consider the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], to strike out of this bill the $2,950,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority. Of this amount $2,500,000 is for beginning construction of the New Johnsonville steam plant, and $450,000 for the purchase and installation of two hydroelectric generating units at existing TVA dams.

First, let us get the undisputed facts. The 375,000 kilowatts of power which this steam plant, when completed, will produce, and the 53,000 kilowatts of power which these two hydroelectric installations will produce, are desperately needed by the TVA and by the people of the region which it serves, if this agency is to supply the demand that will be made upon it for power in 1951 and 1952. The undisputed testimony before the Appropriations Committee considering and reporting this bill establishes these facts. These facts are admitted by the private power companies' chief lobbyist, Purcell L. Smith, whose salary is $65,000 per year plus an unlimited expense account, and his witnesses and those who spoke for him before the Appropriations Committee.

The report of the committee accompanying a similar bill to the one we are now considering, made to the Eightieth Congress which in summing up the testimony and insistences of Purcell L. Smith and his aids in discussing this proposed steam plant disclosed these facts: That unless this steam plant is constructed, and I now quote from said report:

Although substantial additional power can be generated by installation of new hydro generators, it—is approaching the limit of the amount of electricity which can be generated by water power harnessed primarily for purposes of flood control and navigation. The proposal to construct this steam plant is based upon the recognition of these two factors, and is intended to provide additional generating capacity to meet the currently estimated requirements of the foreseeable future for electric power in the Tennessee Valley area (committee report, p. 12).

All the dams, all the hydroelectric generators, all the steam plants, all the transmission lines, all the transformers, all the property of every kind operated by the TVA is the property of the United States Government. The Tennessee Valley Authority is the medium through which the Federal Government, for the benefit of all its people, operates these vast properties.

The Federal Government does not pay taxes to itself on property which it owns, nor does it pay taxes on its property to any State, county, or municipality. The complaint of those opposing the above appropriation that the TVA pays no taxes on the Government-owned property which it operates, therefore, does not rise to the dignity of respectable nonsense.

When the United States Government acquires title to property either by purchase or through its construction by the use of Federal funds, it does not pay interest to itself on the property which represents the money which it has invested in such property. The insistence that the TVA should pay to the Government interest on the Government's investment in these properties is ridiculous.

The TVA was created and has been developed by the Congress for three purposes—first, for flood control. In 1927 there was a devastating flood on the Mississippi and its tributaries which destroyed property of the value of one-half the cost of the entire TVA project.

Second, it is to improve navigation. The Federal Government has the exclusive power under the commerce clause, the general-welfare clause, the national-defense clause, and the property clause of the Federal Constitution to control and improve the rivers, lakes, and harbors of this country in the interest of the general public.

This right of the Government cannot be challenged by a private citizen nor by any private corporation. Until the TVA was created in 1933 and until the dams which it has constructed on the Tennessee River and its tributaries were completed, the Tennessee River, due to the existence of Muscle Shoals and a sharp fall of the river through that area, was not a navigable stream above said shoals. Today this river is navigable the year round from Knoxville, Tenn., to the Gulf of Mexico and to the upper reaches of the Mississippi. And the commerce on this stream runs into millions of tons yearly.

The statement has been made by those opposed to the TVA, and I quote:

TVA and the Federal Government have neither constitutional nor statutory authority to build this steam plant and that, therefore, the TVA is under no obligation to supply electric energy required by occupants of the Tennessee Valley.

And it is said that the authorization of this steam plant will set a far-reaching precedent. There is no foundation in fact and no authority under the law for these statements on the part of those who seek to defeat the construction of this necessary plant. The TVA Act, passed May 18, 1933, and amended from time to time, clothes the TVA with the right and power not only to construct dams upon the Tennessee River and its tributaries, but also—to acquire or construct power houses, power structures, transmission lines * * * and to unite the various power installations into one or more systems or transmission lines.

The TVA is further authorized—to provide and operate facilities for the generation of electric energy in order to avoid the waste of water power * * * to assist in liquidating the cost or aid in the maintenance of the projects of the Authority.

The act further provides that in the construction of any future dam, steam plant, or other facility to be used in whole or in part for the generation or transmission of electric power the Board is authorized and empowered to issue and to sell bonds not to exceed $50,000,000. The lawful right and the power of the TVA to construct a steam plant is further recognized by the act of Congress July 31, 1940, authorizing the TVA to begin construction of steam-electric generating facilities with a rated capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts.

Under the authority conferred by this act, the TVA constructed the Watts Bar steam plant at a cost of $60,000,000. The Government purchased the properties of the private power companies in this area, consisting of hydroelectric dams and steam plants which it now operates at Hale's Bar, Parksville, and Nashville and also other steam plants.

The TVA has owned them and has been operating them all the time. What is the difference, pray tell me, between the purchase of a steam plant already in existence and the construction of a steam plant? The Government has the power to operate a steam plant regardless of whether such plant is purchased or built by it.

Some of my friends opposed to the construction of this steam plant have made some rash statements and arguments against it. The weaker a man's case is the more rash are the statements he makes. It has been said today that the TVA has more electric power than it knows what to do with. I know that there is a shortage of power now in the TVA area. This is due to the long period of drought which we had in this region during the summer and fall of 1948. As a result of this shortage of power the Aluminum Co. of America at Alcoa, in Blount County, in Tennessee, which operates one of the greatest aluminum plants in the world, was forced to lay off 1,200 of its employees. That a shortage of TVA power is inevitable is admitted by the paid opposition to this steam plant in the person of Purcell L. Smith, his lawyers, and assistants.

Our good friend from New York [Mr. TABER] and he is a lovable man, and is conscientious about this matter, if he succeeds in killing this steam plant he will have succeeded in destroying the ability of the TVA to supply the needs of the present and future enterprises in my district and in my State. And he will, if he succeeds in preventing the construction of this plant, arrest and destroy the prosperity and future development of the people of Tennessee and adjoining States.

Mr. TABER. Oh, not now.

Mr. JENNINGS. Just be quiet. The gentleman has had his say. You are going to take this now, for the doctor says you need it; so just sit down and take it, it is coming to you. I hope that some of these days you will travel some Damascus road and that like Saul of Tarsus you will experience a change of heart, and that the scales will fall from your eyes; that you will no longer walk through the darkness with your headlight out behind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield my time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS] is recognized for the additional time.

Mr. JENNINGS. Some of the opponents of this plant ask: What about the industries of the other parts of the country? Bless your soul. We have not taken a single industry from any other part of the country. We were industrialized when the TVA came. We had the great Aluminum Co. of America, and during the war that company expanded its developments so that it produced enough airplane aluminum to enable this country to build and launch a fleet of planes that darkened the skies and dominated the battlefields all over the world. Not only that, as a result of TVA power in our region the atomic city was built in our midst. You cannot make aluminum without electricity; you cannot make the atomic bomb without an unlimited quantity of electricity. We are furnishing today to that great atomic plant there in my district 200,000 kilowatts of power. Not only that, the makers of atomic bombs are calling for more power. We stand in the shadow of the third world war. Who is there who would paralyze the ability of this country to produce the aluminum that in the words of our leader and former Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, "will enable us to raise an umbrella of air power over our own country and to carry the war to any enemy that may attack us." The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] said that during the last Congress, speaking of our effort to prepare for a threatened war.

It is said by the opponents of this appropriation that the Government has not the power to build this steam plant, that to do so is unconstitutional. No lawyer who has ability enough to get into any court of record that has the power to pass on a constitutional question would stand up here and tell this Congress that the Federal Government is without such power. Those who oppose the building of this steam plant cannot even get into court on this question; and they admit it. They brought a lawyer named Jackson down here, and I knew as soon as I saw the brief that was embodied in the report of the committee at the last session of Congress that it came from the office of Newton D. Baker in Cleveland, Ohio. I was on the power companies' side in the litigation when the TVA was attacked, and I, along with other lawyers, did all I could to question the constitutionality of the TVA act. We used the same arguments and relied on the same authorities as are cited in the antique and out of date brief filed in the hearings on this proposal. We were overruled by the courts. The power of the Federal Government to produce, transmit, and sell electric current generated by water power or by steam plants was upheld.

Here is what these fellows who are trying to kill this proposal admit, "Consequently, if your committee rules the appropriation for this steam plant and the Congress ultimately does so appropriate, no one can invoke a judicial determination of whether that action was in excess of constitutional authority." This is the language of Mr. Jackson, attorney for lobbyist Purcell L. Smith, used on the hearings before this committee in 1948.

My learned friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] pinned this lawyer's ears back when he appeared before the committee at this session of the Congress and, as we say down in Tennessee, "led him up to the rack and made him stem his fodder," made him admit that he could have no possible standing in a court, that no citizen, no power company or anybody else in this country could challenge the constitutionality of the TVA Act and the power of the TVA to build and operate a steam plant.

Why do we want it? We want it for national defense. We want it because in this country today there are 945 cooperatives that are carrying power to the farmers of this country in 45 States. We want it because in my district and in yours there are thousands of veterans, many of them with arms and legs off who are using and who desire to use TVA power. Many of them with TVA power are able to operate machinery they could not otherwise operate, thereby making a living for themselves, their wives, and their children. The other day I walked across the street from my office to a shoe shop run by two brothers who are veterans. They had all sorts of shoe-repair machinery operated by TVA electric power.

Down in my district and in other districts of the 80,000 square-mile area served by TVA power, within the last 3 years, electric energy has been carried to the homes of 250,000 farmers. More than 200,000 farmers are clamoring for TVA power today. No one in the world works harder than a farmer's wife and God pity Congress or anybody else who would deprive her of electric power in her home. The farmer works from sun to sun but his wife's work is never done. Do not paralyze and kill the future growth and prosperity of this great area in seven States. We are a part of our common country—our prosperity we share with you. Let us vote down Mr. TABER's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, for a fellow like myself, who has never been complimented for his oratorical ability, to follow my good friend, and a great American, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS], schooled in art of oratory, is quite a handicap I will admit. Even though the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS], does not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and some of the rest of us on this particular issue, without a doubt the next time he speaks on the floor he will tear the hide off of the spending, wasting outfit in power, from the President right down the line. So I take this with a grain of salt. I know he is fighting for his people. But knowing what is deep down in his heart, and knowing what a great American he is, I know he would not knowingly do anything that would eventually destroy America.

Let us look at this picture for a moment. In TVA we have an area of our Nation which has been set aside as a separate and distinct empire within the great United States of America. It is run and controlled and dictated over by three men, and anyone who gets in their way can get in serious trouble.

Now, I shall not present a bill in Congress to abolish TVA, but I would like to go along with this Congress to build a wall around that empire within our empire so high and so strong that that kind of dictatorship as you have in the Tennessee Valley will not spread to any other section of America, because it is so un-American that any schoolboy knows if it is allowed to spread to the other 10 river valleys of this Nation, then 33 men can control the Nation, because he who controls the electric energy of America in this electrical age controls America. I do not want to see anybody, either private utilities or any 33 men control America.

The main pressure back of this steam plant is the cities in the Tennessee Valley that want to get cheap power: Memphis, Knoxville, and Chattanooga. I could go on and name a lot more of them. Yes; we built a steam plant down in the TVA area in 1940 for military purposes. You can read the RECORD and see that is what it was for. If TVA is entitled to this steam plant for the benefit of the towns in that area then most every community in America is entitled to a steam plant built with taxpayers' dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that the House will vote down the amendment to strike out the funds to begin construction of this TVA steam plant at Johnsonville, Tenn.

The object of this plant is to firm up the power now produced on the Tennessee River to the peak of the average year. Unless this is done, you will have a large amount of power produced, we will say for 6 or 8 months in the year, and then a drop for the rest of the year, instead of having a firm supply of the peak amount the year round.

This plant will not be a burden on the taxpayers of the Nation, but will pay for itself through the sale of the power produced, just as the dams on the Tennessee River are now paying for themselves. As every member knows, I was co-author with Senator Norris, of Nebraska, of the bill creating the Tennessee Valley Authority in 1933. We had a terrible battle, but we finally got exactly what we were asking for.

Before I would agree to introduce the bill in the House, I went over it with Senator Norris carefully, and it was agreed that three things, that I insisted on, should be provided.

First. That in addition to building all the dams necessary, the Authority should have the right to build power lines, including rural power lines, to transmit this power to the ultimate consumers.

Second. That preference in distributing this power should be given to States, counties, municipalities, and cooperative power associations, not operating for profit, within the distribution radius.

Third. That the Authority should have the right to fix the maximum retail rates at which this power should be sold to the ultimate consumers.

At that time it was understood that the distribution radius was 350 miles. That is what the Army engineers said it was in their report on the Tennessee River in 1930.

It is admitted by everyone that this power can be generated and transmitted economically at least 300 miles in any direction from any dam or any plant where it is generated in large quantities.

It costs on an average of four-tenths of a mill a kilowatt-hour 100 miles to transmit electricity over high power lines, or 1.2 mills to transmit it 300 miles. This was the testimony of the best electrical engineers in America, representing both sides of the power issue.

This power should be supplied to every cooperative power association within 300 miles of any of these dams in order to supply the farmers of the entire area with TVA power at TVA rates.

In 1921, the year I came to Congress, the electric utility production for the entire country, including both public and private utilities, was only 37,180,123,000 kilowatt-hours.

In 1948 it was 282,594,459,000 kilowatt-hours, or more than seven times as much as it was in 1921.

In 1948 private establishments that produce their own power, such as the Ford Motor Co., generated 53,741,019,000 kilowatt-hours, which added to the 282,594,459,000, made a total for the entire country of 336,335,478,000 kilowatt-hours.

In 1921, when we were trying to get the Muscle Shoals dam finished and the power distributed, we were told by the power interests that we did not need any more electricity—that we had a surplus.

Yet in 1948 we used seven or eight times as much as we did in 1921, and there is a greater demand for additional power today than there has ever been at any time in all the history of this country.

In 1921 there was not one farmer out of 100 who had electricity in his home. Today we have about 75 percent of our farms electrified, and we expect to continue the drive until we reach every farmhouse with a power line that we can reach with the draft in times of war, or that the tax collector can find in times of peace.

In 1933, when Senator Norris and I were carrying on the drive for the passage of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, the electric utility production in this country, both public and private, was only 81,749,000,000 kilowatt-hours, or less than one-third of what it was in 1948.

At that time only 10 percent of our farms were electrified, while Japan had 90 percent of her farms electrified, Germany had 90 percent, and both Italy and France had 94 percent of their farms electrified.

Today, after 15 years of hard struggle, we have 75 percent of our farms electrified, and the demand for this service is greater than it has ever been at any time since rural electrification began.

As I have said before, the TVA has wrought the greatest development of ancient or modern times, and, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], the greatest thing that could happen to the people of Iowa, who are overcharged approximately 100 percent for their electricity now, would be the creation of an authority on the Missouri River to harness that great stream and its tributaries, control its floods, provide navigation, and generate and distribute that vast wealth of electricity that is now going to waste.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Not just now.

Mr. JENSEN. I will fight it to my death.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes, the gentleman has fought this power program all along. He and I do not agree on this subject at all.

When I started in this fight, there was not one farmer in Iowa out of a hundred that had electricity in his home. Today they have over 80 percent of the farms in that State electrified.

If the TVA had been in existence in 1927, you would not have had that disastrous flood on the lower Mississippi. A reduction of 8 inches in the flood crest at Cairo, Ill., would have saved the people along the Mississippi untold millions of dollars. The TVA would have reduced that flood crest by at least a foot and a half by holding the flood waters of the Tennessee back and preventing them from synchronizing with the floods on the Ohio, the Missouri, and the upper Mississippi.

Electricity is the lifeblood of our advancing civilization. The cheaper the rates, the more freely it flows; and the more freely it flows the greater are its benefits to mankind.

It is the greatest servant mankind has ever known, and the only one the man or woman of ordinary means can afford.

It is doing more to brighten the homes, lighten the burdens, and raise the standards of living of the American farmer than everything else this Government has ever done.

This steam plant, as I said, is to firm up this power to the peak of the average year. We expect to do the same thing in the Central Valley in California, along the Columbia River, and everywhere else these great streams are harnessed and these plants are found to be necessary.

Oh, somebody says that the TVA is selling that power below cost. Your party was in power in 1930, and you had a great engineer for President. You were selling power wholesale to the private power companies at Muscle Shoals at 1.59 mills a kilowatt-hour and showing the American people that it would pay 4 percent on the investment. Today the TVA is selling that same power for more than twice that price, and you say they are selling it at a loss.

This is not to build up industries in the Tennessee Valley. I am fighting for the farmers and others who want this cheap electricity in their homes and small business establishments for 300 miles around, which is the admitted distribution radius of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

That would reach practically every farm house in Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, and a large portion of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia.

Let me call your attention to the fact that we have 394,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of hydroelectric power now going to waste in our navigable streams and their tributaries every year. If developed, it could be firmed up to the peak of the average year with 116,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of steam power, making a total of 510,000,000,000, which, added to what we are now using, would give us more than 800,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year.

That would be enough to run every industry and every commercial establishment, light every house and every barn, milk every cow, wash every garment, and heat every home in this country for centuries to come.

Then our country could go on down to the future, holding high the torch and lighting up the way for all other nations of the earth to follow, into the greatest era of progress and prosperity the world has ever known.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that this debate started on a partisan angle. This is not a partisan problem. The differences of opinion go down the middle of both parties. We have men on both sides of the aisle who are very enthusiastic over public power development, and others who are violently opposed to it. This is not a Republican nor a Democrat problem; it is a national problem. Both parties in their platforms have endorsed public power. I point out that one of the authors of the bill creating the TVA was Senator Norris, a Republican. The other was our colleague JOHN RANKIN, a Democrat. Senator Hiram Johnson and Phil Swing, a former distinguished Member of the House, fought for 10 years for the Hoover Dam, which is one of the largest public power projects in the country. They were Republicans.

Let me point out one of the things that I think is important to remember in connection with the development of public power. In the first place, many of these great projects like the TVA, the Hoover Dam, Grand Coulee, and the Central Valley water project of California, would never have been developed by private enterprise. We had to have the public, who can afford to gamble on the outcome of the projects, finance and build these types of projects. It is not that they are not sound in the long run. They will all pay out, and pay big dividends in money and greater dividends in benefits to the people that benefit by them, but over the span of a few years perhaps the income would be insufficient to pay the bonds and the dividends on the bonds that private capital would be required to float to finance such projects. For that reason, we had to get these projects through governmental channels and with Government funds if the projects were to be developed to meet the needs of an expanding economy.

May I point out also that these developments, in my humble judgment, are not socialistic. For instance, the Central Valley project of California was really started on its way by a great banker, Rudolph Spreckels, a very successful banker. In 1916 he got behind what was known as the water power bill in California, which provided in general for the conservation of the waters of that great valley. I heard him after he had lost the battle, make the statement, "I believe in capitalism; but I do think that sometimes the people that are in control of capitalistic wealth overreach themselves."

I also believe that these great natural resources, such as we have in California, are our greatest assets in which the people have perpetual values, and they, therefore, must be developed in the public interest by public agencies. I also want to make the point that the problem being considered here is not confined to the waters of the Tennessee. We have the identical problem in California. You have it in other parts of the Union. To firm the power by a steam plant is common practice in the electrical business. Every private utility that is successful does that very thing. It only makes the investment of the National Government more efficient by enabling these projects to sell a larger proportion of their power. The investment in this steam plant, which will ultimately be much larger, will bring back every dollar plus interest that is invested in it. That is why I think this amendment should be defeated.

We have heard this charge of socialism time and again in this discussion. Remember, that is a relative term. The world, and especially our country, is not static. We are changing from day to day, and some of the things that were thought to be socialistic 10 years ago are accepted today. Just think—over 95 percent of the cities of America, and every large city of America, owns its own water system. Hundreds of them own electrical distributing systems. In my own State we have 116 irrigation systems. Every one of them was established by a group of ranchers joined together in a semipublic body called an irrigation district to get water for their farms and ranches. Many of them have a by-product of electricity. You might say that that is socialism, but that is not interfering with the private-enterprise system of America, and neither will this project. These great projects, such as TVA, are developing and building mighty economic empires that private enterprise could not build up in centuries. In my State of California we are going to have a population of 30,000,000 people in the next 25 years. Why? Because Federal and State funds are going into the development of our water resources in California which will justify a population of twenty-five or thirty million people. All these empires being developed in the various river basins can only be successful if they are developed and started through the immediate provision of public funds. That is why I am in favor of this appropriation and am against the amendment to eliminate the item for a stand-by steam plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVINS].

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to commend those of my colleagues who have spoken heretofore in behalf of the pending deficiency appropriation bill to provide funds for beginning construction of a steam plant to be built by the Tennessee Valley Authority in Tennessee. I want to join with those supporters of TVA in urging the adoption of the pending appropriation to assure that this much-needed facility for the people of the Tennessee Valley be provided, and to urge that the House vote down the Taber amendment to kill this appropriation.

As the Members who were in the Congress during the previous session will recall, funds necessary for the construction of this steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., failed to get the approval of the Eightieth Congress. Construction of this plant at that time was called vital to the extension of power from the Tennessee Valley Authority for industrial and farm uses and for purposes of national defense.

The modest sum that was asked for this construction was denied by less than 20 votes in this body. When the matter was brought before the Senate it was approved by a decisive vote, not once, but on two different occasions.

The question is before the House again today. I doubt if any legislation ever brought before this body has been the subject of more false propaganda, more misleading information, and more half-truths made in opposition to it than this legislation which we are now considering.

Only yesterday a distinguished former chairman of the House Appropriations Committee made the statement that three or four industries, including the Aluminum Corp. of America and the Monsanto Chemical Corp., had moved from the North and East into Tennessee and the TVA region.

These plants, Mr. Chairman, did not move from the North or East or anywhere. They have been there in the Tennessee area for many, many years. Testimony before the Appropriations Committee on this subject failed to disclose that a single industry has transplanted its plant and facilities from the North or East into the TVA area. The testimony did show that some few branch plants have located there and that there has been a normal and progressive industrial growth in the area. I want to get the truth and the facts in this matter straight.

The gentleman went on to state that the people of New York were paying the light bill for the people of the Tennessee Valley. This, of course, does not represent a true statement of fact. I should like to dispel this impression. Every kilowatt of power is paid for by the consumers. This is no charity operation. There is a provision in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act providing for the amortization of revenue to cover the cost of this great project and each year a percentage sum required by statute is set aside by the TVA and paid into the United States Treasury.

Another speaker in opposition to this appropriation stated that TVA had no constitutional or legal authority for its operations. In support of his statement he went back into ancient history and tried to dig up some old arguments which were used to oppose this agency of the Government in the very beginning.

Mr. Chairman, the constitutionality and legality of the Tennessee Valley Authority and its operations has long been established by the decisions of our courts.

This same gentleman went further to state that it was never intended that the Government should engage in the power business. I should like to ask this gentleman and others who hold this view what they thought was intended when the Federal Government bought out all the private power companies in the area of the TVA. The sale of private power companies to the Government was negotiated by the late Wendell Willkie.

When the Government bought out the property of the Tennessee Power Co. and the Commonwealth & Southern Utilities, it thereby went into the power generating and distribution business and thereby formed a Government power monopoly in that area. By what argument can it thus be advanced that the Government never intended to go into the power business when the Government, by its private power purchases, became the sole source of electric power for the people in the Tennessee Valley?

In these transactions, the private-power interests received the sum of $125,000,000 for their entire operations within the area. Of this amount the Government, through TVA, paid $59,263,122 and the various municipalities and distributors paid the remaining sum. The one single largest transaction was the outright purchase of the holdings of the Tennessee Power Co. and Commonwealth & Southern for the sum total of $44,949,400.

As indicated, the total amount received by the former private-power owners was $125,000,000 from both TVA and distributors. Could it thus be said that it was never intended for the Government to go into the power business after these transactions?

It was further stated on the floor yesterday that the Government is subsidizing the power consumers in the Tennessee Valley. The truth of the matter is that the TVA pays into the Federal Treasury each year large sums of money from its operations. Payments are made in the form of interest on bonds and the retirement of bonds and other receipts in addition to the sale of power.

Section 26 of the TVA Act provides for annual payments to be made to the Treasury from the sale of power. Section 26 payments alone brought into the United States Treasury in 1945 the sum of $7,087,741. In 1946, payments amounted to $7,971,278 and in 1947 $8,000,000 was paid into the Treasury, making a total of $23,059,019 in the past 3 years, which TVA has returned into the Treasury of the United States.

In addition, while the people of our region are being served with cheap electricity, the power-generating facilities of the TVA constitute only one phase of this great development program. TVA is concerned with navigation, flood-control, and conservation programs. These are all worthy and needed functions and alone fully justify the existence of TVA.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, the Democratic Party and, for that matter, both political parties have public-power planks in their national platforms and each party has gone on record as advocating the development and expansion of our natural resources in the interest of all the people. The Democratic Party in national convention last year adopted specific recommendations for the continued development of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the President in his recent budget request to this Congress asked for an appropriation of funds sufficient to start construction of this steam plant by the TVA.

This plant is badly needed, Mr. Chairman, to help relieve the power shortage and to meet the rising demand for electricity in our area and in line with the general economic growth of Tennessee and the South. The sum asked for this expansion work is not large, but the benefits which will be derived therefrom are great—great for our people and also for the prosperity of the people of the entire Nation.

Let me give you some other facts and figures with respect to this great facility in the Tennessee Valley. The Federal Government has an investment of more than $350,000,000 in generating and transmission facilities alone in the Tennessee Valley. These TVA properties and operations are owned by all the people of the United States. The people of the Tennessee Valley—7,000,000 of them, of whom 750,000 are users and consumers of electric power within this area—reside in seven States—Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama—an area of more than 80,000 square miles.

There is a definite concern, Mr. Chairman, on the part of the people of the area that the senior partner in this vast operation—that is, the Federal Government acting through the Congress—may not make sufficient appropriations to insure consumers an adequate supply of power. This is a partnership, Mr. Chairman, between the people and their Government. At the beginning of this great project—a project which would never have been made possible had the Members of Congress in general adopted a dog-in-the-manger attitude—the Federal Government through the Authority bought out the private power interests serving the region. In so doing the Government thereby became the sole supplier of power in this large region. It thereby also morally obligated itself to supply power for the people of the Tennessee Valley in quantities to meet their needs, both present and future. The Government should not go back on its contract with the people in this instance.

In the TVA the Federal Government—all of the people of America—have a sound investment. Figures prove this to be true. Therefore, from an economic and strictly business point of view this mutually satisfactory arrangement should be continued. From the standpoint of service to the people and the prosperity of the Nation the Congress should take no action which would, in effect, say, "This much progress you shall make and no more; thus far you can go and no farther." The Federal Government should not put a ceiling on power production nor freeze the amount of power which may be produced when electric power is so critically needed for our domestic progress and national defense.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Krug, testified recently before committees of the Congress concerning these needs for additional power for domestic purposes, and also to help carry out the national defense requirements of our country.

Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of common knowledge that a power shortage exists in America today. Although some people want to debate this fact, everyone—even the most ardent advocates of private power—agrees that there is no great surplus or excess of power and they also agree that there is an increased consumer demand and a growing need for additional power for industrial and national defense purposes. All over the Nation power demand is pressing hard upon supply. This growing demand is a testimonial to progress. It is evidence of a growing regional and national strength. It should be hailed as a triumph of democratic achievement.

Mr. Chairman, I desire not only to urge approval of this much-needed appropriation, but also to protest the misleading information and false propaganda concerning the TVA which has pervaded this body like a London fog. Whenever any matter pertaining to the TVA has arisen in the past, this propaganda fog has gathered instantly out of a clear sky to obscure the facts and the truth. Today the smoke screen is denser than ever, and it has the undeniable odor of the private power interests.

From statements which have been made on this floor, Mr. Chairman, it seems one is being asked to believe that the fine and estimable people of the North and East are benevolently paying the light and power bills to save the people of the South from darkness. Need I say that such is not the case.

We have also been asked to believe that because of the alleged abundance of cheap power industries in the North and East are making a mass exodus into the area of the TVA. Mr. Chairman, I not only deny emphatically that this is the truth, but I shall prove my statement—a thing which opponents of this small appropriation measure have failed to do. Extensive hearings, Mr. Speaker, before the House Committee on Appropriations failed to disclose that one single solitary industry had moved from the North or East to the TVA region.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that new industries have grown up in the TVA area, as I have pointed out before. But this industrial development has not been accomplished at the sacrifice of the industrial prosperity of any other region in this country. The development which has occurred has been a healthy advancement to which every area of this land is rightfully entitled. TVA only made it possible for our region, neglected by private power interests, to grow as the Good Lord meant for it to grow when he bestowed so many rich, natural resources there.

I should also like to dispel the impression that the Government is giving the people of the Tennessee Valley anything. Every kilowatt of power is paid for, Mr. Chairman, by the consumers. This is no charity operation. There is a provision in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, Mr. Chairman, providing for the amortization of revenue to cover the cost of this great project and each year a percentage sum required by statute is set aside by the TVA and paid into the United States Treasury. In addition, while the people of our region are being served with cheap electricity, the power-generating facilities of the TVA constitutes only one phase of this great development program. There is the navigation program, flood-control, and other conservation programs—all worthy and needed developments within their own right—which of themselves more than justify the existence of TVA.

Members of this body who do not acknowledge the fact of power shortage, the truth of the situation in the Tennessee Valley, are hampering their own progress. What is good for one region is good for all. Opportunities for expansion cannot be bottled up in one region or another. When one region prospers, the entire country is better off for it. I could not bring myself to deny to the eastern regions the development of their natural resources, nor could I bring myself to snipe at efforts of the Northwest to harness the vast resources of its area. Development in those areas promotes general prosperity in all sections of our common country.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have too long overlooked the sources of the false propaganda that follows TVA like a haunting ghost. It is very definitely man-made, Mr. Chairman. It can be traced to the private power lobbyists—those masters of the man-made fog. They have been exceedingly industrious in this matter.

In the desperate efforts of the private power propaganda fogmakers, whole page ads have been bought in the daily newspapers. Shout the propaganda from the rooftops, is their theory. Spare no expense. Such magazines as Newsweek, World Report, and others—who certainly do not give away their space—have been utilized to spread the message of the private power interests in full-page advertisements. They have even created a special organization to spread their false gospel. I refer to the National Association of Electric Companies. This organization, Mr. Chairman, has bombarded the Members of Congress with cleverly drawn letters designed to give out a false impression and improper information on this subject. This campaign has been astutely planned to minimize and discount the benefits the public receives from public power through the Tennessee Valley Authority. They have subtly planted the seeds of doubt by insinuations against the TVA.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I believe it will be of interest to point out the National Association of Electric Companies is registered with the Congress as a lobby organization and that its official report to Congress on its activities shows that last year it was the third highest spender for lobbying purposes of any registered agency. They spent for purposes of discounting the benefits of public power, particularly the TVA, the sum of more than $304,000. And, Mr. Chairman, the sum of $65,000 of that avowed expenditure was salary for its No. 1 lobbyist in Washington. Such a salary thereby makes him the highest paid lobbyist in Washington today.

This highly paid private power lobbyist has produced many works of propaganda art. He has authored many fancy and costly brochures and pamphlets with which to educate the public. Let me quote briefly from some of this antipublic power literature:

The New Johnsonville steam plant, it was pointed out would lead to nationalization of other industries. Here is another:

It is the taxpayers in the rest of the United States who will help pay for the steam plant to benefit one privileged area. They subsidize TVA.

TVA is also called an unfair competitor and the charge is made that enlargement of TVA would be injurious to the economic welfare of other sections of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to point out that in the RECORD of Monday in the Extension of Remarks made by the distinguished former chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, Mr. TABER, of New York, an effort was made to deprecate the fact that he has received many letters and communications from the people of the Tennessee Valley expressing their pride in the TVA and what it has done to bring prosperity and well-being to the people of this area and the South.

I should like to state to the gentleman from New York and to this entire body that those letters which he has received represent a true expression of the feelings and beliefs of the people of the Tennessee Valley toward this great agency.

Mr. Chairman, among the purposes declared by the Congress in passing the TVA Act was to develop the resources of the Tennessee Valley for the benefit of all the people; to promote the prosperity and raise the level of income of the people of the valley; and also to strengthen the entire Nation by making the valley more productive. Progress has been made—progress in the development of our rivers for purposes of navigation and flood control, in the improvement of the fertility of our soil and the prevention of soil erosion through approved methods of conservation. A major portion of this progress is rooted in the blessings TVA has bestowed on the people of this region. Progress has also been made through the extension of rural electrification. Community and farm electrification has been developed and expanded. Our farmers and other individual consumers are making greater use of low-cost electricity. In 1933, when the TVA Act was passed, only 1 farm in 28 had electric service. Today 50 farms out of every 100 are served by electricity through our efficient rural electric cooperatives cooperating with the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Within the Fifth Congressional District of Tennessee, the district which I have the honor to represent, the farms in 1930 were only 5 percent electrified. Today a little more than 51 percent of the farms of the Fifth District are served by electricity. These figures, Mr. Speaker, show the trend of the current program which aims toward further expanded rural electrification within Tennessee and rural America.

In the postwar period alone some 1,400 miles of new power transmission lines have been built within the Fifth District of Tennessee. It is my hope that rural electrification can be extended to farm areas in all sections of our common country, as each strong region makes for a stronger Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I have voted for measures that have been for the benefit of the people of the North, the East, and the West. I have cast my vote for measures which were for the welfare of the people of other sections and regions. I have favored needed and necessary measures for other sections of our common country.

I fail utterly to understand the tragic shortsightedness which keeps men from realizing that prosperity has a chain reaction; that when one section prospers, other sections will reap a harvest of benefits. This Government of people from the North, the East, the West, as well as the South, should not—it cannot—be guilty of putting a ceiling on progress in the South.

Let us not take any action here today which would reverse the trend of prosperity. Let common sense prevail.

Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that Members of this Congress will vote the modest sum requested by the pending amendment to the appropriation bill for the Tennessee Valley Authority. I urge adoption of the amendment not only in behalf of the people of Tennessee, but of all the people of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the bone of contention concerning the appropriations to construct steam auxiliary power plants appears to be the profits to be made from the sale of seasonal surplus electric power now being generated by the Government-owned hydroelectric plants during the high-water season.

The question here is shall this surplus seasonal Government-produced power be sold at bargain rates to privately owned electric companies to be firmed up for year-round production by supplementing steam-generated power by private interest and sold at a large profit? Or shall the Government firm up this seasonal surplus power by the construction of its own steam auxiliary plants and thereby secure a larger return on its investment by selling this seasonal and steam-generated power on a year-round basis at the current price rate?

I am wondering how the gentleman from New York and his colleagues expect to win the confidence of the American people by opposing good, sound business principles in building these auxiliary plants, and firming up this power and increasing the return on the Government investment.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. If the gentleman had been washed out as many times as we have on the Susquehanna, he would worry about it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. What does steam plants have to do with being washed out by the Susquehanna?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. It has something to do with flood control.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This is a plain business proposition. I believe no man on the Republican side would hesitate a minute to put in a steam-generating plant to firm up the power and increase the revenue of these Government plants if it were proposed by a Republican administration.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO] is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I am from Massachusetts; and, of course, that State is not directly affected by this TVA proposition. It does seem to me that the arguments on the Republican side more or less fall by their own weight: On the one hand, we are told this proposition is socialism; on the other hand, we are told that this proposition is in favor of the vested interests, the big corporations down there. It cannot very well be in favor of both. In addition to that, we have, of course, the argument of sectionalism. That, I suppose, comes up more frequently on the floor of this House than any other place in the country. For the life of me, I cannot see how we can look at the TVA or any other public-power project from the point of view of what it is going to bring to our home States. Directly, it is not going to bring anything to Massachusetts; but, looking at the project in the light that I regard it, it is going to bring benefit after benefit to the whole country. We represent all the people of the country, not just the people of one State or district; we represent all the people of this country. I say to you that the TVA is a proven proposition; it is not a matter of prophecy, it is not a matter of experimentation. TVA has proven its merit time after time in industry, in production, in defense, in all the articles that go into the home to make our American standard of living the standard of living that we want for this country and for our children.

It is not a question of what is good for my State or what is good for any other State; it is a question of what is good for the people of this country; and it is the people of this country who own TVA. It is good for all the people, and that includes those in my own State of Massachusetts, which is far removed from Tennessee.

I hope that in the future there will be many other projects similar to the TVA, projects that will reach throughout this entire Nation, projects to which we can point with pride and say we had a hand in their creation. How are you going to do it if you vote against TVA here and now? How are you going to go back to the people of this country when it is something for your State and say: "Oh, yes, I am in favor of that"? We are either for or against projects like TVA, wherever they may be. It is a matter of principle, not sectionalism.

We must go all the way, the whole distance on this proposition. I say to you that power is probably more needed than anything else to improve the American standard of living. We are for or against it; there is no middle ground.

As concerns the statement of the Member who said that if we had 10 such valley authorities 33 men could control the country, let me say this: If 33 men could control the country through the control of power, what greater argument is needed for public power? And what greater argument is needed for the TVA and every other single proposition that tends along the same line? You are either for TVA or you are against it. I urge you to vote in favor of it by voting down this amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I am from the city of Chicago. I wish to subscribe 100 percent to the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. As far as I am concerned I believe there is too much sectionalism expressed upon the floor of this House.

The benefits that flow from TVA will affect the entire country. Just as a few days ago we voted funds for the relief of a disaster which affected primarily the people of the West, yet that disaster secondarily affects the entire Nation as well. I believe, along with the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the TVA will do much to benefit and increase the prosperity of the entire Nation.

Mr. FURCOLO. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I am amused, amazed, and disgusted by some of the statements that have been made yesterday afternoon and today relative to the New Johnsonville steam plant. It seems that some of our friends from New York, Pennsylvania, and Iowa have had the same fight going on since 1933. The same reasoning advanced yesterday by the gentleman from New York in opposition to this plant was the identical argument he used in 1932 when TVA was created. He is running true to form in his consistent support of special interests. In my opinion, the philosophy of progressive government advanced by the opponents of this plant, was well defined by the late, lamented, and beloved Will Rogers when he said, "Our policy is simple, nothing is no good."

There has been much talk about the constitutionality of the TVA. The Supreme Court of our Nation has declared the act constitutional. Today the gentleman from New York decries there is no need for this steam plant.

Mr. Chairman, as information for the opponents of this plant, there are in this 80,000-square-mile area some 6,000,000 people who are dependent upon TVA for electric energy. These 6,000,000 people, mostly rural, are in dire need of more power. We have 800,000 consumers of electricity today, within the area of the TVA, and hundreds of thousands more without electric power. These are not the big industries. They are the boys out on the farms who raise the crops that feed us. They have no electricity today. They need it to light up their homes, for washing machines, cream separators, water systems, various and sundry farm operations, and not to produce anything to be manufactured, but to feed the Nation in which we exist and reside.

There is a definite need for this plant unless you wish to segregate these 6,000,000 fine people. It is the obligation of this Government to take care of the people of our Nation and to protect them. By cutting out the appropriation for this steam plant you will say to those 6,000,000 people: "We do not want to have a thing to do with you; we want you to be backward, we do not want you to have any light or any power at all; we do not want any part of your future generation to be educated."

Mr. Chairman, that is not right. There is too much sectionalism brought up here today. I agree with the gentlemen who preceded me and spoke on that point. The gentleman from New York should bow his head in shame when he brings in sectionalism as he did yesterday afternoon.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I never mentioned sectionalism in my life.

Mr. SUTTON. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, during World War II when we went into the service of our country and when his constituents went into the service of his country, when we went down through the valley of hell fighting for America, we were not fighting for New York, we were not fighting for Tennessee, we were not fighting for Texas or Washington; we were fighting for America.

That is the attitude I take here today. This is not a sectional problem. This is not just for the South. It is for the United States of America. It belongs to the people of America, not to the State of Tennessee. It belongs to everybody in the Nation. I will give the gentleman from New York the best hat there is in Washington, D. C., if he will point out one industry that has moved from the North or Northeast to the TVA area since 1933. TVA is not in competition with the North nor the Northeast. It is strictly an American institution for all the people of our Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

I support it for the reasons which I gave yesterday during general debate. I support it for the reasons as a result of which after thoroughgoing debate on the floor of this House last summer the proposal submitted by TVA was on two separate occasions voted down by record vote.

This is not a question, Mr. Chairman, of being for the TVA or against the TVA. We are all for the TVA in its proper sphere of action.

It is a question of fair play to private industry and to the American people.

The facts are, as has been pointed out, that TVA under present conditions, with the subsidy which it receives, operates in such a manner that no private industry can possibly compete with it on a fair basis.

Until recently it made no reasonable provision for amortization or depreciation. Its interest burden has been practically negligible. Its tax burden has been estimated at somewhere between 10 and 20 percent of what anybody in private business would have to pay. I understand that a person in private industry pays more for taxes alone than TVA collects for the power which it sells. The net income which it earns, of around $17,000,000, is not even sufficient to cover what anyone in private industry would normally have to set aside for interest payments and for depreciation.

However you figure them, alleged costs of TVA are far less than the actual costs of private industry, and the people pay the difference in subsidy.

Until now TVA has limited its power activities to the generation and marketing of power incidental to navigation and flood control, in accordance with the clear intent of the TVA Act.

It now tells the Congress that there is an increasing demand in the TVA area which it cannot meet with its incidental power. It asserts a brand new obligation to meet that demand, and it requests the Congress to put it in a position, by steam-plant construction, to meet that demand, whatever it may prove to be, whatever its source, even though it can only be met by power over and above its incidental power and even though its customers are prohibited from steam-plant construction by so-called binding contracts with TVA.

This is a radical departure from the policy heretofore pursued.

I am against the proposal of TVA for the reasons which I stated yesterday. Limited time prevents any detailed statement.

I am against it because I do not believe that TVA has authority under present legislation to engage in the production and marketing of nonincidental power in competition with private industry, and because I believe that such a question of policy should not be determined in the course of considering an appropriation bill.

I am against it because the record indicates clearly that there is ample power available now and for years to come except for the prospective needs of big business users, such as the Aluminum Co. of America, the Monsanto Chemical Co., and other multi-million-dollar industries in and near the TVA.

I am against it because the prospective needs of big business do not need to be met by TVA. If steam-plant construction is necessary, the simplest solution is to let the industrial users construct and pay for the steam plant as they would in any other part of America. They will do it fast enough if they have to.

I am against it because I am against establishing the broad national policy which the proposal implies.

I can see no reason why the people of America, rich and poor alike, should be compelled to pay through higher prices and higher taxes for the power requirements of big business in Tennessee.

I can see no reason why government should compete with private industry on a basis which is utterly unfair.

I can see no reason for establishing a precedent which means increasing unfair competition and possible nationalization in this field and perhaps in any other industrial field in America.

Let us either limit TVA to its prescribed role or eliminate the present elements of unfair competition immediately.

I hope the pending amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the matter before the Committee of the Whole now is simply a business one, whether we are going to make the Tennessee Valley Authority throughout all its activities in the distribution of power a real, efficient agency, or whether we are going to permit it to continue in its present ineffective form.

The Tennessee Valley Authority was established 16 years ago. Those of us who were here then remember that dramatic fight, the forces of progress against the forces who look backward. I stood in the well fighting for it then. On various occasions since when various questions have arisen in connection with the Tennessee Valley Authority I have stood in the well supporting legislation that would make it operate effectively and efficiently. I remember that then the charge of communism was hurled at that project, the inference being that those who supported such a project were inclined in that direction. I do not think any of us who supported it need take a back seat to any of those who opposed it, in our patriotism. It is the basic issue that will exist a thousand years from now, the issue of the forces of progress against the forces of backwardness or the forces of reactionism. That is the issue which is involved in the question before the Committee of the Whole today.

The only purpose of this $2,000,000 plus is to determine whether or not the TVA will be allowed to operate as any other private power company would, with a steam plant to provide a steady flow of power throughout the year. All private companies possess such steam plants now. It is what is called a firm-up plant.

The opponents of the utilization of our natural resources—and that was the basic question involved 16 years ago—are opposed to this just as vigorously as they opposed the Tennessee Valley Authority 16 years ago. They opposed Boulder Dam, they opposed the Grand Coulee Dam, they opposed the Central Valley project, they will oppose a Connecticut Valley Authority, or a Merrimac Valley Authority in New England, which should be given serious consideration, and they will oppose the Missouri Valley Authority. Honest? Yes, I know they are honest in their view, but I sharply disagree with their judgment.

This project has brought benefits to millions of people. Private capital was unable to meet the situation. Tremendous floods, bringing in their wake destruction of property and danger to persons, had visited that great area of the country for countless generations. Were we going to permit that condition to continue? It was primarily a flood-control and navigation project. Then should we waste the tremendous power that could be developed as a result of our flood control and reclamation and irrigation? Common sense tells us that it would be a waste of public funds and a lack of common sense to permit the great power that could be developed as incidental to our flood control to be wasted.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is another illustration of the time-old battle that was going on 200 years ago and 100 years ago and is going on now and will continue in the future—the battle of the forces of progress against the forces of reactionism.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield my time to the dean of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts has called attention to what transpired 16 years ago. I can go a little further back than that. I remember when the same forces that are now fighting this project tried to turn over Muscle Shoals to private industry. I remember when they were trying to turn it over to Mr. Henry Ford for little or nothing. I remember also that 14 years ago, under the leadership of a gentleman by the name of Hopson, forces were fighting the so-called holding-company bill, maintaining that it was a death sentence to the power companies. They spent over $3,000,000 in lobbying in an attempt to defeat that legislation, claiming that its passage would destroy the power companies. Sometime later Mr. Hopson was convicted for giving false information concerning his lobbying activities.

We did pass legislation that sought to relieve the situation to bring about cheaper power rates, but notwithstanding our action, I find today that the power companies which spent over $3,000,000 for propaganda at that time against the measure are also opposed to the construction of the steam plant on the pretense that it would affect the private power industry. The legislation which Congress has enacted in the past has not injured the companies and has proven of benefit to certain sections of the country in the obtaining of expanded and better power service and fair rates.

Mr. Chairman, the power companies are as wrong today as they were then in contending that public power service would seriously affect or destroy them. I have here a statement giving the profits of the private power companies. Not wishing to unduly encumber the RECORD I will list six or seven of the companies showing the profits they derived in 1948 and ask unanimous consent to insert them as part of my remarks:

|---|---|
| Pacific Gas & Electric Co | $27,351,000 |
| Electric Power & Light Corp | 26,420,926 |
| American Power & Light | 23,392,937 |
| Public Service Electric & Gas Co | 20,400,912 |
| American Gas & Electric | 19,740,816 |
| Ohio Power Co | 8,906,893 |

Those profit figures do not indicate that the private power companies are suffering and in danger of being destroyed. The fact is that their profits increased from 5 to 20 percent in 1948 and the profits of most of the companies are the highest since they were organized.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, with all this evidence before us as to the operation of the private power companies and being aware that these same interests have been able to influence the Republican side in the past, I regret that the Republicans in the light of full facts should continue now to endeavor to serve private interests as against the interest of the people generally and contrary to the good of our Government. The TVA has not only been of great benefit to that part of the country but also to adjoining States. It has been beneficial to the entire country and has proven that it can produce and furnish power at a much lower cost to the users than the private power companies and to a great extent its operation has served as a yardstick as to the rate to be charged for power service.

For these reasons I am for the appropriation for the plant as reported by the committee which will make it possible for the TVA to reduce the cost of producing the power with a corresponding reduction in cost to the users. I regret that there has been opposition to the provision and in view of the benefits that will follow the erection of the steam plant, I am constrained to say that those who are opposing the provision unfortunately have been led astray by the avaricious power interests.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman today.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman also add to his statement the fact that the private utilities are paying and have been paying for several years past in local, State and Federal taxes on an average the little sum of $650,000,000? Then, I would like to have you say, as a note to the list that you are going to submit, that we need the money in the Treasury of the United States to help build these projects that you are talking about.

Mr. SABATH. Where did they get the money? They got it from the people, from the consumers, because of the overcharges that they made. Otherwise they never could have made such profits that enabled them to pay the taxes which the gentleman mentions, and I presume the greater portion was for income taxes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment to eliminate from this bill the item providing for the construction of a steam plant by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The bill provides for $2,950,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, of which $2,500,000 is to start construction of the new steam plant. According to the testimony before our Committee last year, the total ultimate cost of the plant, including auxiliary appurtenances for its operation, will be approximately $84,000,000.

My opposition to this proposed project is not based solely on the cost in dollars. By that I do not for a moment mean to imply that I do not consider the dollars to be expended important. In these days of many uncertainties, nationally and internationally, it is most important—indeed, it is imperative—that we concern ourselves about every single item of expenditure, however small. But, judging from what has taken place in committee and the nature of the bill before us, whatever I might say about the absolute need for economy will probably fall on deaf ears.

If this item only cost $10,000, or $1,000, or even $1, I would be opposed to it. There is involved here a fundamental principle. It presents by indirection an issue which we must definitely face. In this proposed new steam plant for generating electricity we are brought face to face with the fundamental question as to whether we intend to have the Federal Government continue to enlarge its operations in competition with private enterprise.

The proposal before us is a notable example of how, once the Federal Government enters some particular field of endeavor, the scope of the program invariably grows and grows. In the process the primary purpose of the program is completely changed, and new and different reasons are presented in support of the program or its enlargement. In the end we arrive at something altogether different from what was originally intended.

Take, for example, the school-lunch program. To be sure, that is not in issue here, but it presents an example of how these various Government programs are completely changed in character. You will recall that we originally entered upon the school-lunch program as a way to use surplus agricultural products. The primary purpose of the program was to help absorb the surplus in agriculture. It was part of the general program of several years ago to raise farm prices. And the subsidizing of school lunches for the children was incidental to that overall objective.

We still have the school-lunch program, and on a much larger scale than when initiated. The primary purpose now is to subsidize school lunches and the matter of absorption of farm surpluses is merely incidental, if it is even a consideration.

I am not debating the merits of the school-lunch program, Mr. Chairman, I am merely trying to emphasize how the character and purposes of programs of the Federal Government can be and are changed, slowly but surely, without the people actually realizing what has taken place. It is this very process that seems to be characteristic of bureaucracy which gives me concern when we have recommended to us such programs as Federal aid to education. I can readily see how that program can in the course of time be converted into something more than mere Federal subsidies to States for education, and instead can ultimately mean a Federal school system.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the item in this bill for the steam generating plant for TVA raises this question: Is the purpose of the Tennessee Valley Authority to generate electricity, or is the purpose to promote navigation and control floods? If you turn to section 9a of the TVA Act, there can be no doubt as to the answer. Let me read that section:

SEC. 9a. The Board is hereby directed in the operation of any dam or reservoir in its possession and control to regulate the stream flow primarily for the purposes of promoting navigation and controlling floods.

Note those words, Mr. Chairman, that the dams and reservoirs are to be operated "primarily for the purposes of promoting navigation and controlling floods." Navigation and floods constitute the primary purpose. That is why the TVA was originally established. That was the argument made for its establishment.

I read further from section 9a of the enabling act for TVA:

So far as may be consistent with such purposes, the Board is authorized to provide and operate facilities for the generation of electric energy at any such dam * * * in order to avoid the waste of water power.

There should not be the slightest doubt, from the language of the act itself, as well as from the testimony and debates at the time it was enacted, that the real purpose of TVA was to control floods and promote navigation. And, incidental to that purpose, the TVA was authorized to use such power as may be generated by the dams to control floods and promote navigation. It was logically contended that it would be pure waste to have all this water power without taking advantage of the electric power it produced.

Today we have before us a proposed appropriation for the construction of a steam plant. This is not a proposal for a new dam or a new reservoir. What is proposed here has nothing whatever to do with floods or navigation. It is simply proposed that we appropriate money for the TVA to build a steam plant to generate electricity. In other words, it is proposed that we change the whole purpose of the TVA, that we make it one vast public power project. This is a precedent, if there ever was one, for Government subsidized competition with private enterprise. If we adopt this proposal, we will be saying that a normal function of the Federal Government is to produce and sell commercially electric power.

The American people should bear in mind that they pay the costs for this operation. As has been pointed out, the net income which TVA earns amounts to around $17,000,000, and that is not even sufficient to pay for interest and depreciation. The costs of TVA are misrepresented. It is the people who pay the difference in taxes.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] who has just preceded me spoke about the profits of the private utilities. His figures may be correct. I shall not contest them. But I should like to remind the gentleman that it is out of profits that taxes are paid; and, as the gentleman seems to forget, the rates charged by utilities are subject to Government regulation.

I hold no brief for private utilities. I hold no brief for any particular business. But I believe in private enterprise, Mr. Chairman, and I intend to use all the energy at my command in defense of our system of private enterprise. It is in defense of private enterprise that I have taken the floor this afternoon to urge that the pending amendment be adopted, and that by our vote we declare that we intend to strengthen, not destroy, what has proved to be the greatest productive system in the world.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the committee yields the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, it shall be my purpose to address my remarks primarily to the approximately 100 Members who are serving their first term in this legislative body, and to whom the TVA is new legislation.

I would like to digress for a moment to say that I have watched this freshman class. I have been made very proud of them today. I am ready to say now that this freshman class is the brightest prospect this Congress has had in the 11 years I have been here.

I regret that you new Members must undergo this baptism of fire and propaganda and pressure politics of vested interests to which you are and have been subjected on this question. It is not new to Members of the Eightieth Congress, nor is it new to Members who have served here in any year since the TVA was created in 1933. This is but a continuation of the same old fight.

Why is it that you are having long-distance telephone calls from people in your districts who are wholly unfamiliar with the TVA and its contribution to national defense and the national economy? Why is it you are receiving telegrams? It is because there are powerful forces arrayed against this proposition, the power trust, with the highest paid lobbyists in the world; Purcell L. Smith, as clever a gentleman as ever tried to destroy a Government project or to slit the throat of progress of 6,000,000 people. Sixty-five thousand dollars a year and an unlimited expense account he receives to propagandize you; and I am informed that in this fight he has contacted between four and five hundred thousand people, all for one purpose, to have them bring pressure to bear upon Congress, seemingly with particular attention directed to the new Members of this Congress. Do not fall prey to such pressure politics.

What is the TVA? It is a great, integrated undertaking to develop an entire river valley. If it is new to you, make no mistake about its being important. Why do I say it is important? Let me reflect just a moment to tell you that had it not been for the two great public power projects in the United States, TVA and Bonneville, neither of the atomic bombs that ended the war with Japan would have been manufactured. Today, the Oak Ridge atomic energy plant is the largest consumer of electrical energy generated by TVA. It uses more electricity, for instance, than the great city of Memphis with its 300,000 to 400,000 people with all of its houses, shops, stores, and industries.

During the heat of the conflict, when the contest was as to who would dominate the air over Europe, over the Atlantic, and the Pacific, it was TVA power that manufactured 51 percent of the aluminum that went into America's airplanes. Make no mistake about this being an important issue.

Let me go back a little further, especially for the new Members. Before TVA, the Tennessee River was a wild, turbulent stream, racing through its rapids of 650 miles, uncontrolled; floods occurring, not yearly, but sometimes several times during a year, wreaking destruction and ruin. There was a 650-mile stream, surging with unharnessed power, meandering through a region of great natural resources of America, unnavigable because of the hazardous rapids.

So, there was the problem of navigation. There was the problem of flood control. There was the problem of power.

And, most important of all, there was a human problem. In that region, which was a part of America and still is, the people's per capita income was only 40 percent of the national average. Oh. We thrill at the rehabilitation of Europe, and when our great leader mentions in an inaugural address a program to develop the backward areas of the world we all cheer and applaud; but when something is done for an underprivileged, undeveloped area of America with a per capita income only 40 percent of the national average that is socialism. That is an invasion of the prerogatives of private industry.

With what private industry would this proposed steam plant compete? There is no private electric industry in the Tennessee Valley. By act of Congress the TVA was authorized and directed to buy out the private utility interests of that region. Thereby, Congress eliminated the question of competition, and set aside this area of the Tennessee Valley and designated a Federal agency, the TVA, to serve its utility needs, to construct those dams to serve three purposes, flood control, navigation, and the generation of electricity. This will compete with no private industry whatsoever.

Now, in doing this, what did Congress do to the people of that valley? You gave them an opportunity; yes, a wonderful opportunity—and we appreciate it—just as you have given an opportunity to Norfolk, for instance, by improving their harbor; just as you have given an opportunity to the people of the Northwest, of the East, the North, the South, and the West; and I hope much more will be done in that regard. But you also created a monopoly supplier, the TVA, where 6,000,000 people must look to the TVA for their power needs. They have no other agency to look to; no private industry to look to.

All over America there is one phrase that has a familiar sound: "shortage of power." What is being done about it? Purcell Smith testified before the subcommittee—it is in the hearings—that within the next 6 years the private utility concerns—and I applaud them for their efforts—have plans under way to augment their generating capacity by $6,000,000,000 worth of plant capacity. That is well and good, but what about the area of the Tennessee Valley, where you, the Congress of the United States, have said that we must look to this agency for our power? Demands have been growing there, too. When the TVA started, less than 1 farmer in 30 had electricity. We have made progress, yes—1 out of every 2 now has electricity. Five thousand new farmers are receiving electricity every month. Every time a 3-month period rolls around this year we are extending electricity to more farmers than had electricity in the entire Tennessee Valley before the TVA was created. Our power demand has increased by more than 1,000 percent. Now, are you going to place a lid on development? Are you going to stop the rural-electrification program in this area? Are you going to stop the lighting of veterans' homes? Are you going to say to the people, these 6,000,000 Americans, that although they must look to the TVA as the sole supplier of their electricity, we are not going to let the TVA increase their generating capacity—people of the TVA region, we are going to place a lid on your further development? Surely this Congress will not do that. I say "this Congress" because the American people rejected the bus-bar philosophy of the Eightieth Congress.

Before the TVA was created, the people in the Tennessee Valley paid 3 percent of the national income tax. Do you know what we paid last year? We paid 6 percent of the national income tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SANBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANBORN. Mr. Chairman, as in the previous Congress, I am opposed to the granting of this appropriation to establish a huge steam-power plant in the TVA. The TVA was established to develop and protect the natural resources of the region but, as has been pointed out by friends of the TVA, its authority has been used to create a monopoly of power development. Today they use that argument to justify the necessity for the Government to go completely into the power business and to develop and furnish power for the territory regardless of the process of such development.

Advocates of the valley-authority idea are urging the establishment of other authorities, the first such proposals being the Columbia Valley Authority, which would include my district—the Second District of Idaho. Step by step they plan to blanket the whole United States with such authorities. Ostensibly these governments are for the purpose of integrating the development of the country on a more rapid and more efficient basis. But this growth of power monopoly in the TVA is a pattern and a warning for the rest of the country as to what a Federal monopoly it will expand.

Many of my colleagues have remarked that this item does not affect their territory, but I insist that it is only another step until their territory will be threatened with similar treatment. It is a fallacy to say that private industry would not furnish its own power if needed, provided it was assured that the Government would stop with the development of the natural resources. We need the Government to help develop our natural resources.

Of course, President Truman has asked the power to build and operate Federal factories where private industry fails to meet an enlarged demand. If it is to be the policy of our Government to crowd in on private industry and socialize it, then this new policy of building steam power plants points the way and accelerates the job. I am so thoroughly opposed to this item in the bill before us that I cannot bring myself to vote the benefits in the bill as long as this item remains. I cannot be a party to such a policy.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 86, noes 171.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. TABER and Mr. RABAUT.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 105, noes 192.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION

CONSERVATION AND USE OF AGRICULTURAL LAND RESOURCES

For an additional amount for "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources," for formulating and carrying out programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, including cotton and wheat marketing quota programs, $9,734,500; and the limitation under this head in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1949, on the amount available during the fiscal year 1949 for salaries and other administrative expenses, is increased from "$24,500,000" to "$34,234,500"; and the limitation under said head on the amount available for transfer to the appropriation account "Administrative expenses, section 392, Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938," is increased from "$7,000,000" to "$8,284,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there are only about 4 more amendments to be considered. We think we can dispose of them with 10 minutes of debate each. I trust everyone will remain on the floor.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read and that amendments to any portion of the bill not yet read be now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to make a statement for the benefit of the House. As I stated yesterday, if the program that I have announced for the remainder of the week is completed by tomorrow night, I shall ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjorn until Monday. The next order of business will be the continuation of the export controls. There are also two resolutions with relation to investigations which I do not think will take very long.

Then there is a bill reported out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries relating to some of the activities of the Maritime Commission. My information is that there is no opposition to it. I make this statement to the membership so that my colleages will know what my intentions are if we dispose of this bill and the remainder of the legislative program.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: On page 14, line 2 to 5, strike out the following: "and the limitations under said head on force account activities and on salaries and expenses in connection with informational work are hereby repealed."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to retain in the present law the limitations on the amount of the appropriated funds that the Bonneville Power Administration can spend for force-account construction. Also the present law provides that only $50,000 can be spent for informational service.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. If your amendment is not adopted, then they can spend all of it for propaganda purposes; could they not?

Mr. JENSEN. That is right. They can also spend all the money that the Congress appropriates to construct projects by using day labor instead of following the regular governmental procedure of letting all its contracts to the lowest responsible bidder. The law at the present time limits the amount that can be spent by the Bonneville Power Administration for force account to 8 percent of the funds appropriated for each project. We placed that limitation in the law during the last session of the Eightieth Congress to safeguard the taxpayers of America against a program of hiring people by day labor to do these big construction jobs amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars each year. We had indications last year that that much of this work was to be done, more than ever before, by force account.

We felt it right and proper that a limitation of 8 percent should be placed on force account expenditures. In former years an average of only 5 percent had been spent for such construction purposes. The construction program of the Bonneville Power Administration has been going forward at a more rapid rate than ever before, during the last year and a half. Of course, it is a fact that the Eightieth Congress appropriated more money for transmission lines than had ever been appropriated before in the history of the Nation, not only for Bonneville, but also for the Bureau of Reclamation to expend. So it cannot be said that the Republican Party, which was in charge of the Eightieth Congress, was stingy with funds for needed transmission lines to take the power from federally owned and operated plants to load centers where the people, the REA, municipalities, and industries could come and get that power with their own lines, built with their own money as they should do.

The publicity limitation was placed in the bill last year to head off this great propaganda machine that has been built up in the Department of the Interior to such a degree that scores of their employees spent little time at the job they were supposed to do, but spent almost all of their time propagandizing for public power ownership, for a Columbia Basin Authority, for a Missouri Valley Authority, and for things which they were not paid to do, but which the Department permitted them to do. So we felt it right and proper and absolutely necessary to limit that kind of a program to $50,000.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] has expired.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] has offered an amendment that relates to two distinct provisions in the bill. One refers to a limitation on the informational work of the Bonneville Administration, and the other refers to the force-account provision. These limitations interfere with the proper management of the agency.

The Bonneville Power Administration has done a real job in marketing the great power resources of the Pacific Northwest. There has been virtually no criticism of the work done by this great agency. We have one of the greatest power-resource areas in the entire United States located in the Northwest. In fact, about one-third of all the potential hydroelectric power in America is in the Pacific Northwest. Obviously they cannot do the job if they are to be hamstrung by limitations.

During the last Congress a limitation of $12,500 was placed on all informational work of the Bonneville Power Administration, which includes all personnel of every kind. The Director of the Bonneville Administration would like additional funds to properly carry on the work commensurate with this vast undertaking. He has the problem of dealing with both private and public utilities. He is trying to do a good job under difficult circumstances. The private utilities today can spend thousands and thousands of dollars, not only here in Washington but throughout the country in propaganda work of all kinds. They have a paid lobbyist here in Washington, D. C., by the name of Purcell Smith, who draws a salary of $65,000 a year. Certainly it is high time that the public interest be adequately and fairly protected.

Let me turn to the other item, the force-account provision. Our committee is agreed that the work being done in the Pacific Northwest by Bonneville Power Administration and the Bureau of Reclamation should be done by private contractors. The truth is that prior to the placing of this limitation in the Bonneville appropriation approximately 5 percent of all the work was done on force account. In the last Congress an 8-percent limitation was written into the bill.

As long as the force-account limitation remains in the bill the private contractors have an unfair bargaining advantage over the Government. With the limitation removed the contractors will be forced to submit reasonable bids, lest the Government undertake to do the work by force account. Our committee feels very strongly that the limitation should be removed. We are not in disagreement regarding the right of private contractors to do the work; the question is, Is this the right approach by placing a limitation on the Administrator? The committee feels it is the wrong approach and not in the public interest.

It is unworkable if we expect a businesslike operation of the Bonneville Power Administration. I hope the committee will vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENSEN) there were—ayes 63, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask permission to extend my remarks. I take this time not to offer an amendment, but to read a telegram which has just been handed me. This is the telegram:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 16, 1949.

Hon. JOHN R. MURDOCK,

House of Representatives:

Navajo schools will close March 15 unless $550,000 for operation approved by Budget Bureau is reinstated in H. R. 2632, deficiency bill now before the House. Urge you take immediate action to avert this calamity, considering only tragic emergency in lives of thousands of Navajo children.

ASSOCIATION ON AMERICAN INDIAN AFFAIRS,
OLIVER LAFARGE, President.

Mr. Chairman, this telegram comes too late, under the parliamentary situation, to remedy the defect, if such it be, in the finishing of the present bill. But I do want to comment on the educational situation of these Indians in general for the benefit of the Committee.

The whole public has been aroused with regard to the tragic conditions of the Navajo Indians. Congress appropriated generously a year ago for the relief of the Navajo and Hopi Indians, for which I am grateful in their behalf. But in the last Congress when we were considering authorization and appropriations for the Navajo and Hopi Indians I pointed out that what was even more important was a long-range development program for these sixty-five or seventy thousand Indians. Repeatedly I have called attention to the situation on the Navajo Reservation. Probably 20 times during the 12 years that I have been here, on the floor of this House or in committee meetings, I have called attention to a bad situation which needs remedying.

The Navajo Reservation is as large as the entire State of West Virginia, mostly situated on a high plateau. It has very few roads that are passable 6 months of the year. With 22,000 children of school age, not more than 6,000 of whom have ever been to school, their educational needs are among their greatest needs. Their leaders have repeatedly called for schools and hospitals over and above other petitions on vital matters.

I fear too many serious-minded citizens do not understand the immensity of this educational problem. I hear gentlemen speaking of "turning the Indians loose" and assuming that their children can go to school in the States where they live and that their education will be amply provided. Now, these are full-blood Indians, mostly classified as wild Indians. They have long been neglected by the Government and the appropriations made have been woefully inadequate. Without assessing blame on whoever is to be blamed, I cite a fact. This Navajo case is the most serious problem in connection with the whole American Indian question. The present item, important as it is, is a minor point, but I felt I would be derelict in my duty if I did not call it to your atention.

Mr. Chairman, it is too late in the reading of the bill to make further comment. I do not know the justification the service offered for the full budget amount, but I do know that there is a dire and lasting emergency among those Indian people and I have taken this moment to call it to the attention of the Committee.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, the Bureau of Indian Affairs has asked for an additional amount of $385,000 for welfare of Indians for the remaining months of the current fiscal year. I am pleased to note that the committee has provided the full amount in this deficiency bill.

I wish to point out that this deficiency request was made several weeks ago before the Bureau of Indian Affairs or anyone else was aware of the emergency situation which has been created by the unusually severe January weather in the West. The suffering of Indians on many reservations has been acute as the result of the recent blizzards, and the need for additional welfare funds is much greater now than it was at the time this supplemental request was made.

I am unofficially informed that the welfare account of the Indian Bureau contained $106 as of last Friday. The small reserve which the Bureau had as of January 1 has been exhausted by the allocations required for blizzard areas. Reservations in North and South Dakota have been particularly hard hit. The Bureau has made available a total of $29,800 for the Crow Creek, Rosebud, Pine Ridge, Sisseton, Turtle Mountain, Standing Rock reservations in these States. In addition, the State of North Dakota has made available $12,000 for the relief of the Indians at Turtle Mountain and local citizens and civic groups in the Dakotas and Montana have contributed to the assistance of these Indians.

In addition to these amounts, I am advised that the sum of $50,000 from the President's emergency funds was allocated to Indian relief and has been expended.

Before the January storms began, the Indian Bureau had found that heavy snows in some areas and drought conditions in others had reduced employment opportunities for Indians. In addition, assistance payments have risen due to increased living costs. As a result, the rate of expenditures for welfare of Indians has been considerably higher this year than formerly. The months from January to June usually impose the heaviest burden on Indian relief and assistance funds. It is estimated that 16,000 persons will require assistance during the remainder of this fiscal year. With these facts in mind, it is obvious that the full amount of the appropriation requested by the Indian Bureau is required to fulfill our obligations to the Indians.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Welfare of Indians: "For an additional amount for welfare of Indians, $385,000: Provided, That after the approval of this act no payment shall be made from this appropriation to Indians who are eligible for benefit payments under the Social Security Act."

The purpose of this estimate is to provide additional funds for assistance to needy Indans except those who are members of the Navajo and Hopi tribes and those who are eligible for benefit payments under the Social Security Act. Heavy snows and low temperatures in many areas and drought in other areas have resulted in a reduction in employment opportunities for many able-bodied Indians and in hardship to unemployables. In addition, there has been an upward adjustment of assistance payments to meet increased living costs.

For the current fiscal year, Congress appropriated $472,710 for "Welfare of Indians" of which amount $229,756 was earmarked for direct assistance. Our estimate was in the amount of $750,000 with an allowance of $492,367 for direct assistance. The reduction in the appropriation resulted in a cut of $262,611 for direct assistance.

Through November 30, 1948, 10,954 persons have been given assistance at an average monthly rate of $13.81 per person. This is an increase of 4,305 persons in the same period of the last fiscal year, and an increase in the average grant per person of $2.95. It must be recognized that the months of January to June constitute the period of greatest need until work becomes available. During those months in 1948, assistance was given to 33,338 persons. Our superintendents estimate that during the six remaining months of this fiscal year 16,000 persons will require assistance. It should be noted that these estimates were prepared prior to the recent blizzards in the West, and no doubt the number of Indians asking for assistance has increased very materially.

The sum of $297,017 of the appropriation of $472,710 has been expended up to December 31, 1948, thus leaving $175,693 available for all purposes for the remainder of the year. Of the $175,693 remaining, approximately $100,000 will be required to meet certain fixed charges, including payment of boarding home care, care of juvenile delinquents, burials, contracts, and salary and expenses of personnel. This leaves about $75,000 for giving relief or direct assistance which is entirely inadequate to meet the needs of an estimated 16,000 persons for the remaining 6 months of the year. Of the amount expended to December 31, 1948, namely, $297,017, $208,763 was used for giving relief to Indians, and $88,254 for all other purposes.

With few exceptions, the needy Indian is solely dependent on the Federal Government for direct assistance. Funds appropriated by Congress or tribal funds either authorized by Congress or under the immediate control of the tribe are used to give assistance to those physically handicapped, dependent or deserted families, those not yet eligible for old-age assistance, those unemployed for various reasons, and others who must be helped in time of need.

On many jurisdictions the resources are inadequate to support the population. Despite our efforts to induce employable Indians to leave the reservation for outside work, it is and has not been possible to decrease the relief load. Even though work is available, there are times and circumstances when the Indian cannot leave the reservation to accept it because of lack of housing, lack of skills to perform the type of work required, or because the earnings are not sufficient to support the individual or members of his family. Again, most of the work available to the Indians is seasonal, such as harvesting of crops, picking of fruit, road work, etc. Such opportunities usually provide employment for 2 or 4 months, and the earnings and savings are not sufficient to meet the needs of the family for the remainder of the year, especially when the Indian lives in that portion of the country, as many do, where the winters are long and cold, and where work is not available again until late spring. When the average period of employment is less than 18 weeks during the year and the average weekly earnings are about $37, or a total of $666 for the year, many families cannot support themselves on a 12-month basis, and assistance from the Government during the long, cold winter is necessary.

State welfare departments recognize the fact that the cost of living has gone up, and State budgets, which we attempt to follow within the funds available, have been increased upward. Increase in grants in line with State procedures and standards reduces the available funds for giving relief, especially when the amount requested was reduced and the amount initially appropriated is inadequate. A month-by-month comparison of the case load of the larger agencies sharing in this appropriation shows a substantial increase in the number of relief clients, which fact is also responsible for a heavier demand on available funds.

Reports from the field, including newspaper reports, indicate that the Indians in many areas are confronted with severe winter weather, heavy snows, and low temperatures, that work has terminated, and that many Indians had only short periods of employment, and in some areas, due to mechanization of the farm, hand labor has been sharply curtailed. Drought in other areas has seriously affected employment. Consequently demands for assistance have increased and are increasing. Information presented by our superintendents, dependent upon this appropriation, show that during the months from February to June 1949, inclusive, in excess of 13,500 Indians will need to be assisted.

Not only does the Indian Service give direct assistance to the needy but it is called upon to meet the cost of placing Indian children in boarding homes and in institutions, burial of indigents, and to give other types of service and assistance.

Of the amount requested, $10,000 is to cover salary increases due to Public Law 900.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: Page 15, lines 3 to 11, strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, this is an almost identical amendment to the one we just voted on and I shall not make any further comment upon it after the defeat of the last amendment for I know this amendment will meet the same fate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: On page 16, line 8, beginning with the word "Provided", strike out the provision in lines 8 to 16, inclusive.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have just offered is to keep in the law which was passed last year certain limitations, the first being a limitation of $7,800,000 which we permitted the Denver office of the Bureau of Reclamation to spend for engineering services. That amount provided for over 1,800 engineers. Because of this limitation it was necessary for them to take a few engineers off the pay roll in the Denver office. Of course, as usual they were shifted to some other department of the Department of the Interior. A few of them got good jobs with private industry I am pleased to report.

The next part of the amendment is to strike out a limitation of $48,000,000 which we placed in the law last year, which was the amount that could be spent for administrative personnel hire for the whole Department of the Interior. The year before they had spent $45,000,000-plus for personal service and administrative expenditures. But, we expanded the construction program last year. We thought we were liberal and we limited the Department to $48,000,000. Now they say they must have a lot more, and want no limitation placed on them whatever. If we want to let them run wild and get nothing done, why this is a good way to do it; just turn them loose to spend and waste the taxpayers' dollars.

The next part of the amendment is a limitation which was placed in the law last year of 3,500 employees that could draw salaries above CAF–9 and P–3, salaries amounting to $4,100 or more. We limited them to 3,500 employees who could draw more than that. They had had something like 3,300. So, we thought we were liberal there. Now they say these limitations have almost brought destruction to the Bureau of Reclamation.

I hope the Members who want to get jobs done in the West, like all the rest of us do, who want the departments of Government to carry on in a sound businesslike manner and earn their money and not squander the taxpayers' money, will support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENSEN) there were—ayes 62, noes 117.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: On page 16, line 17, strike out the entire paragraph to and including page 17, line 4.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and half by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, of course, I will be entirely frank with my friends on the Democratic side and say to them that I expect this amendment will be greeted with a roar of "noes." Yet I desire to call to their attention some facts. I desire to call to their serious attention these facts, and I do it in no partisan spirit whatsoever. I think it will be conceded by a fairly good number of my Democratic friends that I have not been overpartisan in my behavior in this House of Representatives during the last 18 years. The language which I seek to strike out is that found on page 16, and continuing on page 17, which, in effect, states that the Commissioner of Reclamation and the Assistant Commissioner and the regional director shall, each of them, have had 5 years' engineering and administrative experience. That provision was put in the law last year on motion made by Congressman ELLIOTT, a Democrat, from California. Upon yesterday in a talk extending about 22 minutes I attempted to give the background of that legislation. In doing so I made a series of statements with respect to the behavior of the Commissioner of Reclamation, Mr. Straus, and a certain regional director, Mr. Boke. Every one of those statements was founded upon incontrovertible evidence—every one of them. Some of the evidence came from the official correspondence of the Reclamation office; some of it came from the utterances made publicly by officials of the Reclamation Service, and some of it came from the sworn testimony delivered on the witness stand before our investigating committee by those officials themselves. What did the evidence show? Briefly, first, that the Reclamation Service in handling the Central Valley project undertaking deliberately ignored the intent of the Congress. The regional director of that project admitted that the course they pursued did not follow the intent of the Congress.

Secondly, they deliberately deceived the Congress with respect to the financial condition of the Central Valley project, giving the Congress no warning whatsoever, keeping it a secret that they intended to spend the entire year's fund in 6 months, which they did. And, finally, at a meeting of the members of this Reclamation Service at Salt Lake City, the Chief Engineer of the whole Service admitted that in evading the intent of Congress with respect to the discharge of certain employees, they had perjured themselves.

This is, in short, a list of their offenses. I confess that as a member of that committee I was shocked that men in the employ of the Government in positions of high responsibility should behave in such fashion. That is the way they behaved.

As I said a moment ago, the evidence is documentary and incontrovertible.

Now, I am not appealing to this committee on partisan lines. I am appealing to the members of this committee to see to it that a rebuke is administered for that kind of conduct. This provision was put into the law last year at the instance of a Democratic Member and it will have no deleterious effect upon the administration of the Reclamation Service.

I might remind you that in the long, long career of the Reclamation Service, which has been highly creditable until 2 years ago when these people came in, all but one of the Commissioners of Reclamation has been an engineer, and every single regional director, up to this particular point, has been an engineer.

I suggest to my friends on the Democratic side of the aisle that they vote to keep this Government clean.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this language was put into the bill last year at the behest of the chairman of the subcommittee investigating expenditures and propaganda in the Government. The chairman of that subcommittee, Mr. Harness, is not working with us any more. He was defeated last year. The other, a Democratic member at that time, chose not to run.

They tell you in this language that the Commissioner of Reclamation must be an engineer. Let us look into this.

In the year 1923, when the private utilities, if you will, tried to make the greatest steal that was ever attempted in this country, the project then known as Muscle Shoals, Wilson Dam—the Nation was shocked. Why? Because the engineer who at that time was Commissioner of Reclamation, backed up the committee and the people and told the people the truth. The head of the Reclamation Service at that particular time was an engineer, and was recognized as one of the three greatest engineers in America.

That is what you had in 1923. What did they do in this House at that time? They passed a law then discharging that man because he was not an administrator. He was an engineer. Now, what did you do last year? Because the Commissioner of Reclamation defended the public and the American people, the Eightieth Congress passed a law discharging him because he was not an engineer.

Now, what is the truth? You cut the bill 47 percent in the first session of the Eightieth Congress. Of course the funds lasted only 6 months. Anyone knows that and can understand why. The contractors were going to finish it in 6 months. It would not run over a year. I told you that in the committee. I spoke in this House and I said it will come back to haunt you if you cut it 47 percent. They cut it, and they slowed up the work and what I said came true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRWAN. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman recollect that the appropriation made for the Central Valley Authority was exactly the same figure as that requested by the President of the United States?

Mr. KIRWAN. Perhaps it was, but I am telling you what went on on this floor. When you cut that bill 47 percent, certainly they ran out of work. Construction had to stop. Now you have got an attorney pressing a claim here against the Government of the United States for $850,000 for stopping that contractor and running out of work, and not living up to the contract. That is what went on in America year before last.

Now, let us look at the Congress. Long before they ever had a President or saw a bureaucrat, the Congress was here; the Continental Congress.

Let us see if they practice what they preach. In the year 1947 there came to this House a man wearing the Congressional Medal of Honor—and others have down through the 165 years or so of this Congress—a graduate of Annapolis, one of the greatest heroes we ever had. Everyone thought he would be placed on the Committee on Naval Affairs; but, no, he went on the Committee on Agriculture. So it has been many times that people were put on committees without reference to their qualification to serve on committees.

But remember, back in 1923 the effort was made to discharge the commissioner who was an engineer because he was not an administrator.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRWAN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. And also involved last year was the attempt of certain big interests to get rid of these two men because they were fighting for the principles established by Congress.

Mr. KIRWAN. The gentleman is correct.

Yesterday the gentleman from New York complained saying they petitioned the Congress and the press petitioned the Congress for those men. Who would they petition but the Congress? That is provided for in the Constitution. I certainly would have objected had they petitioned the British Parliament.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRWAN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I should like to tell the House that the present Commissioner of Reclamation, Mike Straus, was inducted into the Blackfeet Tribe in Montana last July 10 and was given the title "Engineer of the Wilderness." I submit that the awarding of this degree qualifies him for the position he now holds.

Mr. KIRWAN. Yes; and he has made a good engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were—ayes 87, noes 136.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of Idaho: Page 17, line 9, after the word "Idaho", strike out "$300,000" and insert "$350,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of offering this amendment increasing the amount from $300,000 to $350,000 is, in the first place, to insert the amount that was recommended in the budget, and it also carries out a program that has been worked up by the water users of the Lewiston Orchards irrigation district and the Department of the Interior. If we do not add this amount now, it will simply increase the cost and delay the construction of this project.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read to the Members a statement from the manager of the Lewiston Orchards irrigation district, as follows:

It is going to be a difficult operation to install our new pipe because of the interruption of service to 1,100 houses and small farms. Then we have the problem of trying to maintain the old rotting wooden pipe with heavy equipment working on or near it. Now that we have once started to tear things up, it would be a tragedy to have an interruption in the construction program. But the people here have experienced consistent aid from you, and they are confident that the appropriation will be forthcoming.

It was understood and agreed that the budget amount would be appropriated.

Mr. Chairman, it would be poor economy to cut off $50,000 just as a matter of economy, because now that the work has started, it should be carried to completion.

I wish to read at this time a telegram received from the secretary of the Lewiston Orchards Active Business Men's Association, as follows:

We wish to ask your assistance for reinstating the $50,000 cut from the Lewiston Orchards supplementary appropriations. We feel this cut would delay construction program.

Mr. Chairman, I have another telegram from the manager of the Lewiston Orchards irrigation district, as follows:

Was notified supplemental appropriations for Lewiston Orchards was cut $50,000. This will again delay our project. Please help us get this restored.

Mr. Chairman, to give you a reason for the urgency of asking for this appropriation or that the additional amount be included, I read from a statement of the Lewiston Orchards project, as follows:

When the fiscal year 1949 appropriation requests were made, final designs had not been completed, and therefore an accurate estimate was impossible. All materials, such as steel and asbestos cement, pipe, valves, and other miscellaneous pipe fittings, have considerably increased in cost from a year ago. Construction bids received have been considerably higher than estimated.

All piping and valves have been ordered, and contracts for both the main pipe line and the distribution system have been awarded. In order to continue these contracts to completion without interruption, supplemental funds in fiscal year 1949 are required. Without additional funds, construction of the badly needed water-treatment plant must be postponed until fiscal year 1950.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the Members of the House to accept my amendment and vote back this small amount in order to complete the program. It is poor economy to cut the amount when it was in the program originally. This money is reimbursable and is to be repaid by these people pursuant to contract entered into with the Bureau of Reclamation. I again ask the Members of the House to support my amendment to add this additional amount, bringing it back to the original sum in the budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have up for consideration today the first deficiency appropriation bill for 1949. This bill contains items for construction, operation, and maintenance for the Bonneville power transmission system in the sum of $7,500,000. Included in these items are sums for the main grid system to carry Grand Coulee power into the coastal load centers of Washington and Oregon, particularly the Puget Sound area and the Portland area, and items for the maintenance of work schedules on facilities for service within the Puget Sound area. These projects have heretofore been authorized and in 1948 appropriations were made for them. However, the actual cost of the construction of the transmission lines and facilities is approximately 20 percent greater than was estimated at the time the appropriations were made. It is apparent, therefore, that it will be absolutely impossible to complete these lines which are under construction, on schedule, with the money which was appropriated last year. If they are to be completed on time additional funds must be appropriated by this bill.

May I say to my colleagues that the completion of these and other key supply lines for the Puget Sound area is a matter of vital concern to the people of my area. During recent months there has been a definite shortage of power in the Pacific Northwest. There has been a considerable voluntary curtailment of use of power by the people. Notwithstanding this fact the demands for power are such that if they are not soon met the entire economy of the area will be seriously affected. Not only is the present situation serious but there is also urgent need for increased power in the months and years ahead. The Bonneville Power Administration is hard-put to keep up with its proposed schedules. If this deficiency appropriation is not granted the whole program will be handicapped and bogged down. May I say parenthetically that if the economy of the Pacific Northwest is affected so will that of the entire country. I trust that the Members will not view this matter as a particularly local issue. This is a Federal project which we in Congress have authorized and is one which we should push to completion according to schedule and as rapidly as possible. I trust that you will vote favorably upon this appropriation.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, now that the Indians have made Mike Straus Engineer of the Wilderness, I want to revert back to the subject of Indians. I am going to make it brief.

Mr. Chairman, in the enactment of this deficiency bill, this Congress is being asked, without being fully advised as to the consequences, to make a most important policy decision affecting three States, the States of New Mexico and Arizona on the one hand, and the "Navajo-Hopi Reservation state," which comprises some 25,000 square miles equal in area to the States of Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, Delaware, and Rhode Island, all put together, on the other.

Since the enactment of this bill as now written will have serious repercussions in our dealings with the Indians, I hope the House will bear with me if I discuss the situation briefly.

At the outset, I must say that at every turn it has been the Indian Office in charge of these affairs which is responsible for these errors, and that the Congress cannot be blamed except perhaps for our failure to demand and obtain full and complete information. Even in that respect the Congress has done all it can in attempting to so demand information from the Indian Office, as I will point out in the course of my discussion. In the report of the committee on this very bill, the committee has reprimanded the Indian Office in the following strong terms which I quote:

> The committee will not here recount its comments on the maladministration in the Bureau of Indian Affairs brought to light in its report on the Department of the Interior appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1949. However, it does wish to serve notice that such testimony and lack of knowledge on the part of officials representing this service will not be tolerated in the future. Present funds available for the education program are adequate to meet requirements until at least the 1st of April and the committee will consider the matter further only when it is able to secure firm data on which to base a judgment.
> The committee is fully aware of the responsibilities of the Government to the Indians resident on reservations and is more than anxious to provide every dollar needed to discharge fully not only the recognized legal obligations, but also those obligations which humanitarian instincts dictate. It does not appear, however, that more than a passive appreciation of these problems is manifest by those whose responsibility it is to administer the laws passed by the Congress.

As early as June 1946 I appeared before the Committee on Appropriations to point out the intolerable and shameful situation existing in the Navajo-Hopi Reservation. I explained to the committee that though we understood the need for immediate action, my office had not the facilities to present facts and figures in detail, but that I was sure the Indian Office had done so. I quote a part of the record to show that the Indian Office seemed to be wholly unaware of the necessity for presenting the facts to the committee:

> Mr. FERNANDEZ * * * I appear before this committee today not asking anything for the voters of my State. I appear for the voteless and voiceless Indians of the Navajo country and their children. The situation with respect to the education of the children of the Navajo Indians is deplorable. The people of the State, all over the State, not only around the Navajo country but all over the State, are alarmed. I think it has reached, in my opinion, the proportions of a public scandal.
> I appear here more with a plea than as a witness. I assume that the facts have been carefully set out before the committee by the Office of Indian Affairs.
> Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Let me say to you right here that the committee has not been fully advised.

Shortly after the clamor for investigations grew so loud that magazines and newspapers sent correspondents to that area, and as a result of the findings made by those writers and by some subcommittees of the House and Senate half a million dollars was appropriated in a supplemental bill in the spring of 1948 to handle the situation until the 1st of July of that year. Added to that appropriation, the Red Cross made available an additional $100,000. Civic and charitable organizations and individual citizens undertook to send charity bundles to the reservation. All of these moneys and all of this help was used within that fiscal year, and it was not enough. Yet, in the face of that experience, when the Indian Office appeared before the committee asking for appropriations for the fiscal year 1949 they requested only $120,000.

When the bill came to this body I called the attention of the Congress to the situation, and I said:

> I am duty bound to call attention of the House to the fact that although the committee approved every cent that was asked for the Navajo Indians for welfare work, $120,000, that, in my opinion, is not enough. The Department asked for only $120,000 and I am not blaming the committee for not allowing more; but the fact is that in this Congress year after year the Indian Office has not asked for near enough for that purpose. Consequently, last year, as you will recall, we had to appropriate supplemental funds to the tune of $500,000. That is going to happen again. I hope that by the time the bill gets to conference the committee will have the true facts presented independently of the Indian Office if necessary and that proper provision is timely made. The Indian Office in Washington may not know that they are insufficient—apparently they do not; but the superintendent of the reservation and all those who work in the reservation or have studied conditions out there know that $120,000 is not going to take care of the situation on the Navajo Indian Reservation. It seems that year after year a ceiling is placed on the total they can request, and the Washington Indian Office takes it out on the item of welfare and relief for Indians. It is time that somebody in that Office had the courage to tell Congress what the superintendent out there tells us but is not allowed to tell Congress. I am tired of this, and have come to the conclusion that the reservation should be placed out of the hands of the Indian Office.

That bill went to the Senate and the Senate in its wisdom increased the appropriation for welfare by $750,000, making a total of $870,000, as I understand the record. In conference, the sum of $500,000 was agreed upon for welfare of the Navajo-Hopi Indians and the conference committee said in its report to the Indian Office:

> Conferees request that the Indian Bureau submit a report to the Congress early in the next regular session on conditions as to the general welfare of the Navajo and Hopi Indians.

It appears now that this demand on the part of the House through its conferees has been wantonly ignored. So far as I can find, no such report has been made. On the contrary, they came to the subcommittee handling this deficiency bill and they came wholly unprepared to answer the simplest questions. They requested funds for only three main items: First, $300,000 for increases in salaries under Public Law 900, which is self-explanatory; second, $550,000 to prevent closing of the schools on the Navajo-Hopi Reservation; and, third, $385,000 for the welfare of Indians.

With respect to the item for schools they were so utterly confused and unprepared to answer that the committee very properly, in my opinion, refused to make a guess as to what they should be allowed for that in this deficiency bill. As to the item for welfare of Indians, they were as utterly confused and even more so. A reading of the hearings will convince anyone that the committee was completely disgusted with their presentation. They were requested to come back the next day and did no better. The subcommittee, nevertheless, in its anxiety to prevent human suffering, chose to err on the side of humanity and granted the full $385,000.

At the hearing of the main committee I undertook to congratulate the committee on its wisdom and generosity, notwithstanding the poor showing, in allowing this amount for welfare relief of Indians, and then for the first time, to my dismay and consternation, I found that not one dime of that money goes to either the Hopi or the Navajo Indians; that not one dime had been asked for that purpose and that only $60,000 included in the item designated as "Agency services" had been requested. Turning to the testimony, I find, on page 178, the statement with respect to that request, which is as follows:

Mr. PROVINSE. This is an emergency item which was brought about by the fact that many of the families that we had succeeded in obtaining employment for off of the reservation were cut off of their jobs because of the snow in southern California and southern Arizona. * * *

* * * So this item was put in to cover the needs of those families who are trickling back to the reservation who are employable but who have no resources.

Both the States of New Mexico and Arizona directly and through the press in the months of December and January have been told that all welfare funds appropriated for the Navajo-Hopi Reservation have been exhausted and that they must take care of the Indians under social security. The States of New Mexico and Arizona in an attempt to begin processing cases as best they can, though without funds with which to pay them, agreed early last year to process such applications as were referred to them and to certify them for payments by the Indian Office out of the half-million dollars made available by Congress, and this has been done to date. New Mexico and Arizona, since that agreement was reached, nearly a year ago, have certified 44 cases involving a little over a hundred individuals, on which about $3,800 has been paid. Two or three times that many have been referred back to the Indian Office for further investigation, and, mind you, these were to be paid not by the State but from the half-million dollars made available for that purpose by this Congress. Who has taken care of the rest of the thousands of other indigents, and where has the balance of the half-million dollars gone? If those funds are now exhausted, who is going to process and pay them?

Under date of February 4, 1949, the Secretary of the Interior addressed a letter to me, in which he says:

This is to inform you that due to the exhaustion of available funds, I have been forced to notify our superintendents in New Mexico that no further allotments will be made them to make cash grants to those Indians whose applications for categorical assistance have been approved by the county welfare boards.

If those funds are exhausted, it was the duty of the Indian Office to so tell this Congress. Not one word was said about it to the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee.

I have now come to the point which makes this bill so important and so significant insofar as it affects the obligation of the Federal Government toward these unfortunate people.

To the two items of appropriations for the Indian Office on page 14 of the bill there are attached two innocent-looking provisos which appear for the first time in any appropriation bill. They were placed there in conformity with the language requested of the Bureau and followed by that Bureau.

The first item of $360,000 for agency services for the Navajo-Hopi Indians consists of $300,000 for increase of salaries under Public Law 900 and $60,000 for the relief of Navajo Indians. The testimony at the hearings makes it crystal clear that this amount of $60,000 is for able-bodied unemployed Indians who have been discharged from employment in California and elsewhere and are being repatriated, so to speak, to the reservation. The second item of $385,000 is for the welfare of Indians aside from the Navajo and Hopis, but including 20 other reservations in New Mexico comprising 15,000 Indians, and 6 in Arizona, comprising 20,000 Indians. Under the proviso, none of these monies can be made available to the blind, the aged, and dependent children.

I am not going to move to strike out these provisos because as I have repeatedly stated, so far as my State is concerned, it can in one way or another, take care of the 20 reservations other than the Navajos in the State of New Mexico, insofar as social-security payments for the aged, the blind, and the dependent children are concerned.

But I do want to call the attention of this Congress to the fact that these provisos were placed in the bill in a determined and direct attempt to force New Mexico and Arizona to take over the impossible burden of processing and footing all the needs of all the blind, the aged, and the dependent children in the Navajo reservation. Following that extreme and drastic policy, they have not requested any appropriations for the balance of this year to take care of those unfortunate people.

With all the power of the Federal Security Administrator to investigate and to enforce compliance by the States of New Mexico and Arizona, the officials in the executive department concerned have chosen rather this cruel and drastic course. Everyone who has looked into the situation has had to admit that it is a physical impossibility for either of the two States to carry on the processing and paying of social security to these unfortunate people until, by a gradual process which will take months and months and perhaps years, the two States can work out a system for the processing of those cases under the standards set for the balance of the State.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Does the gentleman mean that there is no money in this bill whatever for the aid of Navajo and Hopi Indians?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Absolutely not one dime for the aid of the blind, the aged, and the dependent children. The $60,000 is only for those who were employed in California and were discharged, as the record fully shows, and this proviso makes it impossible to use any of that money for the Navajo blind, the aged, and dependent children; the proviso was placed there specifically for that purpose.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman also knows that this request for funds for the Indians did not come before the regular subcommittee which deals with Indian problems, the Interior Department.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. It did not.

Mr. JENSEN. Consequently, the gentlemen who did handle it did not have all the facts which they should have had in order to appropriate and act properly on this matter.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. That is absolutely correct. This item came before the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee. I am not blaming the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee or the Committee on Appropriations. I am blaming the people who ought to be blamed, and that is the Indian Office that has again, as in the past it has again and again and again, failed to tell this Congress the true story about the Navajo Reservation.

Mr. JENSEN. Is not the gentleman going to offer an amendment to include the Hopis and the Navajos in this overall appropriation that we are making here today for Indians?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I would not offer an amendment to that effect, because that would be unfair to the other Indians outside of the Navajo Reservation. This money has been appropriated for the other Indians outside the Navajo Reservation, and the Navajo Reservation has been cut off at the pockets in order to punish Arizona and New Mexico. The Indian Office and the Bureau of the Budget, and all those responsible for this shortsighted and cruel policy, are putting this Congress in a most untenable position, one which will go down in history as unworthy of this great House.

The legislature in the State of New Mexico is now in session, but even if it found the money to increase those funds for that purpose, those funds would not be available before the end of this fiscal year. As shown by the number of cases so far certified in the attempt of the two States to take over this burden, the peremptory saddling of this burden on these two States, so far as the Navajo-Hopi Reservation is concerned, will be a tragedy of the first magnitude for the unfortunate Navajo and Hopi Indians.

New Mexico is and has been at all times able, willing, and ready to undertake that burden as to the 20 other pueblos and reservations within its borders, comprising some 15,000 Indians. I am certain that Arizona is able to undertake that burden insofar as it affects the six reservations, other than the Hopi-Navajo people, constituting approximately 20,000 Indians. It will be an exceedingly heavy burden on these two sparsely settled States with small resources, but it would not be a tragedy to the Indians as in the case of the Navajos.

Insofar as the Navajo-Hopi Reservation is concerned, however, the task is, I repeat, physically impossible. The result will be that only a few of these will be paid, and those cases will probably be situated on the outer edges of the reservation, whereas the Indians who need it most within the interior of the reservation will go uncared for and unnoticed. There are no towns or villages in the 25,000 square miles of reservation, which, as I have said before, is equivalent to the area of Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, Delaware, and Rhode Island put together. The State has no place for a staff to live in and contact the needy cases within the interior of the reservation, such as the Indian Office necessarily has; the reservation consists of 25,000 square miles of wilderness populated by Indians living in hogans and moving about with their hogans constantly. The Navajo Reservation in point of Indian population, with its 60,000 Indians, is 6 times larger than the largest reservation anywhere in the country. The next largest is the Consolidated Chippewa in Minnesota with 10,570, according to the report of the Department for 1945, page 80. The next in order are in South Dakota, Pine Ridge with 9,029, and Rosebud with 8,532; and the next in population is the Kiowa in Oklahoma with 7,780.

The States of New Mexico and Arizona have absolutely no jurisdiction over the Indian population within the reservation. Marriages and divorces are not subject to the State law. The Indian Office records are inadequate even to check up on the legitimate children, much less on the rampant illegitimacy throughout the reservation. This Government has completely failed these Indians in the most rudimentary of their social needs, and now they propose we slough off the whole mess to the States of New Mexico and Arizona.

This blow is aimed at those States, but it will fall on the Indians. This tragedy may teach New Mexico and Arizona a lesson—and I think that is the purpose—but it will cost the Federal Government far more money than the present arrangement, unsatisfactory as it is, and it will not do the job. The Indian Service of necessity has to have personnel over the reservation in processing the able-bodied and other noneligible indigents, and in its Indian placement services, its health service, its soil-conservation service, and so forth, and, of necessity, has contact, unsatisfactory as that is, with the Indians in the interior of the reservation. It would be far better if the relief to the blind, the aged, and dependent children were administered by them as at present.

This bill is the first nail in the coffin of many hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of destitute, blind, aged, and needy children. It is another big nail in the skeleton closet of the shameful history of neglect and mistreatment of the Navajo Indians which they have consistently endured, notwithstanding the promises made to them when they were released from their imprisonment camp at Fort Sumner.

After the Government has completely failed in rehabilitating the Indians, completely failed in the passage of the long-term program recommended by both the Senate and House committees last year, we are now asked to take the first step in salving our conscience by turning these unfortunate humans over to inadequately equipped States for care.

I want to say at this point that I again lay the blame for the failure of the bill last year to the officials in the Indian Office. This bill, after it had been reported by both the House and Senate and actually passed by the Senate, was killed because of an adverse report from the Indian Office. When that adverse report came before the committee I took the floor and described the situation in language as strong and as clear as my humble efforts could produce. That statement, made on June 8, 1948, beginning at page 7477 of the RECORD for the second session of the Eightieth Congress, is as follows:

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I heartily commend the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH], chairman of the Public Lands Committee, and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART], chairman of the Indian Affairs Subcommittee as well as the Republican steering committee, for their decision Friday to push enactment of the Navajo Indian legislation before Congress adjourns. Following their action Friday, it was my understanding that the Navajo bill would be called up today under unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules. Though the primary election is in progress in New Mexico today, I flew back to Washington yesterday, only to find this morning that the Indian Office has filed an adverse report to the D'Ewart bill.

I have heretofore restrained myself because of my affection for Secretary Krug and Under Secretary Warne, who are sincere men, but this action on the part of the Indian Office shocks me beyond further restraint. I must speak out. Is it possible that the Indian Office is more interested in putting this Congress on the spot so that it can be blamed for failure to act? I do not believe in playing politics at the expense of hungry and destitute people.

The bill reported out by the committee is right in line with Secretary Krug's recommendations. It authorizes the full $25,000,000 requested for the construction of schools, school dormitories and other educational facilities. It authorizes $100,000 per year to promote employment of Navajo Indians off the reservation; it authorizes $250,000 per year for the relief of disabled and dependent Navajo Indians; it authorizes $228,000 for health improvement, and $1,000,000 per year for the construction of roads. All of this is right in line with the recommendations of Secretary Krug.

True, this does not at one stroke authorize the entire 10-year $90,000,000 program, and because it does not do so the Indian Office objects to the enactment of this bill. This arbitrary and dilatory attitude is unreasonable and likely to result in no action at all.

Heretofore in the summer of 1946, nearly $1,000,000 was appropriated for the building of two Navajo schools. To this date, not a handful of dirt has been turned and not a nail has been driven in the construction of those two schools. Chicago architects were hired, as if there were none competent in New Mexico and Arizona, and the whole matter is still tangled up by the red tape and dilatory attitude of the Washington Indian Office. Under the circumstances, objection to the House bill on the grounds that it does not authorize the entire program, including airports and modern coal bins and all, comes with poor grace.

The D'Ewart bill should be taken up as promptly as possible. I hope this is done before this week ends, and that it is passed and enacted into law before the adjournment of Congress. I go further and say that either Acting Commissioner Zimmerman and Educational Director Beatty should be discharged for their delay in carrying out the mandate of Congress as expressed in the appropriation bill in 1946, or else the Navajo Reservation should be taken from under their jurisdiction and their inaction. The Congress is not in position to discharge the men responsible for the neglect of this tribe, but it can and should emancipate the Navajo from the lethargy of this Bureau. Congress can pass legislation whereby a man of vigor and action can be selected to administer the long-delayed rehabilitation and education of these people. A bill to do that very thing is now pending in the Senate and I sincerely hope that Mr. D'EWART's bill and the Senate bill are combined and are enacted into law before we adjourn.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this observation. The gentleman from New Mexico had some very complimentary things to say about the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and also about the chairman of the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. And I say they deserve it, too.

Mr. MURDOCK. They do deserve it, and for that reason I wanted to second what the gentleman said in that respect. I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New Mexico himself has been untiring in his efforts to get the kind of legislation for which he now pleads. That was shown quite eloquently last November when we had temporary legislation before us, and at that time the gentleman from New Mexico time after time stressed the need of a permanent piece of legislation that would rehabilitate this great Navajo Indian Tribe. I am in accord with the gentleman in wanting a proper long-range plan.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I thank the gentleman. I have also been very patient. I have not spoken out, although I did tell the committee what I knew about the details regarding the building of those two schoolhouses. Now they come in here with this report. If they had criticized our committee for not giving them the full amount requested, I would not have anything to say, but when they come in and say, "Do not enact this bill," when they know full well or ought to know full well that if we are not going to enact this bill we will not at this late date get anything, that is the last stroke.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT. I want to commend the gentleman for his courageous statement on this matter. We are all very deeply interested in the welfare of the Indians of the country, and the gentleman from New Mexico has always fought valiantly for the Indians of his State.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BARRETT. In my opinion, our Committee on Public Lands has not had the proper cooperation from the Indian Bureau. I hope that some way may be arrived at whereby we can secure more adequate information and better reports and more active cooperation from the Indian Bureau.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. As far as getting information about the Navajo Reservation is concerned, I do not think we will ever get it until we have a man responsible at the head of that reservation, instead of trying to channel everything through the Indian Office in Washington.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. D'EWART. I in turn want to compliment the gentleman from New Mexico on bringing this matter to the attention of the Congress. Certainly the situation on the Navajo-Hopi Reservation is something that is a disgrace to the Nation. We have made treaties with these people under which we are supposed to do certain things. We have fallen down in the carrying out of those treaties. During this session we have held extensive hearings on the situation in the Navajo Reservation. As a result of those hearings, various bills were introduced. The one to which the gentleman from New Mexico refers is the one that is being pressed for enactment at this time and has been voted out unanimously by our House Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The gentleman will agree with me, I am sure, that it is the beginning of the very program Secretary Krug has recommended.

Mr. D'EWART. That is right. It is not the intention of the committee that this shall be the final word on this problem, but it is a step in the right direction. I think this goes along and is in accord with the recommendations of the Bureau. I regret very much that they have seen fit to send up an adverse report on this necessary legislation. I hope we may not pay too much attention to that report, but can get favorable action in this session on this bill, which will be a step in taking care of this very, very bad situation.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I am sure Congress will do what is right, regardless of the report.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. POULSON. As I recall, when this bill was brought before the full Committee on Public Lands this very statement was made, that this was the first step in the general over-all program and approach to settling this very delicate and serious problem as far as the Indians are concerned.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Yes. I think the committee is very properly putting first things first in this bill. If we authorize the whole $90,000,000, what assurance have we that they will handle that any better than the $1,000,000 we gave them 2 years ago, with which they have done nothing up to date?

Mr. POULSON. I do not believe there is a single committee in the House that works any harder than the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs, of which the gentleman is one of the very able members.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I am sorry to say that in this particular matter we have not accomplished very much so far because of the lack of a cooperative attitude on the part of the Indian Office in Washington. What has been done is due to the untiring efforts of men like the gentleman from California, and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now before us, H. R. 2632, contains therein an appropriation of $2,500,000 for emergency flood-control work on the Columbia. Of this amount, $150,000 has been allocated for flood-control work on the Clarks Fork of the Columbia in the vicinity of Orchard Homes, Missoula, Mont.

The Corps of Engineers is cognizant of the extreme danger which faces the Orchard Homes area this winter and spring and has urged that this amount of money be approved. Maj. Gen. R. C. Crawford, Acting Chief of Engineers, has assured me in a letter, under date of February 10, 1949, that if this fund is approved they will proceed promptly with such remedial measures in the vicinity of Orchard Homes as are consistent with existing authority and the funds provided by Congress.

In behalf of the people in the Orchard Homes area, I urge the House to pass this appropriation immediately. I fear, even now, what may happen in the meantime, and I pray that we will not be too late in giving this assistance to the people of my district who need it so much.

The people of Orchard Homes are looking to us for assistance, and as their Representative in the Congress of the United States I urge you to heed their request and pass this appropriation promptly.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 99, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SADLAK. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SADLAK moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 6, line 24, strike out "$4,987,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$14,000,000."

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SADLAK. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 237, not voting 48, as follows:

LITHUANIA

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, one of the most shameful and least publicized events of the twentieth century was the dastardly conspiracy of the Kremlin against Russia's good little neighbor, Lithuania. The political police of the vast Soviet Union, holding in subjection 180,000,000 people, launched in peacetime a scheme directed at the physical extermination of millions of Lithuanian Christians.

However, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the history and glory of the brave people of that brave nation of Lithuania, nestled on the shores of the Baltic Sea. Never has there been greater proof that the United States of America remains loyal to her friends than the fact that this great leader of democracy still recognizes as a sovereign power the Republic of Lithuania, and denies and refuses to recognize the illegal and outrageous attempt on the part of Soviet Russia to annex Lithuania as a province of the Soviet.

I think it proper at this time that I say a word about the recognition of Lithuania by the United States.

When Lithuania was incorporated into the Soviet Union on July 21 of 1940, we and a large number of western countries felt that this was not done voluntarily, and refused to recognize this incorporation as legal. Thereby Lithuania was allowed to retain her diplomatic representatives in these countries. Two days after Lithuania's annexation to the Soviet Union the then Acting Secretary of State—Sumner Welles—clarified the position of this country in a press release which read:

> During these past few days the devious processes whereunder the political independence and territorial integrity of the three small Baltic Republics—Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—were to be deliberately annihilated by one of their more powerful neighbors, have been rapidly drawing to their conclusion.
> From the day when the peoples of these republics first gained their independent and democratic form of government the people of the United States have watched their admirable progress in self-government with deep and sympathetic interest.
>
> The policy of this Government is universally known. The people of the United States are opposed to predatory activities no matter whether they are carried on by the use of force or by the threat of force. They are likewise opposed to any form of intervention on the part of one state, however powerful, in the domestic concerns of any other sovereign state, however weak.
>
> These principles constitute the very foundations upon which the existing relationship between the 21 sovereign republics of the New World rests.
> The United States will continue to stand by these principles, because of the conviction of the American people that unless the doctrine in which these principles are inherent once again governs the relations between nations, the rule of reason, of justice, and of law—in other words, the basis of modern civilization itself—cannot be preserved.[1]

On March 3 of 1945 the Secretary of State issued a statement indicating that the position of this country had not changed since the enunciation of our policy as stated by Mr. Welles in 1940. This statement, as given in the New York Times, March 4, 1945, page 24, read:

> The Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania still are officially regarded by the United States as independent states, even though they were adsorbed into the Soviet Union early in the war.

Early last year when it was reported that the consular officials of the Soviet Union in this country were claiming to represent the Baltic countries here, the State Department sent letters to the governors of all 48 States, stating that this country has never recognized Soviet annexation of the Baltic States.

So far as this country is concerned—

Read the letter as quoted in the New York Times, March 30, 1948, page 12—> the Baltic countries still are independent nations, with their own diplomatic representatives and consuls.

The foregoing statements indicate just how we still recognize Lithuania as an independent country. Our position has not changed since 1940 and the same may be said of other countries which still recognize Lithuania.

The Governments of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania have been recognized either as de jure or de facto governments by the principal governments of Europe and have entered into treaty relations with their neighbors.

In extending to them recognition on its part, the Government of the United States takes cognizance of the actual existence of these Governments during a considerable period of time and of the successful maintenance within their borders of political and economic stability.

The United States has consistently maintained that the disturbed condition of Russian affairs may not be made the occasion for the alienation of Russian territory, and this principle is not deemed to be infringed by the recognition at this time of the Governments of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, which have been set up and maintained by an indigenous population.

Not only has the United States of America persisted in its recognition of the Republic of Lithuania as a de jure government but likewise it has consistently refused to recognize Russian claims.

Never have I been prouder of the integrity before the nations of the world of my own country than I am in the championing of the cause of the ancient lovers of democracy, the people of Lithuania.

And so today, Mr. Speaker, on this, the birthday of the Republic of Lithuania, I stand in this great forum of freedom, the House of Representatives of the United States of America, and pay my tribute to the Republic of Lithuania on this, the natal day.

The good and brave people of Lithuania, riding under the heel of the oppressor, do not passively sit by and accept without resistance the yoke of slavery.

Fighting for liberty and freedom and for the belief in the church of their ancestors is the tradition of the Lithuanian people. And in this year of our Lord 1949 the Lithuanians hold high the torch of their tradition and do not break faith with their noble ancestors.

Anti-Soviet resistance continues and will continue and continue until once again Lithuania is a free and independent nation.

I want to bring to the attention of the whole world the incessant struggle by patriotic Lithuania against the oppressor day in and day out since the infamous day when her liberty was destroyed by the Communist government from Moscow.

Resistance inside the country and in neighboring Latvia, White Ruthenia, Poland, and Ukraine continues. As a matter of fact, several Lithuanian guerrilla detachments were recently reported active in Silesia.

For this reason, Soviet units with some drafted Lithuanians are stationed far from the homeland—on the Arctic Ocean and in the Far East. A negligible number of units made up of natives are retained for effect in the country—the unarmed uniformed youths, singing in Lithuanian, are paraded on the streets of Vilnius, Kaunas, and several other larger cities. Not a single Lithuanian is entrusted with a plane. Most of the Soviet Army—former Red Army—troops garrisoned in Lithuania are natives of Siberia and Uzbekistan.

Lithuanian guerrillas presently operate in small mobile units. They are armed with captured Russian equipment and dressed, for the most part, in Russian uniforms with prewar Lithuanian insignia of rank. The guerrillas still have motorcycles, motorized light artillery pieces, and small tanks.

The guerrillas retained mastery of the countryside throughout the summer and fall of 1947 and carried their operations into Poland and East Prussia. An active liaison was established with the Polish underground and some operations, as, for example, the occupation of the frontier town of Cypliskes in Sudavia, were carried out jointly.

A legendary leader, a former resident of Kybartai, nicknamed "Zaliasis Velnias"—the Green Devil—is especially notorious.

Mimeographed newspapers, printed appeals, and news sheets are widely distributed. Even the impressed Polish and German laborers are supplied with underground literature. Some 20 newspapers are published regularly. Their titles disclose the spirit of the fighting, freedom-loving people: Laisvoji Lietuva—Free Lithuania, Laisves Varpas—the Liberty Bell, Tevynes Kovotojas—the Patriotic Fighter, Ginkime Lietuva—Defend Lithuania, Kova—the Struggle, Uz Laisve—For Freedom, and so forth.

[1] Department of State Bulletin, July 27, 1940, p. 48.

One of the outstanding achievements of 1947 was the creation of a unified command in the field and propaganda. The Lithuanian Liberation Army, the Freedom Fighters, the Partisan Column, and other formerly uncoordinated units finally created a joint staff and liaison service. This fact was jubilantly announced in a fighting editorial, Lithuania Militans. All political differences were buried in the interest of a united resistance struggle, as existed during the days of the Nazi occupation.

This development brought an immediate reaction from the enemy. The six regular Soviet Army divisions, strong air formations, motorized units, special transport and guard units protecting the railroads, highway bridges, and transport convoys, and 75,000 men of the MVD-MGB troops, the "people's militia," and the organized marauders called exterminators—Istrebiteli—needed reinforcements. Five special MGB air squadrons were brought in to the country in the fall of 1947. Additional armored and infantry divisions were moved to Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia in January 1948.

Large units are presently stationed in county seats. For instance, 3,000 MVD troops equipped with tanks and armored motorcycles are stationed in a small railroad junction town of Mazeikiai. Larger forces are garrisoned in Lithuania than at any time since the occupation of the country in 1940.

There is no appreciable decrease in the armed anti-Soviet resistance, but guerrillas' tactics have changed.

The Russians are making every effort to convert the independence struggle into a civil war. For example, drafted natives are interdispersed in the units dispatched against the guerrillas. On the other hand, the internecine aspect is intensified by the guerrillas, who take a heavy toll of the natives who dare to accept administrative offices under the Russians or who enroll in the Communist organizations.

There were no large-scale battles since the fall of 1946, but individual MVD-NKVD troopers, MGB-NKGB investigators, Communist Party officials, and militiamen are killed daily. Several dozen guerrillas were encircled in the woods near Vilnius and were killed to the last man. Russian operations against another large unit in Utena County failed. When MVD concentrations arrived the guerrillas had vanished. An 18-year-old girl, who had organized medical aid for guerrillas, was detained—and later liberated by a patriot band. She is now in Poland—completely gray, nerves shattered, crippled for life by "interrogation." A guerrilla leader was recently captured, tried, and executed in Poland. His unit continues to operate in both Lithuania and Poland.

Guerrillas are masters of the situation in summer, but they go into hiding in winter. The promises of an "amnesty" were largely ignored. Nevertheless, some men who had merely evaded mobilization surrendered, some sought legitimization by moving to East Prussia, the Memel District, or the largely depopulated areas of the Vilnius district, where they are not known personally.

Railroad stations and towns are still heavily garrisoned. Units of people's militia and exterminators—istrebiteli—are very active in the country. When not engaged in manhunt, these exterminators act as inspectors of produce deliveries. They indiscriminately open fire on persons walking too fast—in their judgment. Their chiefs are Russians, the rank and file contain some native traitors and draft evaders. Lately, the exterminators attempted to popularize their new designation as freedom defenders and activists. However, the people stick to their original derisive nicknames—strebokai, skrebai, stribikauliai—persons with deformed hip bones, and so forth.

After continuous and meticulously effected combing operations, the Russians uncovered a great many bunkers and other hiding places. The forest brethren had to shoot it out with the invaders or look for other hiding places. Life of the guerrilla fighters is extremely dangerous. So is the life of the exterminators—some retire to lunch in privacy and never again appear. This kind of life causes much drinking among the exterminators.

Farmers of the areas where guerrillas show increased activities are indiscriminately deported. No explanations help, even when the people offer explanation: all sorts of armed men, invariably dressed in Russian uniforms, come to look for food and to rob—"to inspect." When a wounded guerrilla, whose tenure of life was spared for questioning purposes, was spirited out of a hospital, several employees of the hospital suffered exile. When a boy who had purchased bandages for the guerrillas in several drug stores was unmasked, all of the druggists suffered.

Every former officer, official, national guard member and independence war veteran had to enlist in the forest fraternity. They had no choice. Their ranks were swelled by draft evaders and by liberated political prisoners.

The guerrillas follow certain established patterns. Women informers, first offenders, are punished by a shave and a token flogging. Men, first offenders, have their seats grated and salted. The second offense merits a bullet.

The desecration of the corpses of the guerrillas continues as a pattern. When a guerrilla is killed, the Russians remove his boots and clothing, bring the body to the nearest town, and dump it on the sidewalk in a prominent place. The Communists passing by spit and kick the corpses. People are forced to watch the sadism of the Russians. The bodies are badly mutilated—legs are twisted and broken, bowels laid open, eyes are gouged out, the crania smashed.

In the past, the Russians permitted the natives to bury the bodies. Since the fall of 1946, decomposed bodies are picked up at night by war-prisoner details, taken out of town and buried in unmarked graves. In some places, bodies are thrown into the quagmire.

Some women dared to approach the martyrs' corpses, to kneel and pray. One mother gained fame when she gently touched her son's hair and firmly stated that this was not her son—to save her other boys. None of the multitude of acquaintances betrayed her.

The Communists killed by the patriots are ceremoniously buried in red-painted coffins—in the desecrated Christian cemeteries. Sometimes the authorities demand that priests accompany the heroes' coffins. One priest refused—and joined the forest fraternity after his liberation from prison.

The alien regime depends on armed force exclusively. One-half of the nominal ministers are Russians, and business is transacted at the cabinet meetings in Russian. The Lithuanian language is a stranger in the MVD—former NKVD—and MGB—former NKGB. Nevertheless, translators are retained in the administrative offices and applications in Lithuanian are accepted. All of the records and tax receipts are printed in Russian and Lithuanian.

The people's commissars are now called ministers. Some of them wear resplendent uniforms. The cabinet is established in Vilnius, in a building on Ciurlionis Street which had formerly housed the headquarters of the Gestapo—a familiar landmark to the natives. The residence of Paleckis is heavily guarded.

Only two Lithuanian conductors were retained in the railroad service. Railroads are serviced by Russian personnel exclusively. All outgoing mails pass through Moscow.

So today, Mr. Speaker, I take this time in the midst of our busy deliberations to focus the eyes of the western Christian world upon this island of freedom and democracy where the tyrant will never succeed in the end.

In the voice of the lovers of freedom and justice throughout the world I say, long live Lithuania.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I understand the export-control bill will be the first one on the program?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct, followed by two resolutions relating to the giving of two committees the power to investigate; then there will be a bill out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

It is hoped that we may clean them all up tomorrow and adjourn over until Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to include in his extension of remarks certain letters and excerpts.

Mr. FERNANDEZ asked and was given permission to include with the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole an excerpt from the RECORD of June 8, 1948.

Mr. GARMATZ (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a statement by Mayor D'Alesandro, of Baltimore.

Mr. LUCAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial on the subject of rent control.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a statement entitled "The College Fraternity Crisis." I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $301.75, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech made at Bridgeport, Conn., by Hon. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.

Mr. KEARNEY and Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FULTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one, editorials appearing in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, the Pittsburgh Press, and the New York World-Telegram; and in the other, a letter from the director of the United Service for New Americans and an article appearing in the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. HINSHAW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

FILIPINO REHABILITATION COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 381, Seventy-eighth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission the following Members of the House: Mr. MILLS, of Arkansas; Mr. MURDOCK, of Arizona; and Mr. WELCH, of California.

THIRTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. GORSKI of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORSKI of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, today free Lithuanians throughout the world are commemorating the thirty-first anniversary of the declaration of independence of the Republic of Lithuania. The enslaved people in Lithuania are denied this right by the despotic occupant of the country. I know that these unfortunate people are not alone in celebrating this day, for there are countless millions who join with them and extend to these freedom-loving people their sympathies on their temporary subjugation and enslavement in which they find themselves, and at the same time wish them a very speedy restoration of their Republic with complete freedom and independence.

The 600-year-old Lithuanian state was first occupied by Czarist Russia in 1795. That enslavement was terminated on February 16, 1918, by the Declaration of Independence of Lithuania. Soviet Russia gave full recognition to this declaration, renounced for all time all rights to the territory of Lithuania, and recognized Lithuania as a sovereign independent state. The United States and other nations also recognized Lithuania's rightfull independence.

The independent Republic of Lithuania in their short space of independence made remarkable progress in every phase of life. Impartial observers acknowledged Lithuania to be one of the most cultured, progressive, and industrious countries of Europe, and her people were happy, prosperous, and self-sustaining.

The outstanding achievements and accomplishments of Lithuania were destroyed when it was occupied for the second time in 1940. Soviet Russia then enslaved and annexed Lithuania by aggression and still rules it by force.

Lithuania is a tragic victim of Soviet aggression. The people of Lithuania have been deprived of their cherished land, of all private enterprises, of human rights, and of fundamental freedoms. They have been converted into chattels of the Soviet state. Over one-half million people of Lithuania have been slain or banished from Lithuania. Genocide by the Soviets threatens to annihilate the Lithuanian nation.

These crimes of aggression and genocide against Lithuania have been condemned by the Lithuanian nation, by the United States and by other democratic countries, which continue to recognize independent Lithuania and its lawful representatives.

In the fight for their rights and freedom, Lithuanians hope and pray that the United States and the western democracies will continue to stand by the principles of right and justice, and that they will actively champion the cause of sovereign rights and self-government for Lithuania and all other victims of aggression and injustice.

It seems to me that the time has come for making a demand upon the Soviet Union: First, to halt genocide in Lithuania and other occupied countries by murder and deportation of innocent people; second, to return deportees from the slave-labor camps in Siberia and other parts of Russia; third, to remove Soviet armies, police, and secret agents from Lithuania and other Baltic countries; and, fourth, to restore freedom, sovereign rights and self-government to the peoples of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, who have been forcibly deprived of them by the Soviet Union.

The Lithuanian people want their freedom and they are entitled to it. I hope their ambition to be a free nation is not too far away. There will be no peace in this troubled world, as long as Russia tries to dominate and subjugate small nations. Russia will not only bring an endless trail of troubles upon herself, but will be the cause of world unrest which eventually will bring her own downfall.

The days of tyrants are over. People all over the world are demanding a representative form of government, and this demand will spread from one subjugated nation to another until all mankind has achieved freedom and independence.

I want to extend my best wishes to these great patriotic freedom-loving people, who today are putting up a gallant fight to restore their independence, and throw off the shackles of a ruthless tyrant. The Republic of Lithuania is still recognized by our Government, and I trust we will insist that the principles of the Atlantic Charter be applied to the case of Lithuania, together with Latvia and Estonia.

If Russia desires peace in the world, she, more than any other nation, can bring that about by liberating the people whom she now dominates and unless Russia does that, the everlasting desire of the people to be free and independent, will go on, as it has in centuries past, until tyrants are destroyed everywhere.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORSKI of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I wish to congratulate the gentleman on his splendid remarks and I want to join with him in everything that he has said. The people of America are wholeheartedly with the people of Lithuania, and we are all looking forward to the day when the iron curtain will be rolled back and the people of Lithuania will regain their independence which they so richly deserve, and that our great country will be able to make its most effective contribution toward the regaining of their lost liberties.

Mr. GORSKI of Illinois. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

REGULATION W CAUSING TROUBLE—FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD WARNED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have urged the Federal Reserve Board to rescind or substantially change regulation W. Today I sent to the Chairman of the Board, a copy to each member, the following letter:

FEBRUARY 16, 1949.

Hon. THOMAS B. McCABE,
Chairman of the Board of Governors,
The Federal Reserve System,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Nearly 2 months now have elapsed since I began calling attention of the Federal Reserve Board to the widespread damages being caused to our national economy by certain overstringent consumer credit controls.

At that time I pointed out that an utterly needless depression could be created and was being threatened by the Federal Reserve Board's credit squeeze. More proof has kept pouring in since then that the Federal Reserve Board is depriving millions of American families of the opportunity to purchase needed automobiles because your regulation W requires excessively high monthly payments spread over only 15 to 18 months. I urged you in December—and now I again plead—that you exercise the power already vested in your board to extend the payment period to at least 24 months.

While the Federal Reserve Board has taken no action to date to alleviate hardships it is causing the people and to durable goods industries, unemployment is mounting at an alarming rate, production is being cut back, and other soft spots have appeared in our economy.

Consequently I took some heart as I heard you testify on regulation W February 14 before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report when you promised:

"I can assure you that we will modify these restraints as the economic conditions warrant it and will not hesitate to relax them when they have served their purpose."

Then why don't you act immediately?

Already it is dangerously late.

Already you have thrown countless thousands of workers unnecessarily out of jobs.

Already you have carried too far your deliberate policy of discriminating against our families of moderate means whom you dictate cannot have reasonable installment credit to purchase the durable goods they need.

You are jeopardizing the very business lives of an untold number of small, independent businessmen throughout the country.

By singling out only certain industries, small businessmen, and the mass market of ordinary folks for your unfair and discriminatory consumer-credit measures, you already have carried the country too far toward deflation and depression.

If we have a depression, it should not be called a Truman depression, as the Republicans no doubt will attempt to do; instead it should rightfully be called a Federal Reserve Board depression.

It is not unusual for the Federal Reserve Board to cause depressions. It caused a devastating one in 1920. It contributed to the 1929–30 depression. It started a real depression in 1937, but fortunately our Chief Executive at that time caused changes to be made which put the Government back on a sound economic basis.

Of late there has been an alarming increase in areas of depression in sections of our country and our economy. Certainly we must give credence to such reports as the following, which have appeared in the press in the last few days:

As a sharp index to what's happening to business, Dun & Bradstreet says bank clearings in 25 leading cities during the week ending February 9 were the lowest of any week since September 1.

Unemployment among railroad workers of the Nation passed the 100,000 mark last week. This is around 10 percent of the working force in the industry.

United Air Lines' President W. A. Patterson reports a recession is already here—that he has found evidences of a business slump all over the country and that United has had to lay off 1,300 employees since October.

The Federal Reserve Board reports that department store sales for the Nation were down 4 percent as compared to the same week last year, with New York and Atlanta down 7 percent and Dallas and San Francisco down 10 percent.

Montgomery Ward's January sales were down 10 percent over the same month last year, and Sears, Roebuck sales were down 11 percent.

General Electric cut production 10 percent at its Tiffin, Ohio, plant which makes small motors.

International Harvester will curtail heavy truck production at Fort Wayne, Ind., by 30 percent and light truck ouput at Springfield, Ohio, by 10 percent about March 1.

California factory employment dropped 5 percent in January over December of last year for the sharpest decline since 1939.

Commercial and industrial failures rose 32.4 percent to 192 in the week ended February 10, reaching the highest level since June of 1942, according to Dun & Bradstreet.

This represents just a very small sample of the worker lay-offs and production curtailments which are taking place throughout our Nation today.

All but the upper crust of purchasers are being forced out of the markets for new automobiles, refrigerators, furniture, applicances, and other consumer goods that fall under your regulation W consumer credit curb.

Not 2 out of 10 persons can afford to pay $100 a month or more for new cars, since in general only persons earning $5,000 a year or more—roughly the upper 14 percent—are classed as good credit risks for such installments. Yet simply by extending the credit period to 24 months, such monthly payments could be reduced to approximately $75 a month.

Cars are an absolute necessity for most Americans today, the majority being used in their work or business, and so I am deeply concerned when the little fellow is hit as regulation W is hitting him.

Auto installment credit today is virtually the same amount as it was in 1941, and you surely cannot consider that out of line in view of the fact that the sales value of autos now is much greater. Yet in the prewar era, when cars cost less, purchasers were allowed to spread payments over longer periods.

Thousands of additional workers in durable-goods industries are being laid off each week that you delay modifying Regulation W. This is endangering the Nation's domestic, foreign, and defense programs, which hinge on a continued high level of production and employment in the durable-goods industries.

Some time back I noted Detroit reports that up to then Regulation W was being blamed in connection with the auto industry having to lay off 10,000 workers and with almost all the auto-parts manufacturers being forced to cut back production and employment. Over the week end Walter Reuther, of the United Auto Workers Union, announced that the auto industry in recent weeks laid off 5,000 tool and die makers, "who have little hope for reemployment in the immediate future."

These lay-offs are setting off a chain reaction.

Small business, whose interests our House committee has been charged with looking after, is suffering severely from Regulation W.

Three out of every four auto dealers in the Nation report they are being hurt by Regulation W, according to a poll being taken by the National Automobile Dealers Association among its 35,000 members. The association's membership, representing an important segment of American small business, went on record at their recent national convention in San Francisco as urging immediate extension of the installment period to 24 months.

You no doubt also have received a poll taken by the National Appliance and Radio Dealers Association showing the feeling of these small-business men that you should revise the regulation to permit longer credit terms.

The promises you made before the joint congressional committee to cause the least possible interference with usual business operations and to use your powers to meet deflationary developments lead me to observe this:

Recently the Departemnt of Agriculture stepped in promptly, in the public interest, to stop the sudden, chaotic drop in farm commodity prices. This Government agency felt the need for action and did something about it immediately. Likewise the Federal Reserve Board is empowered and entrusted with the responsibility to act positively and swiftly against needless reduction of production and employment.

As a member of the Congressional Joint Economic Committee and House Banking and Currency Committee, and chairman of the House Small Business Committee I regard it as my solemn duty to call to your attention what is happening to our country, something which I am afraid will not be recognized by your Board until it is too late. I am taking the liberty of sending a copy of this letter to your fellow members of the Board of Governors and I hope that each of you will see the human suffering that continued delay can cause. If you but listen to the reports from the grass roots of the country, I believe you would act at once to safeguard the people's interest.

Sincerely yours,

WRIGHT PATMAN.

(Copies to six other Federal Reserve Board members.)

NADA HAS REPEATEDLY WARNED FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. Speaker, the adverse effects of the imposition of regulation W on the retail automobile trade are not new. They first came to the attention of the headquarters of the National Automobile Dealers Association here in Washington on November 30, 1948, in a wire from a member. Some 40 other wire complaints followed shortly.

NADA acted promptly on the dealers' behalf, as we who are familiar with its service know it is accustomed to do. The complaints were referred to the industry relations committee of NADA on December 1, and with its approval went to the executive committee on December 3. Reference of the situation to the Federal Reserve Board was authorized and the Board set December 7 to receive the first complaints from NADA representatives. This action was in accord with the association's regular practice of seeking to settle all matters with Government departments administratively, if possible, before asking for remedial legislation. It is a good practice and one which, I am sure, every Member of Congress will endorse.

The association representatives asked that the period for making monthly payments on cars be extended from 18 to 24 months. No change in the down payment of one-third was asked. Dealers had said that their customers, in general, were able to make the initial payment but found difficulty in meeting subsequent monthly payments. In most cases each of these monthly payments, on even the smallest cars, amount to at least $100. That is a large amount of money for a worker who must use his car to reach his place of employment, or a small-business man who uses his car in trade.

The Board received the presentations with thanks on December 7 and asked that any future information on the matter be submitted to it. Since that time, at regular intervals, on December 17 and December 19, 1948, and January 14 and February 7, 14, and 15, 1949, NADA representatives have submitted to the Board additional information from dealers substantiating the original complaint that application of regulation W in its present form was slowing up credit sales.

In this connection, a statement on the situation, issued by the executive committee of NADA at its national convention held in San Francisco on January 25–28, 1949, is of interest. It follows:

NADA RELEASE ON REGULATION W

SAN FRANCISCO, January 23.—Reports from throughout the Nation that regulation W is imposing grave hardships on persons of small incomes who must use motorcars in their work or business greatly disturbed members of the National Automobile Dealers Association meeting here today.

So serious did the association's executive committee regard the situation that it issued a special statement strongly urging the Federal Reserve Board anew to take remedial action immediately. The Board is authorized to ease the present time payment terms of one-third down and the remaining two-thirds in 18 months whenever it sees fit. The Board now has before it a request from the association that the time payment period be extended to 24 months.

The statement said:

"The executive committee of NADA has heard with renewed concern from thousands of its 35,000 members attending its national convention here that the application of regulation W is hurting persons of small income who must have cars to help them earn a livelihood. Workers who must travel long distances to their employment and small-business men who use cars for making deliveries and other gainful purposes are being hit especially hard. Most of them are able to make the initial payment but find it impossible in many cases to meet the subsequent 18 months' requirements.

"These payments, even on the smallest cars, now approximate $100 per month. Of course, persons in the low-income brackets simply cannot meet such terms.

"This is not a question of dealers being unable to move all the cars they can get. They can do that because there are enough customers with higher incomes ready and able to buy all available new cars. But the higher income classes generally do not need cars to help them make a living. Therefore, the regulation puts pressure on the segment of car buyers least able to stand it.

"NADA has previously called the attention of the Federal Reserve Board to the situation as reflected by scattered reports and the Board has been investigating this limited number of cases and others brought to its attention. Since arriving here, however, your executive committee has learned from dealers representing all States that complaints against the harsh terms of the regulation are general.

"We, therefore, are again urging the Board to give the small buyers relief immediately."

Informal discussions looking to amendment of the regulation by congressional action in case the Board continues to decline to modify the terms of the regulation have been held. Thus far, however, NADA has made no direct appeal to Congress for legislative assistance.

Shortly before the convention, NADA headquarters here sent a postcard questionnaire to its 35,011 members in all States asking them to report on the current effects of regulation W. To date a total of 19,862 members, or about four-sevenths of the total membership, has replied. A very large majority of them declare that the regulation is slowing down time-payment sales. Not all of the replies have been tabulated, but the ratio of those counted shows that those dealers who think the regulation is hurting sales is approximately 3 to 1 over those who say the regulation has not proved harmful.

As the replies are being received, reports on them are being given to both the Board and interested congressional Members. It is expected that the last of the replies will be received within a week or 10 days and final reports will then be made by NADA to the two groups.

The Federal Reserve Board also is conducting surveys of retail automobile credit sales in different parts of the country. Although the Board has not acceded thus far to the request of NADA and others for a modification of the regulation, neither has it refused finally to do so.

(Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include statements and excerpts.)

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE ATOMIC BOMB

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase a great statesman of our time—never before have so many known so little about so potent a weapon as the atom bomb. Out of the devastating explosions of Hiroshima, Nagasaki, and Bikini has arisen a vast mushroom of contradictions and confusion.

Millions of dollars have been siphoned from the pockets of the American people for the development of atomic destruction. But how much have these investors in the atom bomb—these stockholders of the Nation's welfare—been permitted to know regarding the potential uses and effects of the atom bomb in a future war?

If the stockholders of a large corporation were handled with similar scorn and disrespect, it would be considered bad business and bad public relations. When the men who are elected or appointed to guide our destinies withhold from the people they represent the facts which are rightfully theirs to know—then I say those leaders are acting dangerously and intolerably.

What are some of the contradictions and muddy statements concerning the atom bomb which have come to our ears in recent months?

I recall, for example, the statement of Rear Adm. William Parsons, the Navy's atomic-defense director, who claimed there had been tremendous overemphasis of the atom bomb. Admiral Parsons said that one or a dozen atom bombs dropped on American cities would be just another Pearl Harbor. He added confidently:

It would cook the goose of any nation doing it unless that nation had hundreds of atom bombs to follow up with.

Fears of radioactivity, Admiral Parsons said, are largely unfounded. Only the Bikini underwater blast, he pointed out, left appreciable amounts of radioactive deposits.

Well, two holes can be shot in that statement right off by the mere layman. First of all, I know of no guaranty that the enemy of the future would not have in his possession hundreds of atom bombs to hurl at our cities. And, second, what does Admiral Parsons mean by only the Bikini underwater blast left appreciable amounts of radioactive deposits? Does he mean to imply that underwater atom blasts will be declared outside the rules of future warfare, and that our potential enemies will only explode their bombs in the air, to spare us the inconvenience of radioactivity?

That is a pet point of the atom-bomb depreciators who would calm our nerves—the tell-'em-nothing and save-'em-from-fear boys. Oh, the radioactive particles of the air-burst atom bomb, they tell us, do their darnedest immediately following the explosion, and then they disappear into the stratosphere where nobody cares what happens to them. The worst sting of the atom bomb, they console us, lies in its explosive power, its terrific heat and fire. After it is all over, and thousands lie dead and mangled, there is nothing further to worry about—unless you happen to be dead and mangled, and then you are beyond worry anyway.

Again, there is this unwillingness to face up to the awful consequences of an underwater bomb.

Unfortunately, Col. James P. Cooney, one of the Army observers at Bikini, belongs to the do-not-let-the-atom-bomb-disturb-your-dreams school of thought. Colonel Cooney, who is chief of the Army Surgeon General's Special Projects Division, called the atom bomb primarily a blast weapon, referring to it casually as a piece of ordnance. An air-burst bomb, Colonel Cooney said, leaves so little radiation that rescue workers can safely enter a bombed area immediately after the blast. And then he warned that unreasoning psychological fears of the effects of radioactivity could well interfere with an important military mission in time of war.

Then why not give the American people the facts about radioactivity so that they can act intelligently in the light of this knowledge? The way to protect people from unreasoning psychological fears is not to keep them ignorant.

The way to avoid hysteria is not to stifle free discussion as was done several weeks ago in San Francisco. A round-table discussion on the deadliness of radiation, which was scheduled by the Radiological Society of North America, was canceled at the request of military authorities in Washington. It was claimed that the discussion would have involved many military angles, although this explanation must be taken with tongue in cheek. This is precisely the type of censorship which can multiply to threatening proportions.

Through this haze of censorship and official hedging has come a dramatic warning, which I believe brings us closer than we have ever been before to the true implications of the atom bomb. It is the account of Dr. David Bradley of his experiences as a radiological monitor at Bikini in the summer of 1946. The title of Dr. Bradley's book is in itself a warning—"No Place To Hide."

This Geiger monitor whose job it was to guard the Bikini personnel from the unseen dangers of radiation does not look upon the atom bomb as merely another piece of ordnance. Dr. Bradley gives us a far different picture. He views the bomb as—and we quote:

> The colossus which looms behind tomorrow.

It was the underwater explosion, Dr. Bradley points out, which left behind it the real atomic menace—the lingering poison of radioactivity. In this test the lethal elements, the most dangerous fission products—including the deadly plutonium, which cannot be detected by the Geiger counter—were held captive in the huge cloud of water which fell back on the atoll.

While others whistle as they pass the atomic cemetery, Dr. Bradley tells us that the Bikini Atoll—an area of some 200 square miles—could not be decontaminated and made habitable for years or perhaps for centuries. Habitable that is, for people, not for fishes or birds. Furthermore, he says the Navy failed completely to cleanse the more strongly radioactive ships which were blasted in the experiment.

Let us not overlook the implications of that statement, as we contemplate the defense budget, and note the construction of a 65,000-ton carrier costing the stockholders—or rather, the taxpayers—$124,000,000. This carrier, and the Navy's request for an increase in its budget, contribute not only to the general confusion but to the national deficit.

Let us pierce the confusion and find out why we cannot devise a more economical and perhaps even more efficient defense. To quote from an editorial in the New York Herald Tribune:

> Surely the present level of military effectiveness could be provided for less than $15,000,000,000 a year.

And the New York Times on the same subject:

> It is one thing to know what we want to spend our money for; it is another thing to pay too much for what we get. We want an adequate defense, not a race between the services.

The services also appear to be outdoing each other in contradictory and confusing statements relative to our defense needs. Each official pleads the special case of his branch of the service, but no one attempts to define our defense needs in terms of atomic realities. So far I have heard none of our high officials convincingly refute these four conclusions presented by Dr. Bradley:

First. There is no real defense against atomic weapons.

Second. There are no satisfactory countermeasures and methods of decontamination.

Third. There are no satisfactory medical or sanitary safeguards for the people of atomized areas.

Fourth. The devastating influence of the bomb and its unborn relatives may affect the land and its wealth—and therefore its people—for centuries through the persistence of radioactivity.

This, as I have said, is the closest we have yet come to a straightforward statement of atomic consequences. However, it is not a top official report. It comes from a keen observer who has gone as far as he could in awakening us to the possible dangers of the poisoning of land, sea, and air with radioactivity from the atom bomb.

Much of the information the author acquired—Dr. Bradley notes—must remain veiled in official secrecy.

He does not mean that it should remain veiled, but that it must remain veiled under the official mandate.

There is a top official account of Bikini, which from all we can gather, is blotted out with the black ink of censorship. The Joint Chiefs of Staff Evaluation Board on the Bikini tests were charged with the task of writing a separate report on the value of the atom bomb and its place in the war of the future.

According to Mr. Bradley Dewey, a member of the Evaluation Board, and a respected New England industrialist, it was understood that the Board's report was partly for the guidance of public thinking and that all of it except those portions which might jeopardize military security would be made public. The Board chairman, Dr. Karl T. Compton, together with security experts of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made certain deletions which Mr. Dewey calls entirely proper and expected, and then approved the remainder of the report for publication. It was also approved for publication by the Atomic Energy Commission. Then, according to Mr. Dewey, it was sent to the White House in the custody of Admiral Leahy, the President's Chief of Staff.

Where is this report now—this report which belongs to the public?

An Associated Press dispatch of November 26 quoted the National Military Establishment as saying Secretary Forrestal had recommended that the final official report on the Bikini atom-bomb tests be withheld for reasons of national security.

Mr. Bradley Dewey says:

> In the many months this report has been withheld from the public, millions of words have been printed expressing mere opinion and gross speculation, thus fanning the winds of rumor so that they swirl and eddy about the earth. Now serving one propaganda, now another, rumor exaggerates or depreciates the value of atomic weapons, falsifying and distorting public opinion everywhere.

I can foresee grave consequences if this type of dangerous mentality is permitted to keep legitimate information about the atom bomb from the American public. Even during wartime there exists an exaggerated sense of distrust of the public among this section of the military, which would, if permitted, clamp down an all-inclusive censorship on information reaching the public. Their unreasonable actions would be rationalized by befuddled references to military security and maintaining the public morale. This military mentality extended into peacetime censorship is even more dangerous, for it cannot wear the mask of immediate military necessity. It stems basically from distrust of the people and democratic processes of shaping national policy.

Both history and common sense demonstrate that contempt of the public and unjustified censorship are among the first blows against democracy. Unwillingness to take the public into counsels that affect the public welfare is based in good part upon the desire to build and preserve an undue sense of power and omnipotence.

I want to warn you that the seeds of military dictatorship lie in that course. I see great cause for alarm if atomic policy and other national policy is to be made and carried out over the heads of the American people. Powerful military leaders, monopolizing atomic information, can do more harm to our Nation than any truth about the dangers of atomic destruction and radioactivity. Yes; I think we have really to fear the military grab for power—the military who would control our destiny, perhaps laying the pattern of our destruction, rather than serving the interests of the Nation's defense.

I hold that no potential enemy will be served if the American people are told plainly and truthfully the facts about atomic destruction and radiation disease—what the bomb can do and has done to people and to ships and other devices of war.

I believe, in fact, that the more we know about the destructive powers of the atom bomb, the more convinced we will become that atomic warfare may very well mean the destruction of our civilization. Knowing this, I believe it will become more apparent to us that war is not inevitable, any more than voluntary death is inevitable to a person contemplating suicide. There is still a chance that he may be reasoned out of his impulse for self-destruction. That is what I fear the next war may amount to—mass self-destruction.

If the Russian people, as well as the American people, are given the full facts about the destructive potential of the atom bomb, I believe a long step will be taken toward making sure there will be no future war. In the atomic age, this is indeed one world. The atom bomb with its chain reaction, its radioactivity, and its dread byproducts respects no national or ideological boundaries. We cannot build Maginot lines against radioactivity. We cannot suppress or censor radioactivity or cheerfully contend that it does not exist, or even if it does exist, that it is not as bad as it might be.

We must take the guesswork out of national defense and international diplomacy. The diplomats and defense officials in our democracy must serve the interests of the people. But the people cannot decide where those best interests lie unless and until they know the truth. Knowledge banishes fear and provides an intelligent basis for democratic action. Therefore, I recommend—for the sake of the national security and the public welfare—that this body demand a full accounting of the final report of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Evaluation Board on the Bikini tests. Let us give this report to the people, to whom it belongs. I believe we should also investigate all other possible suppressions of legitimate information about the atom bomb, such as the official silence concerning the later atomic-weapon tests at Eniwetok. Furthermore, let the committees charged with weighing our national defense needs study carefully the justification of all expenditures in the light of the actual necessities of the atomic age.

Practically every American has seen the impressive photograph of an atom-bomb explosion, with its mushroom of smoke or steam. The caption of this familiar photograph has been distorted and blurred. It is up to us to rewrite it clearly and truthfully, so that the atomic explosion may never be blasted out of that photograph to engulf our world in a radioactive doom.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

TOWNSEND PLAN FOR NATIONAL INSURANCE

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, on February 2, 1949, I introduced H. R. 2135, and the gentleman from Oregon, Representative ANGELL, introduced a companion bill, H. R. 2136, which is the Townsend plan for national insurance, and the following is a condensed version of the bill:

A bill to provide every adult citizen in the United States with equal basic Federal insurance, permitting retirement with benefits at age 60, and also covering total disability, from whatever cause, for certain citizens under 60; to give protection to widows with children; to provide an ever-expanding market for goods and services through the payment and distribution of such benefits in ratio to the Nation's steadily increasing ability to produce, with the cost of such benefits to be carried by every citizen in proportion to the income privileges he enjoys

Be it enacted, etc.—

TITLE I—DEFINITIONS

TITLE II—GROSS INCOME TAX

SEC. 201. In addition to all other excises, duties, or taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of 3 per centum of the gross income of all persons or companies derived from any and all sources, except in personal incomes there shall be an exemption up to $250 per month.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 202. The taxes shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 203. The Secretary of the Treasury may distrain upon any goods, chattels, etc., for delinquent taxes.

SEC. 204. The Secretary of the Treasury shall designate the manner and place for filing returns and payment of tax.

SEC. 205. The tax shall be computed on the total gross income of all persons and companies at the end of each calendar month.

SEC. 206. All remittances of taxes imposed by this act shall be made to the place designated by the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 20th day of the second month after they accrue.

COLLECTIONS, ASSESSMENTS, AND APPEALS

SEC. 207. If the taxpayer shall make any error in computing the tax assessable against him, the Secretary of the Treasury shall correct such error.

SEC. 208. If the amount already paid exceeds that which should have been paid on the basis of the tax so recomputed, the excess so paid shall be immediately refunded to the taxpayer.

SEC. 209. If any person having made the return feels aggrieved by any assessment so made upon him, he may appeal from said assessment by filing a petition in the manner provided.

SEC. 210. The Secretary of the Treasury shall enforce the payment of the excises, taxes, or duties required by this act.

SEC. 211. For the purpose of the income tax imposed by title I of the Revenue Act of 1934, the tax imposed by section 201 shall be allowed as a deduction to the taxpayer in computing his net income.

SEC. 212. All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to any tax imposed by various revenue acts, shall be applicable to this act.

SEC. 213. All Federal officers or agents making contracts on behalf of the United States or its instrumentalities or any political subdivision thereof shall withhold payment in the final settlement of any contracts until the receipt of a certificate from the Secretary of the Treasury or his duly appointed agent to the effect that all taxes levied or accrued under this title against such contractor have been paid.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 214. The provisions of this title shall not apply to the following: (1) All moneys received by individuals or institutions and held in custody or as a deposit for others; (2) fraternal benefit societies, orders, or associations, operating under the lodge system, or for the exclusive benefit of the members of the fraternity itself, operating under the lodge system, and providing for the payment of death, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, or associations, and to their dependents or beneficiaries; (3) corporations, associations, or societies organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes; (4) business leagues, chambers of commerce, labor organizations, boards of trade, civic leagues, and other similar organizations operated exclusively for the benefit of the community and for the promotion of social welfare, and not for commercial trading in any form, and from which no profit inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; (5) hospitals, infirmaries, and sanatoria, from which no profit inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; (6) amounts received by any person as a benefit payment so-called or like payments by virtue of acts passed by the Congress of the United States relating thereto and disbursed to others as such benefit payment; but the Secretary of the Treasury may by regulation require any such deductions to be set forth specifically by the taxpayer in his return: Provided, however, That exemptions (2) to (6), inclusive, shall apply only to the gross income received from nonprofit activities.

PENALTIES

SEC. 215. It shall be unlawful for any person to refuse to make any returns provided for in this title; or to make any false or fraudulent return or false statement in any return with intent to defraud the United States, or to evade the payment of the tax, or any part thereof. Any person violating any of the provisions of this title shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both. Any corporation for which a false return, or a return containing a false statement, as aforesaid, shall be made, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000.

SEC. 216. The Federal Insurance Contributions Act is hereby repealed.

TITLE III—ANNUITIES

SEC. 301. There is hereby created an account in the Treasury of the United States to be known as the business, employment, and security insurance account (hereinafter referred to as the "account"). There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually amounts to be equal to the estimated revenue derived under title II of this act. On the twentieth day of the month succeeding the month in which this act is enacted, and on the twentieth day of each calendar month thereafter, there shall be credited to the account an amount equal to the amount of revenue to be collected under the provisions of such title as indicated by the returns filed during the preceding calendar month. Such amounts shall be available for making the payments as hereinafter provided. The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of the appropriations to be credited to the account.

SEC. 302. Amounts estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury to be necessary for monthly expenditures in the administration of this title shall be deducted from amounts credited to the account for each month and all funds not so deducted shall be prorated and paid monthly to the number of annuitants per capita.

QUALIFICATIONS

SEC. 303. Every citizen who is 60 years of age or over shall upon filing an application under oath, be entitled to receive an annuity payable in monthly installments during the remainder of the life of such person.

SEC. 304. Every citizen between the ages of 18 and 60 who is disabled for a period longer than 6 months, every widow who is a citizen and who has the care of one or more children under 18 years of age, shall be entitled to receive an annuity payable in monthly installments so long as their incapacity for employment exists, or so long as they have the care of one or more children under 18 years of age.

SEC. 305. (a) The annuity shall be spent within the confines of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

(b) Each installment of the annuity shall be spent by the annuitant within 30 days after the time of its receipt.

(c) An annuitant shall not engage in any occupation, business, or other activity from which a profit, wage, or other compensation is realized or attempted, except that nothing in this title shall be construed to prohibit an annuitant from collecting interest, rents, or other revenues from his own investments. No annuitants shall support an able-bodied person in idleness except a spouse.

(d) Any annuitant may waive all or any part of his right to an annuity under this title by filing a notice thereof with the Secretary of the Treasury in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. Any such waiver shall not affect the right of any person to apply for an annuity at any time thereafter.

(e) Any sum received by an annuitant which represents the proceeds of a sale of any real property acquired through the use of money received as an annuity under this title shall be expended by the annuitant within 6 months after the receipt of such proceeds of such a sale.

(f) Each annuitant by accepting his annuity agrees to comply with all the provisions of this title and all rules and regulations.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 306. (a) Payments of the amounts due each annuitant under this title shall be made as near the first day of each month as possible.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall furnish application blanks and other necessary forms, etc.

SEC. 307. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury prescribes such rules as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to call upon now existing departments or agencies of the United States to aid in the administration of this title.

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is also empowered to make adjustments with respect to the time in which installments shall be expended in case payments to any person may have been delayed and there is an accumulation of two or more installments.

SEC. 308. The right to receive any payment under this title shall not be transferable or assignable.

PENALTIES

SEC. 309. Whoever in any application or any payment under this title knowingly or willfully makes any false statement of a material fact, or fails or refuses to obey any rule, or regulation, issued by the Secretary of the Treasury under this title, or violates any provisions of this title shall be prosecuted by the United States attorney in the United States district court in the district in which the offense occurred, and, upon conviction, the annuitant shall forfeit each month for the remainder of his life up to one-fourth of the annuity to which he would otherwise be entitled.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. Titles I and II of the Social Security Act, as amended, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 402. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict.

SEC. 403. If any part of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, it shall not affect any other part of this act.

SEC. 404. This act may be cited as the "Business, Employment, and Security Insurance Act."

Burnett, Leo, Co., Inc., 360 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. (1) For National Association of Margarine Manufacturers, $89,927.51. (2) See addendum A [1]—A portion of this sum not definitely ascertainable was for purposes referred to in section 307, Public Law 601 of the Seventy-ninth Congress. The reason for our not being able to specify the exact amount used for so-called lobbying purposes is that we handled advertising generally for the margarine association. Not only is some of our advertising not directed at the affective legislation at all, but individual advertisements may be partially what may be termed "general advertising" and partially an appeal to support the margarine association's position in the legislative matters referred to. (3) See addendum A. (4) None. (5) Generally, legislation favorable to margarine manufacturers; specifically, the Rivers bill (H. R. 2245).

Cortright, Frank W., National Association of Home Builders, suite 1116, 1028 Connecticut Avenue NW., Washington, D. C. (1) Salary, October, November, and December 1948, $4,374.94; per diem, October, November, and December 1948, $644; expenses, travel (general), taxis, entertainment, and meetings, $1,770.88; expenses, travel (meetings and conferences), $737.62. Total, $7,527.44. As indicated upon my registration, I have been advised by counsel that I am not subject to the Lobbying Act. Such registration and this report are therefore filed under protest and merely as a matter of personal precaution in view of the indefiniteness of said act and the lack of judicial interpretation thereof. Neither said registration nor this report in any way are intended to constitute an admission by me that I am subject to the act. The payments reported above as my salary and per diem are for general services as executive vice president of the National Association of Home Builders, and are not dependent upon rendition of services which might be considered lobbying within the meaning of the act. Similarly, expenses reported include substantial amounts for routine association business which could not be regarded as lobbying within the meaning of the act. Expenses reported do not include items of association expense such as travel, secretary's salary, telephone, and rent, which are part of the general administrative budget of the association and do not represent moneys received by me from the association. (2) Paid out in cash to taxis, restaurants, hotels, telephone and telegraph companies, etc. (3) Transportation, telephones, telegrams, tips, etc. (4) News releases are sent to the Associated Press, International News Service, United Press, and other national newspaper wire services by the association for publication in subscriber papers and magazines, some of which releases may contain material deemed to effect legislation directly or indirectly. Neither the association nor I have any means of ascertaining a complete list of the publications utilizing such releases. I also write an article each month for the American Builder, a monthly publication devoted to the interests of the housing industry. The association publishes a weekly news letter called the Washington Letter, and a monthly magazine, the Correlator, containing material of interest to the membership, including information on legislative matters. (5) I am not employed to support or oppose any legislation, but I am the executive vice president of the trade association of the home-building industry. In that capacity it is incumbent upon me to supervise, among other things, the work of the association's legislative department. The function of that department of the association is to follow all legislation affecting the home-building industry; to advise the membership of the association of all such legislation; and to make known to the public and to the Congress the opinion of the membership on all such legislation.

The committee is not proposing or advocating any changes in existing laws. Deponent believes that in the period covered by this quarterly report he has taken no action that comes within the provisions of the Lobbying Act. Deponent believes that of his total compensation for all services rendered to the Committee for Pipe Line Companies, $500 would be a fair apportionment for any services which might be considered to be within the provisions of the Lobbying Act. In the quarter ending December 31, 1948, deponent received from the committee $2,016.20, representing disbursements made in August and September 1948, as follows: For statistical services to S. J. Elder, $325; office furniture and equipment, $1,613.35 to various local dealers; telephone installations, $16.38; map $13.10; postage, telephone, telegraph, etc., $48.37. Deponent has also expended in that quarter $231.60, covering postage, telephone, and miscellaneous items for which he has not been reimbursed. None of the foregoing items, deponent believes, relate to activities within the scope of the Lobbying Act. (2) See (1). (3) See (1). (4) None. (5) No legislation is proposed by Committee for Pipe Line Companies, deponent's employer, and there is no pending legislation which deponent has been called upon to support or oppose.

before, I have introduced representatives of the Chinese Government to newspaper editors, legislators, businessmen, and others, in order that they would learn the truth about China. Also, for the period ending December 31, I have written letters and made speeches as filed with the Department of Justice. (5) Reference is made to my letter of July 1, 1948, which accompanied my registration statement. Also, I intend to urge Congress to pass legislation providing for substantial military help to China to fight communism in order to establish stability in that country. Naturally, as a prerequisite for the work of interesting American capital in Chinese enterprises, but, far more important, as an American citizen, I will do so for the sake of the common world fight against Red fascism.

Hart, Merwin K., National Economic Council, Inc., 7501 Empire State Building, New York, N. Y. (1) Salary, $350; December advance for expenses, $220; total, $570. (2) It is difficult to allocate any money expended by me during the quarter in question to any lobbying activities. However, I spent October 20–22 in Washington at a total cost of $40.95, which included rail and pullman fares, taxis, hotel bill, meals, and miscellaneous. On November 20 I went to Boston to make an address and spent a total of $42.62, which included rail and pullman, plane, hotel bill, meals, and miscellaneous. December 10, I went to Washington for a brief trip and spent $48.62, including rail and pullman, hotel bill, taxis, and miscellaneous. Though I do not believe any of these expenditures are really allocable to any lobbying activity, they are mentioned for what interest they may have. (3) See (2). (4) Economic Council letters. (5) Measures discussed in council letters Nos. 200–205, both inclusive, published during this quarter, and which publications might be considered lobbying, are certain conventions of the ILO which will come before the Senate for ratification this winter, possible appropriations in 1949 for ERP, a general review of certain measures likely to be considered at the coming session of Congress, and the pending controversy over evidence recently produced by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Hart, Stephen H., 350 Equitable Building; National Livestock Tax Committee, Cooper Building, Denver, Colo. (1) During the quarter the National Livestock Tax Committee paid to me a per diem of $50 for office work and $100 out of town for actual time spent in study, advice, conferences, and correspondence concerning general livestock tax questions including the analysis of the present provisions of the Internal Revenue Code and current rulings and decisions concerning Federal taxation of livestock operators. Such activities also included work in connection with proposal of the National Livestock Tax Committee to amend the Internal Revenue Code, recognizing capital gains in sale of breeding livestock and permitting deduction of ordinary recurring ranching expenditures. It is impossible to determine what part of my services related to this problem, but it is my opinion that none of my activity during the preceding quarter could be interpreted as lobbying. During the quarter a total of $510 for legal services was paid to me for all my activities and services. I was also reimbursed $16.39 for out-of-pocket expenses. (2) See (1). (3) See (1). (4) [Blank.] (5) [Blank.]
